The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask whether this is a reservation where the Indians own the land or is it simply a reservation by permission?

UNION IRON WORKS, OF SAN FRANCISCO.

The bill (S. 2399) for the relief of the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy, as recommended by his Department, to remit to the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, Cal., the horsepower penalty imposed under the contract for the armored coast-defense vessel Monterey, and appropriates $32,823 for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report accompanying the bill.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. STEWART January 17, 1898, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2399) "for the relief of the Union Iron Works of San Francisco, Cal.," submit the following report:

This case arises out of the technical failure of the Union Iron Works of San Francisco, Cal., to maintain the horsepower required by their contract for the Monterey during the official trial. The contract requirement was that an indicated horsepower of propelling engines, air pump, and circulating pump engines of 5,400 should be maintained for four consecutive hours. The total horsepower developed by these engines during the trial aforesaid was only 5,071.77, though for an hour and three-quarters the power was maintained above that required, and then fell off, owing to inefficient firing of the boilers. By reason of the deficiency in horsepower of 328.23 a deduction of $32,823 was made from the amount paid the contractors, on the basis, as provided in contract, of $100 per indicated horsepower which the contractor should fall short of the required 5,400.

The evidence shows that this failure to develop the full horsepower during the contract trial was due, not to any lack of power of the engines, which the contractors claim are fully capable of developing the 5,400 horsepower and more, but that such failure was due to inefficient firing and attendance upon the machinery. The Navy Department admits the correctness of this claim. The Bureaus of Construction and Repair, and Steam Engineering, in a joint report on the trial and acceptance of the Monterey, dated February 2, 1893, say:

"From a careful study of the data received from the trial board and the note books of the assistants engaged, we are of the opinion that with proper firing and attendance on the machinery a sustained power of at least 5,400 indicated horsepower can easily be maintained for four hours." * * *

Under the terms of the Monterey contract the Secretary of the Navy had no authority to consider the equities of the contractors, and the full amount of penalty, $32,823, was deducted from their final payments.

The Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, in his annual report dated September 29, 1893 (see pages 438, 439, Annual Report, Secretary of the Navy, 1893), referring to the trial of the Monterey, says:

"That the horsepower was not steadily maintained was due to inefficient firing, the officer who was on duty in the fire room remarking, 'It is my opinion that the firing was not such as to accomplish the best results; there appeared to be little personal interest among the firemen as to success or failure.' The power was maintained above that required for about an hour and three-quarters, and then fell off.

"It is to be noted that the supply of firemen on the Pacific Coast is limited, and few of them have experience with forced draft. There can be no doubt that with men of greater experience the trial would have been a success in every way."

A bill similar to the one now under consideration was introduced during the last session and referred to the Secretary of the Navy for his opinion and recommendation. The Assistant Secretary, Hon. William McAdoo, returned the bill with the following recommendation:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 13, 1897.

"SIR: Referring to the committee's letter of the 16th instant, inclosing a copy of the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WHITE to the naval appropriation bill, authorizing the remission to the Union Iron Works of the horsepower penalty, in the sum of $32,823, imposed under the contract for the construction of the armored coast-defense vessel Monterey and requesting the views of the Department with regard thereto, I have the honor to state that after a careful perusal of the contract for said vessel and of the report dated January 19, 1893, of the board appointed to witness her official trial, the indorsement and recommendation thereon dated February 2, 1893, of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair and Steam Engineering and the decision of February 6 of the then Secretary of the Navy, the whole matter having been settled under the contract prior to the beginning of this Administration, I am convinced that the equities of the contractors are strong, they having evidently endeavored to carry out the requirements of the Department to the fullest extent in the construction of the vessel, and having succeeded, as shown by the reports of the board and the bureaus, in furnishing her with excellent machinery capable of meeting satisfactorily every demand that may be made upon it, and the proposed measure for their relief is therefore recommended to the favorable consideration of the committee."

The bill of the present session now before your committee was referred to the present Secretary of the Navy for his opinion and report, who returned the bill with the following recommendation:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, November 11, 1897.

"SIR: Referring to your letter of the 10th instant, inclosing a bill (S. 2399) for the relief of the Union Iron Works from the penalty imposed under the contract for the construction of the Monterey on account of the failure of that vessel's machinery to develop, on trial, the horsepower required, I have the honor to state that in view of the matters mentioned in the communication addressed by the Department to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, under date of the 18th of February last, a copy of which accompanies your letter, and of the facts stated in the reports therein referred to (copies transmitted therewith), the petition of the contractors for remission of the penalty exacted, as stated above, seems to be founded on equitable considerations.

I concur, therefore, in the Department's previous action recommending this measure to the favorable consideration of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate.

The inclosures of your communication are herewith returned as requested.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
Subcommittee Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

Your committee is satisfied from the evidence, including the findings of the Construction and Steam Engineering Bureaus of the Navy Department, having direct control of the trial and acceptance of the Monterey, that her engines are fully capable of developing the maximum horsepower of 5,400 required by the contract, and that their failure to sustain this maximum horsepower for the full contract period of four hours was a technical failure, due to inefficient attendance.

It would therefore be harsh, inequitable, and oppressive to refuse this application for remission and to punish the contractors for a mere technical failure of the contract requirements, especially as the present Secretary of the Navy and his predecessor have both recommended the remission.

Congress has in all such cases remitted penalties imposed under contracts for Government vessels where it has been shown that the Government has sustained no loss and the contract or was equitably entitled to relief. The following is a list of some of the cases where Congress has granted relief:

Petrel, built by Columbian Iron Works, Baltimore, Md. Penalties amounting to $56,450 remitted by Fifty-first Congress at first session. (See volume 26, page 1308, Statutes at Large.)

Vesuvius, built by William Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia, Pa. Penalties amounting to $39,700 remitted by Fifty-third Congress at second session. (See Statutes at Large, volume 28, page 141.)

Yorktown	$7,575	Built by William Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia, Pa. Penalties amounting to $40,350 remitted by act of March 2, 1895, third session Fifty-third Congress.
Baltimore	7,625
Philadelphia	19,100

Concord and Bennington, built by N. F. Palmer & Co. Penalties remitted by act of March 2, 1895, third session Fifty-third Congress.

In view of the strong equities of the contractors and of the precedents already established in similar cases, your committee agrees with the Secretary of the Navy that the penalties should be remitted, and report the bill favorably with the recommendation that it pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTRA EXPENSES IN CONSTRUCTING THE MONTEREY.

The bill (S. 2398) to pay the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, Cal., for extra work on the Monterey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco $14,742.58 for extra work and expenses in constructing the Monterey, to be in full settlement of the amount claimed by the company.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in the case be read.

The Committee on Claims, having under consideration the bill (S. 2398) "to pay the Union Iron Works of San Francisco, Cal., for extra work on the Monterey," report the same as follows:

The committee finds that during the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. H. A. Herbert, recommended that this claim be paid in the following letter to Congress, which is printed in Senate Document No. 89, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 23, 1897.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, contains the following provision:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to examine claims against the Government which may be presented to him by contractors for the building of the hulls or machinery of naval vessels under contracts completed since January 1, 1891, where it is alleged that such contractors have been subjected to loss and damage through delays in the work under said contracts which were not the fault of said contractors, but were due to the action of the Government, and to report to the next session of Congress the result of said investigation, and whether said claims are, in his opinion, subjects for the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims or for the action of Congress upon the same."

Under authority of this law the Union Iron Works has presented a claim against the Government for loss and damage due to delays alleged to have been caused by the Department in the construction of the armored coast-defense vessel Monterey. A copy of said claim is transmitted herewith, and it will be observed that the grounds for the same are set forth in a letter addressed to the Department by the contractors under date of June 18, 1892, and certain indorsements thereon by the Secretary of the Navy, and a letter dated February 11, 1893, relative thereto, by the Judge-Advocate-General.

The whole amount stated in the claim is $30,839.89, of which $17,339 89 represents actual outlay alleged to be due to the delay caused by the failure of the Department to deliver the armor and its accessories as required by the contract for the construction of the vessel, while the remainder, $13,500, represents interest on the mean deferred payment of $300,000 for nine months at 6 per cent a year, the amounts claimed on account of the several items having been furnished in a statement dated January 30, 1893, after the completion of the vessel.

This claim, unlike those transmitted to the Congress with the Department's letters of the 8th of December last, was, very soon after being presented to the Department, viz, on the 16th of February, 1893, and only ten days after the preliminary acceptance of the Monterey, submitted to a board of naval officers for audit, and said board made its report under date of the 20th of said month (copy inclosed herewith), by which it appears that, in its opinion, the contractors were entitled to reimbursement of the expenses incurred by them on account of the matters mentioned in their letter of the 18th of June, 1892, and that the board found that the Government was fairly and properly indebted to the contractors in the sum of $14,742.58, the difference between this sum and the amount claimed being due to the allowance by the board of smaller sums than were claimed on several of the items, and the disallowance of the $13,500 interest claimed on deferred payments.

The Bureau of Construction and Repair approved said report in its indorsement thereon, dated March 2, 1893 (copy herewith), subject to the Department's decision as to whether the amounts allowed by the board on certain of the items could be paid under the terms of the contract, but the Department, on the 3d of said month, by indorsement (copy herewith), declined to authorize payment of the amount found due by the board on the ground that it was not within its power to do so, in view of the terms of the contract for the construction of the vessel.

Should the contractors be content to accept as settlement in full the amount found by the board above mentioned from its examination of the circumstances of the case, practically at the time of their occurrence, the members of the board, as the board on changes on said vessel during her construction, having been familiar with the matters considered by them, and the Department having, in its indorsement of the 3d of March, 1893, expressed the opinion that the claim was to said extent meritorious, it would seem that such amount might properly be appropriated for payment thereof; but if, as appears from the papers submitted, they claim the entire amount set forth in their itemized statement of January 30, 1893, it is recommended that the whole matter be referred to the Court of Claims for determination.

Very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT, Secretary.

The bill now under consideration (S. 2398) was referred to the present Secretary of the Navy for his opinion, and the following is his reply:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, October 11, 1897.

SIR: The Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 9th instant, inclosing copies of the bill (S. 2398) to pay the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, Cal., for extra work on the Monterey, and of Senate Document No. 89, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, and requesting its recommendation and views in regard to the passage of said bill.

In reply I have to state that it appears from an examination of the matter above mentioned that the amount proposed by the bill in question to be paid to the Union Iron Works on account of extra work and expenses in constructing the U. S. S. Monterey was found by a board duly appointed by this Department to be due said company, and that the report of said board was approved by the Bureau of Construction and Repair; that Mr. Secretary Tracy, in his action of March 3, 1893, upon said report, stated that the items of expense allowed by the board were equitably due the contractors, and that he could not direct their payment because they were not provided for in the contract for the construction of the vessel, and also because the contract time for her completion had already expired and the vessel had been preliminarily accepted, and that in a letter on this subject to the Congress, dated January 23, 1897, Mr. Secretary Herbert stated that should the contractors be content to accept as settlement in full the amount found by the board to be due them, it would seem that such amount might properly be appropriated for the payment of their claim.

In view of all the foregoing, the bill in question is recommended to the favorable consideration of the Committee on Claims.

The inclosures of your communication are herewith returned, as requested by you.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG,
Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

The following clause passed both Houses in the general deficiency bill, H. R. 10329 (Calendar No. 1713), Fifty-fourth Congress, second session:

"For payment in full to the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, the amount found due said company by the Department for extra work and expenses in constructing the Monterey, $14,742.58."

The bill failed to receive the signature of the President, owing to lack of time for its examination before the adjournment of Congress.

Your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. The reason why I wanted the report read was to ascertain in regard to the question of interest. I see the interest was claimed at $13,500, which made the total claim $30,839.89. The board reported in favor of $14,742.58, "the difference between this sum and the amount claimed," which was $30,000, "being due to the allowance by the board of smaller sums than were claimed on several of the items and the disallowance of the $13,500 interest claimed on deferred payments." As I understand, the amount of interest is absolutely excluded.

Mr. PERKINS. So I understand. The amount proposed to be appropriated by the bill is $14,742.58, that "being the amount audited and found due and recommended to be paid to said company by the Secretary of the Navy." It does not include any interest. It is simply for the principal cost of the work done.

Mr. COCKRELL. I so understand the report. I merely wanted to be certain. I did not want to misunderstand it. The question of interest is a very material one, and it is never allowed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 3140) to reimburse the State of Wyoming for money expended by the Territory of Wyoming in protecting and preserving the Yellowstone National Park during the years 1884, 1885, and 1886 was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I observe that the Senator who reported the bill is not present; and as there is no written report accompanying the bill, I ask that it may be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, that will be the order.

CAPT. WILLIAM N. TISDALL.

The bill (S. 399) to provide for promoting Capt. William N. Tisdall, United States Army, now on the retired list, to the rank of major was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in the case be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. HAWLEY January 17, 1898, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, after the consideration of the bill (S. 399) "to provide for promoting Capt. William N. Tisdall, United States Army, now on the retired list, to the rank of major," recommend its passage.

A similar bill (S. 1427) was favorably reported by the committee and passed the Senate in the Fifty-fourth Congress. The report (1202) heretofore made is adopted as a part of this report as follows:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1427) to provide for promoting Capt. William N. Tisdall, United States Army, now on the retired list, to the rank of major, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

"This case is one of unusual hardship. On the eve of promotion to the rank of major, being virtually within two files of that grade, Captain Tisdall was retired for age April 6, 1895. In thirty-six days he would have reached a majority.

"Captain Tisdall's brief presents a striking illustration of the unequal working of the system of regimental promotion, as he was appointed second lieutenant in the Regular Army October 24, 1861; promoted first lieutenant July 2, 1865, and captain January 13, 1869; at the date of retirement being in his thirty-fourth year of continuous service and in his twenty-seventh year as captain. The brief also shows thirty-seven officers (majors and lieutenant-colonels) on the present active list of the infantry corps, all of whom, with the exception of four lieutenant-colonels (who were appointed second lieutenants on the same date he was), entered the service at various periods after he did. His advancement was retarded by this system, as, had promotion been lineal, as it eventually will be by the act of Congress of 1890, he would have been retired with the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

"Several years ago, when Congress was endeavoring to correct this injustice, a list was prepared showing the readjustment by relative rank that would result from the passage of the bill then pending. This list comprised 144 captains of infantry, not taking cognizance of majors and lieutenant-colonels, who had been advanced over their seniors. Upon this list Captain Tisdall stood No. 2.

"Congress has recognized the justice of promoting officers on the retired list by the acts approved September 29 and October 1, 1890. Under the operation of these laws several officers were promoted on the retired list. A few precedents, from the many cited from the Army Register, 1893 (pages 243, 179, 182, 195, 196, respectively), are herewith submitted:

"'Capt. Joseph Conrad, Eleventh Infantry; retired with the rank of colonel, October 23, 1882. (Act August 7, 1882.)'

"'Maj. Lewis Merrill, Seventh Cavalry; retired with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, January 21, 1891. (Act September 27, 1890.)'

"'Capt. George M. Wheeler, Engineer Corps; retired with the rank of major, October 2, 1890. (Act September 27, 1890.) Entered the Army after the close of the late war. (See Senate report No. 923, Fifty-first Congress.)'

"'First Lieut. Thomas W. Lord, Twentieth Infantry; retired with the rank of captain, January 28, 1890. (Act August 11, 1888.)'

"'First Lieut. George W. Kingsbury, Twelfth Infantry; retired with the rank of captain, October 2, 1890. (Act September 27, 1890.)'

"'First Lieut. Henry H. Bellas, Fourth Cavalry; retired with the rank of captain, October 3, 1890. (Act September 27, 1890.) Entered the Army October 1, 1873. No war record.'"

In view of the above facts your committee recommend that the bill be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER BUCKLEY.

The bill (S. 3105) to correct the military record of Peter Buckley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Peter Buckley, late a member of Company E of the Eleventh Regiment of New York Volunteers, and grant to him an honorable discharge.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the word "or," in line 10, I move to insert "pay;" so as to read "without pension, pay, or other allowances."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEDICAL CORPS OF THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 2872) to amend section 1370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the Medical Corps of the Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the section so as to read:

No person shall be appointed assistant surgeon until he has been examined and approved by a board of naval surgeons designated by the Secretary of the Navy, nor who is under 21 or over 30 years of age.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. HALE January 19, 1898, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2872) to amend section 1370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the Medical Corps of the Navy, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back and recommend its passage.

The committee append the views of the Department upon the measure, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 13, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith, for the consideration of the Committee on Naval Affairs, a draft of a bill for the amendment of section 1370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

From the report of the Surgeon-General of the Navy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, it is noted that permits to appear before the naval medical examining board for examination for admission into the Medical Corps of the Navy were issued to 43 candidates, and of the 35 who appeared for examination 8 were rejected physically, 19 professionally, and 9 qualified for admission; and that within the past year the number of vacancies in the corps has increased, there being at the time of making said report 15 vacancies.

In my annual report to the President I commented upon this matter as follows:

"There are 17 vacancies in the Medical Corps, and for these there are practically no candidates who are within the age limit, which is from 21 to 26. With the increase of naval vessels, action should be taken at once to insure the filling of these vacancies. It is strongly recommended that the limit of age for entrance into the Medical Corps of the Navy be raised to 30 years. At 26, the present limit, the graduates of our medical schools, in which the standards of training are steadily rising, are often not yet ready to begin practice. This demand is urgent."

In view of the foregoing, I respectfully recommend that the inclosed bill may receive the favorable consideration of the committee.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not remember whether provision is made in the bill for hiring acting assistant surgeons.

Mr. COCKRELL. No. It merely authorizes the appointment of surgeons between 21 and 30 years of age. It changes the law which now only permits the appointment of surgeons between 21 and 26.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have heard some leading officers of the Navy speak of the necessity of renewing that old class of officers, acting assistant surgeons, employing them from civil life to fill out.

Mr. COCKRELL. They are not acting assistant surgeons. They are contract surgeons, pure and simple.

Mr. HAWLEY. Contract surgeons, then.

Mr. COCKRELL. They must not go under any other designation. They have the right to do that now.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator think so?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think so. Whenever you designate them as acting assistant surgeons, they come in for pensions, pay, allowances, and retirement. Their services are contracted for just like those of any other individual, they are paid full compensation, and they are entitled to nothing after it is over.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL COURTS.

The bill (S. 3011) to authorize the use of depositions before naval courts in certain cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the depositions of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place at which a naval court is ordered to sit, or who are under orders and about to go to such a distance that it is not practicable to secure their personal attendance without incurring great expense or serious loss of time, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before such court in cases not capital.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE F. MILLER.

Mr. KENNEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1773) to amend the military record of George F. Miller.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of War to amend the record of George F. Miller, who enlisted under the name of George F. Young on the 10th day of May, 1861, in Company G, Seventy-first Regiment New York Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT OMAHA MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 192) to provide for the transfer of Fort Omaha Military Reservation to the State of Nebraska was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

BRIDGE ACROSS PORTAGE LAKE, MICHIGAN.

The bill (S. 3154) to amend an act entitled "An act giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across Portage Lake, Houghton County, Mich., between the villages of Houghton and Hancock," approved March 3, 1891, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (S. 3365) relating to the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company to purchase or lease the Belt Railway Company, and the lines of the Maryland and Washington Railway Company in the District of Columbia, and of the Columbia and Maryland Railway Company, organized under the laws of the State of Maryland, and connecting with the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and upon the completion of such purchase or lease to change its name to "The City and Suburban Railway Company."

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the right should be reserved to alter, amend, or repeal the proposed act. I move to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act in whole or in part.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has offered an amendment to the bill, which is pending.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to have the bill go over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under objection from the Senator from South Dakota.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 22, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 21, 1898.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Journal was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD. I am reported in the proceedings of Saturday last as not having voted on the Post-Office appropriation bill. I was in my seat, and voted "no." I desire to be recorded as voting against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the Journal as not voting. Without objection, the correction will be made in the Journal and the RECORD.

The Journal as corrected was approved.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD. I am reported as having said, during the course of the proceedings of Saturday last, "I want to yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OTEY]; but I see he is not here."

I wish to say that Mr. OTEY was present at that time, but stated to me that he did not wish to use so little time as three minutes; consequently he gave the time back to me. I wish to correct my remark so as to read:

I wanted to yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia; but as the gentleman does not wish to use the three minutes, it being so little time, he yields the time back to me.

Mr. HULL. On page 3348 of the RECORD, in a remark of mine as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, I am reported as saying: "The Chair is inclined to sustain it"—that is, the point of order then raised. The word "not" should be inserted, so as to make the language read: "The Chair is not inclined to sustain it."

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD. On page 3328, in the response made by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads [Mr. LOUD] to some remarks which I made here on Saturday, I find the following:

If I had a boy 8 years old that could not solve that problem, I think I would be tempted to drown him for the benefit of coming generations. I do not think it would be beneficial to mankind to have such a fool live.

Mr. Speaker, the correction I wish to have made is to insert the identical language which the gentleman from California used. His phrase was "damned fool." I see the word "damned" has been stricken out of the RECORD; but that was the word which he used in this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks perhaps the matter in the RECORD is just as well as it now stands. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. If my language as it appears is not emphatic enough, I think it ought to be corrected.

Mr. CASTLE. I desire that correction made.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires to correct any expression of his own, the Chair has no doubt the House will permit him to do so.

PONTOON BRIDGE AT PRAIRIE DU CHIEN, WIS.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine obtained the floor.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask the gentleman from Maine to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman's matter lead to any debate?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think not. I do not believe it will occupy more than three minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Very well.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3873) to authorize the relocation and rebuilding of a pontoon bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, Wis.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the railway pontoon bridge across the Mississippi River and an island therein, between Prairie du Chien, Wis., and North McGregor, Iowa, legalized and established by the act of Congress approved June 6, 1874, may be relocated and rebuilt by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, the present owner of the bridge, in accordance with such plans and at such location as may be approved by the Secretary of War and subject to the same limitations and requirements, except as to the changes in structure approved by the Secretary of War, as are provided in the act of Congress approved June 6, 1874, hereinbefore named: Provided, That the length of channel spans of the new structure shall not be less than the length of such spans in the existing bridge.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill which has been recommended by the War Department and approved by the House committee. It merely authorizes a change of location.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS BY THE DESTRUCTION OF THE MAINE.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I call up House bill No. 8618, for the relief of the sufferers by the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine in the harbor of Habana, Cuba.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to offer a resolution before that bill is called up.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think I shall have to insist on the special order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill which the gentleman from Maine calls up.

The bill, with the amendments reported by the committee, was read.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, it is suggested that this bill may be passed without any debate. So far as I am concerned, if members of the House have advised themselves of the nature and provisions of the bill and wish to dispose of it without occupying time in debate, I shall be very glad to have that course pursued. Under the provisions of the special order, as I remember them, the bill is now before the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, so that if any gentleman desires to debate the measure of course it will be his privilege to do so; and I should be glad to make some arrangement for what I hope would be a very limited debate.

But I should be very glad myself to forego even an explanation of the provisions of the bill, which are very clear and plain, if I could feel that members of the House are ready to join with me in speedily passing the bill without one word of discussion. [Applause.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no disposition on this side of the House to debate this particular bill. Such matters as we desire to speak about we are perfectly willing to reserve for the naval appropriation bill. I will say to the gentleman from Maine, however, that there is at least one amendment that I think ought to be made to this bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman permit me right there to say that the bill as now read contains a few amendments which the committee have reported, and which will, of course, be read and acted upon? We are ready to act upon any amendment that may be offered.

Mr. BAILEY. I am perfectly willing that the previous question shall be ordered after I submit an amendment to section 2.

Mr. HOPKINS. You would not want to call the previous question, would you, until the bill is read under the five-minute rule, section by section? Then, if there is no amendment to be made to the sections, the previous question might be ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. My understanding was that it was desired to dispose of it immediately, and without any delay.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think there may be gentlemen on this side who desire to offer amendments. I do not know how that may be, but the order is that we are to consider it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that gentlemen on this side follow the example of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and send their amendments up to the Speaker's desk.

Mr. BAILEY. If there are some amendments to be offered on the other side, I am willing that general debate on the bill shall be closed, and that we proceed under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to reimburse the survivors of the officers and crew of the U. S. S. Maine, destroyed by an explosion in the harbor of Habana, Cuba, on the 15th day of February, 1898, for losses incurred by them, respectively, in the destruction of said vessel, there shall be paid to each of said survivors, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to the losses so sustained by them: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall in all cases require a schedule and affidavit from each person making a claim under this act, such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy; and reimbursement shall be made for such articles of clothing, outfit, and for such personal effects only as are of a character and value and in quantity suitable and appropriate to the rank or rating and duty of the person by whom the claim is made: Provided further, That in no case shall the aggregate sum allowed for such losses exceed the amount of twelve months' sea pay of the grade or rating held by such person at the time the losses were incurred.

The SPEAKER. Is there any amendment to the first section?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. PAYNE. There appears to be an amendment offered by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is an amendment offered by the committee, and that would be first presented to the House. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment proposed by the committee was read, as follows:

Insert in line 20, on page 2, after the word "pay," the words "without rations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] presents an amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. CANNON was read, as follows:

In line 10, page 1, strike out the words "the losses so sustained by them" and insert "twelve months' sea pay, without rations, of the grade or rating held by such person at the time the losses were incurred."

Mr. CANNON. I should like the attention of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] to this amendment. If he did not catch the wording of it, I will ask that it be reported again.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I did not understand the exact purport of it.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] that the object of this amendment is to give one year's sea pay without rations to the officers and men who are survivors. It would cost for the 24 officers an aggregate of $47,800. It would cost for the 70 enlisted men an aggregatte of $18,324. As shown by the statement which I have from the Secretary of the Navy, that is the maximum that they could receive under the bill as reported, and my object in offering this amendment for the consideration of the House is that we give to these survivors the absolute year's sea pay without asking them to file a list of their losses. I do it from a sense of duty.

We passed a bill somewhat similar to this to indemnify the officers and men at the time of the Samoan disaster. I have in my hand a letter from the Auditor for the Navy Department, which reads as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 17, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to hand you herewith a list of the claims allowed by the accounting officers under the act of February 19, 1890, for losses sustained by the officers and men of the U. S. S. Trenton, Vandalia, and the stranding of the Nipsic at the Samoan Islands, March 16, 1889. It appears that the officers did not apply for the allowance under section 200 of the Revised Statutes, but most of the men did and were paid the amount claimed, under section 288 of the Revised Statutes. In addition they were allowed for losses under the act of February 19, 1890.

You will observe that the amount allowed in nearly all the claims was equal to or nearly one year's sea pay of the rank or grade of the claimants.

Very respectfully,

JOHN M. EWING, Acting Auditor.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment; yes.

Mr. SAYERS. Will not the gentleman state to the House that under that act of Congress indemnifying the sufferers at Samoa the grossest frauds were perpetrated upon the Treasury?

Mr. CANNON. I want to say in reply to that that no man can examine the papers that were filed by the claimants under the Samoan disaster act without saying that that clause of the Lord's Prayer was an eminently proper and great one, having a complete knowledge of human nature, when He taught us to pray, "Lead us not into temptation."

Now, when you say that a schedule shall be filed by the officers and men under this act, as under that act, it is equivalent to saying that they will get substantially a year's sea pay. Once in a while one will not, from some reason or other, and it is not claimed but that one should be upon all fours with another—that those who do not should be upon a footing with those who do.

And now, while we act with a generous sympathy, in accord with the sympathy throughout the country, to the stricken men and officers who are survivors of the Maine disaster, let us not put even the shadow of temptation in the way of anybody, but while we are doing a generous thing and an apt thing, let us give them, as this amendment proposes, the full year's sea pay without rations.

It comes to that substantially, and let us do away with attorneys and delay, and let us do practically and directly to-day what it would take us three months to do, and which, I fear, in some instances would lead to a stretching, perhaps, of conscience, or at least would place temptation there.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I very much sympathize with the effort to make every matter of this kind certain; but the bill as it stands, I discover, provides that this allowance shall in no case exceed twelve months' pay.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, it occurs to me that under the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the Government will be compelled to pay the twelve months' pay whether that be more or less than the loss.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Whereas under the bill as it comes from the committee, if a man's losses amount to less than a year's pay, the Government would only pay him what his losses actually were, and so the bill is a saving over the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Well, practically not; but I want to say this——

Mr. BAILEY. Now, I want to ask the gentleman one other question.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman tell the House whether the allowances under the Samoan disaster exceeded what they would have been if that bill had adopted his policy and allowed a year's pay?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They only averaged $249 apiece.

Mr. BAILEY. What would a year's pay have averaged?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. A great deal more.

Mr. CANNON. Very slightly more, says the Auditor in this letter. I want to say to the gentleman that in my judgment the papers in the Samoan disaster show that Congress ought not to put temptation in the way of people to magnify claims. Therefore, to treat all alike, my proposition is to give them a year's sea pay absolutely.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, as it is manifest that the bill is to be debated, I ask unanimous consent that I may briefly state the provisions of the bill and the considerations which led to their presentation. I will be very brief, but I should like a little beyond five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires unanimous consent of the House to make a statement in the nature of general debate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, on the 19th of February I received a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, requesting that a resolution might be adopted by the House extending the allotments made by certain persons on board the steamer Maine in favor of their families and dependents at home. My committee deemed it to be wise, and that it would form a proper response to manifest public sentiment, for us to frame a measure that should combine the extension of these allotments, which affected only about thirty of these people, with a general measure of relief to reimburse the survivors for their losses and to provide a relief fund for the surviving immediate relatives of those who were hurled into eternity by that great disaster.

In performing that duty the first question that confronted us was whether the Government ought to do anything for these dependents and these survivors. We answered that unhesitatingly in the affirmative. The next question with us was how much or how far in that direction we should go; and the answer seemed to be as clear—at least as much as the Government has ever done in recognizing sufferers by similar disasters; and so we turned to the precedents of the Congress and found a line of enactments extending back many years, and following substantially the same provisions which were adopted in the case of Samoan disaster, as the last of the instances, provided for reimbursing the survivors, because the survivors are still kept in the service and are still on pay.

For the wounded or injured, they are cared for by the service, and all that they have ever asked, all that they will ask to-day, is to be reimbursed for the actual losses of effects that they have sustained by this disaster. In regard to the measure of relief of the families and other immediate relatives we felt that they should be dealt with as liberally as on former occasions which have arisen, not of the magnitude of this calamity, and so we prepared a bill on the line of the bill enacted in the case of the Samoan disaster.

We shortly learned, while engaged in the preparation of the bill, that there had arisen certain disputes and that certain claims had been presented which had been regarded by the Treasury officers as of a questionable character under the Samoan Act. The Samoan Act was very liberal, and might be criticised on other lines. It provided that the accounting officers of the Treasury shall require a certificate and affidavit from each person making a claim under the act, and there was no other limitation beyond that, except that it should not exceed twelve months' pay.

Under that a number of claims were filed by the men for losses, some of which were distrusted more or less by Treasury officials, and some of them were questioned and referred to a tribunal and tried by the Court of Claims. It was held by the court that under the wording of the act it was mandatory to pay for all losses that were recited in this certificate to which the affidavit was made. Now, the committee thought that they would strengthen the act in that regard. We felt that we had no right to bring in here and subject to discussion the nature of things that had occurred in regard to the former act that might reflect forward a shadow upon the possible integrity of the people to be relieved under this law.

But our committee, looking to what would be required to be done, and looking at the victims of the disaster as entitled to a liberal and a generous treatment of a great Government, thought we should quietly put into our bill such safeguards as we believed would absolutely secure the interests of the public Treasury, and remove any influence to what my friend from Illinois has referred to as temptation, and we provided it in these words.

Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall in all cases require a schedule and affidavit from each person making a claim under this act, such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy; and reimbursement shall be made for such articles of clothing, outfit, and for such personal effects only as are of a character and value and in quantity suitable and appropriate to the rank or rating and duty of the person by whom the claim is made.

Mr. HOPKINS. Would it disturb the gentleman to be interrupted there? Now, as I understand, the victims of the Samoan disaster, many of them, owing to the action of the accounting officers of the Treasury, were compelled to go into the Court of Claims to get this bounty that was intended for them by Congress, and were thereby compelled to pay out sums of money that they think were unjustly exacted from them. Is this bill so drawn that we will not have a repetition of that?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will answer that in a word. It is. There was only one case that went to the Court of Claims, and that is not the line in which this bill is drawn.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to ask the gentleman one question—why one limitation has been placed in this bill. I notice, in section 2, that you provide that wherever the widow——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We are now considering section 1. We have not reached the other yet.

Mr. RAY of New York. I beg your pardon. Then I will call attention to it when we reach that section.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. When we had put this provision in and we had drawn that, with the other sections of the bill, I undertook to get this bill before the House. We thought it ought to pass as speedily as possible. But at that time an appropriation bill was pending in the House—I think it was the sundry civil bill—and it was impossible for us, as a matter of course, to get recognition while that bill held the floor; and I consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] in my desire to obtain a day to pass the bill.

The gentleman objected giving that permission on several grounds. Among them was the ground that he had not had time to examine the bill, which of course he was afforded. He then objected that this bill was unnecessary, because there was a general law, to which he called my attention, and to which my attention had been previously called, of course, which he thought would supply all the needed legislation.

There was an act passed in 1895, to which my attention had never been called until quite recently, evidently for the purpose of providing against the occurrences that came up under the Samoan act, but which proved to be very loosely drawn. It did not supply the place of the measure we have reported, because, in the first place, it was confined absolutely to the reimbursement for personal effects, and provided no relief whatever to the relatives or dependents of the dead.

It also had this other provision to which my committee strongly objected as being applied to this case, that the accounting officers of the Treasury should investigate and determine the amount of losses; that the Secretary of the Navy thereupon should report to Congress at its next session, which in this case would be next December, and the amount of such losses Congress should then appropriate for, if it saw fit, the sufferers in the meantime going without relief.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That is how not to do it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We did not think that would fit this case and would not be what Congress would desire to have done.

There was another provision in the bill which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] thought would cover this case, which I did not agree to, and that was the provision in the statute that the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as are required by the United States naval regulations in force at the time of such loss or destruction.

I knew that the United States naval regulations, which is a compilation as specific as the Revised Statutes of the United States, do not provide for anything except the uniform clothes of the officers of the Navy; they do not pretend to prescribe the various articles of clothing which an officer of the Navy, or any other citizen, requires, for traveling or journeying, or on shipboard. I knew that the provision would not suffice under the strict application of it. These men could not be reimbursed for actual losses; they could not be reimbursed for outside clothing that they were entitled to have, because the naval regulations are confined to the uniform suits.

A naval officer is a gentleman, a citizen of the United States; he is expected to go on shore otherwise than on duty, and he is prohibited by the regulations of the Navy from visiting the shore or leaving his ship under certain conditions in uniform, or, if wearing uniform at certain places, he has, as a rule, an outfit of citizen's clothes. I think the Government of the United States and the House of Representatives, if we are going to reimburse these men, want to reimburse them for the clothing they properly had with them, and so we did not think that act would suffice.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] also objected that the Government was not properly guarded under this bill; that there was liability that lists might be made out in excess of what these men were entitled to receive, and therefore objected to the bill. Now he comes here and makes a sweeping proposition to grant a great deal more than the committee asks, and a great deal more than any claimant has asked or is likely to ask. These men are not asking a bonus, and they will not ask a bonus. They will ask Congress to give them an opportunity to be reimbursed.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman from Maine permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Yes.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I understand, according to the terms of your bill, the officers have to furnish a schedule or an affidavit, and you vest in the Secretary of the Navy judicial power to ignore this affidavit and schedule and pay them nothing.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, no, no.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. You vest in the Secretary of the Navy judicial power——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We vest in the Secretary of the Navy just the same authority that we do in regard to other payments on account of the Navy Department. It is simply the power to visé the lists or accounts.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. If the Secretary of the Navy does not see fit to give it his approval, the officer or the seaman, notwithstanding the affidavit, can not be paid.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They could not. It is not to be conceived, it is beyond conception, that the Secretary of the Navy will refuse to approve any list that these men properly make out.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Why, then, provide for the approval by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Because the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] and other gentlemen are insisting that this other law was loose, and that there were claims made before for articles regarded in excess of what was proper to provide for. In other words, it enables the Secretary of the Navy, instead of the accounting officers of the Department, to say what class of articles are suitable and ought to be included in the list for reimbursement by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The gentleman says that the Secretary of the Navy will not exercise the power. Then why give it to him?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman is a lawyer, I presume?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I have read law.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I was about to say that all governments and all judicial proceedings are and must be based upon the presumption that a public officer is inclined to perform his duties in a reasonable and respectable way.

The jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Navy would extend just this far: If some officer or sailor should include in his claim some article manifestly improper for him to have or manifestly improper as a subject for reimbursement, an article which he had no business to have on board the ship, or if he should ask reimbursement for a list of articles absurdly in excess of his possible or reasonable use, the suggestion would be made to him that he revise his list in accordance with the proprieties of the case.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. Can the gentleman tell the House what is the highest salary drawn by any of the surviving officers or crew?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Captain Sigsbee receives $4,500.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, under the amendment, without any question as to how much property he had lost, that officer would receive $4,500.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Unquestionably. My committee did not think that was the proper thing to ask or grant.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, will the gentleman be good enough to tell the House what was the largest allowance made to any officer for losses arising out of the Samoan disaster?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have not at hand the figures to enable me to answer with precise accuracy.

Mr. BAILEY. I would suppose it reasonably certain that no man received as much as $4,500.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Not at all. I think the largest amount paid under the Samoan bill was something like $2,000, and very few received that much.

Mr. BARROWS. I should like to ask whether any distinction is made in this bill between citizens of the United States and aliens who were on this vessel?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. All who were on the vessel are assumed to have been citizens of the United States.

Mr. BARROWS. They were not all citizens of the United States in fact, were they?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Any man who was blown up on an American ship under our flag is enough of an American citizen to be recognized by this Government.

Mr. BARROWS. I observe in the second section——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope the gentleman will confine his remarks to the first section, which is now under consideration.

Mr. BARROWS. I want to show that there is a difference in the wording of the first and second sections.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They relate to different things entirely.

Mr. BARROWS. In the first section the language is, "That to reimburse the survivors of the officers and crew." Then in the second section the language reads, "officers, enlisted men, and others."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. One section provides for reimbursement for losses; the other section makes provision for the families of those who lost their lives.

Mr. BARROWS. I am speaking, however, of the persons included under the two sections.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. One section provides for the living; the other for the dead.

Mr. BARROWS. But the first section refers to "the officers and crew;" the second section refers to "officers, enlisted men, and others."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman raises no material distinction.

Mr. BARROWS. Were there not some servants on board that vessel?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They were probably enlisted men; they must be.

Mr. BARROWS. I only wondered why the two sections should use different phraseology in this respect.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The terms to which the gentleman refers cover the same classes. One or another clause of this bill covers everybody on board the ship.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hasten on as rapidly as I can, for I do not want to detain the House.

Under the Samoan act 646 claimants were settled with. There were on the lost vessels 850 officers and men who would be entitled to indemnity under that act. It will thus be seen that 204 of the enlisted men have not yet been settled with; or, rather, have not yet made application. Some few applications, I think, are pending; but there are about 200 of those men who have never made application at all.

Now, in drawing this bill it never occurred to the committee, and it never occurred even to me, that it would be appropriate to seek any temporary applause for liberality by coming in here and asking twelve months' sea pay as reimbursement for officers or men, when such a measure would carry $4,500 for the commanding officer while he would be receiving $4,500 a year as his regular salary. I do not apprehend that Captain Sigsbee would ever dream of asking or expecting the Government to do that. When I was drafting this bill, which I intended to be just and liberal and generous to those men, such a thing never occurred to me, even with all my sympathies for that gallant officer, Richard Wainwright, the executive officer of the Maine, as that he would want me to ask that he be permitted to draw from the Government $2,800 without regard to whether his actual losses reached that amount or not.

Every bill of this kind that has ever been passed has been based upon the idea of making good the losses of the men in the disaster. And that is what we have tried to do here. But for objections and criticisms which have been leveled at this bill—every one proceeding on the line of its being too loose, allowing too much latitude for the expenditure of money, or for the Government being taken advantage of—I would have had the bill before the House three weeks ago. I now bring it here as we have prepared it; and I have explained, so far as this section is concerned.

I am as devoid of pride of opinion about the phraseology of this bill as I could possibly be about anything under the sun. I think I manifested that when I offered to submit it to the unbiased judgment of this House without a word of debate. I want this relief to be granted. I want these allotments that have been stopped under the law to be paid to the widows and mothers and children. I want the relief given that is being demanded by the people of this country in public meetings, by the raising of subscriptions, by the holding of benefit performances to supply something for the subsistence of the wives and children of these men, some of whom have never been given the privilege of Christian burial, because their shattered and torn remains have never been rescued from the fragments of that ill-fated ship. I want relief to go to them. I want it to go promptly. I want it to go ungrudgingly, and I hope that this House will grant it in that spirit.

Under the Samoan act, when all those ships met with that disaster, the Government up to date has paid out $161,000. Does any man begrudge it? Is there a citizen of this country who would make it one dollar less? Is the Congress of the United States inclined to haggle about meeting this crisis as liberally and as generously?

Twelve months' sea pay of all the people on board of the Maine at the time of her disaster, who were connected with her, would amount to a little over $161,000. My committee thought the Government could afford to pay the whole of that, if needed. This bill will not carry the whole of that amount. These officers and men can be settled with liberally and generously for their losses, and that is all they ask. The year's pay can be granted to the people to whom these gallant sailors would have asked their country to send it if they had known they were going to die.

Yet we shall be well within the limits I have stated. Now, if the House desires to change the phraseology of this bill, if the House desires to grant a year's sea pay to the survivors in addition to their pay, which goes on, under the name of reimbursing them for losses, why of course I shall not object to it, but that was not what this bill purported to be, and it was not for that purpose that it was brought into the House. I do not know that I care to say anything more about section 1. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I should like, I think, not over five minutes; but if so, I shall crave the indulgence of the House. I should not have taken the time of the committee further had it not been that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has seen proper to pay his respects to me as a Representative. That is his privilege. He has seen proper to detail matters of conversation between himself and myself as Representatives. That is his privilege.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman pardon me for one moment right there?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The statements that I made here today I informed the gentleman from Illinois weeks ago I should be constrained to make, to advise the public why I had not brought this bill before the House before.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. The gentleman has gone a step further, and has seen proper, directly and indirectly, to criticise my position. I am responsible for my position as a Representative to my constituency and to the general public sentiment of the country. If I merit confidence from those I represent, that is as far as I can go. God has not endowed me nor any other man that walks the earth with the ability to merit the approbation of the gentleman from Maine. [Laughter.] There is but one man who merits that approbation, and that is the gentleman from Maine himself. [Laughter.]

Now, so much for that.

If I can have the attention of the House for a brief space, I will tell the House what I think about this whole matter.

Prior to 1890, section 288 and section 290 of the Revised Statutes gave to each officer and man, in case of naval disaster, a month's sea pay to reimburse him for losses. That was all the legislation that had ever been had up to the Samoan disaster. That wonderful disaster known as the Samoan disaster came, and Congress, with the great, sympathetic heart of the country touched, thought proper to legislate and make special provision for the people who lost their personal effects, and the survivors of those who lost their lives in that disaster.

We did so. We gave not exceeding a year's pay to each man and officer for personal belongings. Now, that was creditable to the United States. It was creditable to the country. What happened under that Samoan act? Many enlisted men took a month's sea pay and took substantially the maximum or a year's sea pay besides. How? That law provided that the claimant should make out a list of his belongings and file it with the Treasury.

The Treasury had no discretion. Well, now, what was the result? I read you the letter of the Auditor a little while ago, and I have the list here. The Auditor's letter states that the claimants substantially took up to the maximum. Now, substantially did they lose to the maximum? Some did, and some did not. Why, I hold in my hand here a letter that I will not read to the House, which I will not put upon the record. Gentleman can see it.

It is a letter from a blacksmith on the Nipsic, written to a shipmate, which the shipmate never received, and which was sent back to the United States consul, the shipmate dying in foreign waters, in which letter the blacksmith said in substance, omitting the objectionable parts, that he did not lose anything and was not going to make any claim, but he found it was in the air, and that he went to work and made a claim substantially for $740 or $750, congratulating himself upon his Yankee shrewdness. He says that in ten days he got it, and after a month he found there was $50 more, up to his sea pay, and he filed a supplemental claim, and he got that.

Then he went on to tell how he got $800 for another shipmate, and got $100 as compensation therefor, and congratulated himself that he had cut some shyster lawyer out of that $100. Well, now, this letter was sent back to the State Department and the State Department filed it with the officers of the Treasury. I went down and looked through those claims. Let me call your attention to how this runs.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Are we not proceeding under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. We are.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman has certainly occupied more than five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the time of the gentleman has just expired, and the Chair was about to inform the gentleman from Illinois of that fact.

Mr. CANNON. I should like the indulgence of the House.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed for five minutes longer.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will be very brief, but I should like——

Mr. LOVE. I ask that the gentleman be allowed to proceed.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. To conclude his remarks.

Mr. BRUMM. We do not want our day taken up by this other matter.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I will be exceedingly brief.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Now, the Auditor states that, in the main, the claimants in the Samoan disaster took up to the maximum. What was the value of a seaman's outfit under the regulation? Sixty-six dollars! Well, now, Americans, Chinamen, and others in various positions on those vessels took up to the maximum. Take the case of Ah Fat. His pay was $540 a year; and on his schedule, and which was the only evidence, he received $440.

Take Ah Jim. His pay was $480, and his claim for personal belongings, which was allowed, was $415. Take Ah Foo. His pay was $300, and his personal belongings under the schedule, which was allowed, amounted to $300. So I might run clear through.

Now, I am not abusing these claimants. Let me tell you who is responsible for that. Let me tell you who is responsible for the action of this man Earle, whose letter I have here, which I will not spread upon the record. That legislation which said for their personal belongings they should have not exceeding a year's sea pay was a temptation to every claimant. I am not saying that they are better or worse than you or I would be. Once in a while one did not claim, and he did not get it. Once in a while one claimed a much smaller amount, and he only got what he claimed. But where the claim was made and the schedule was filed, they got it.

Now, when we discovered that, I thought it was my duty, having voted for the Samoan act, not again to enact anything that was similar. That was all. If I do it a second time, then a second time, and knowingly, I place temptation in the way of men; and after consultation with the accounting officers of the Treasury, measuring my words, I have no doubt that this legislation, if enacted as reported from that committee, will substantially give a year's sea pay to the claimants. Now, if we want to do that, well and good. Let us do it, but let us do it by giving the year's sea pay absolutely, and not going through the form of whipping around the stump.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The same men would have got even more than they did get if the year's pay had been awarded them in the case of the Samoan disaster.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all. Earle got his full year's pay, and took a second inventory for it.

Mr. HILBORN. Is not he the only man who did it?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. HILBORN. How many others are there?

Mr. CANNON. Here is the list. Many of them got it.

Mr. HILBORN. How many men besides that one?

Mr. CANNON. Why, Ah Fat got $300. Ah Sin got $299, or within $1 of it.

Mr. HILBORN. But are there more than a dozen of the whole crew?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; the rule is that they got it, substantially.

Mr. HILBORN. Oh, no; that is not so.

Mr. CANNON. Then you and the Auditor of the Treasury Department for it. I have just read his letter, and it will go into the RECORD. Now, then, I am telling you what I think, gentlemen, happened; but I am not here saying that it will be done. When the Samoan disaster happened; these abuses begot legislation. What was it? That in disaster and losses the officers and men should be paid for their personal belongings, but under the Naval Regulations.

That is the law to-day; and as to the Tallapoosa and Kearsarge, I believe, and others, where there were mishaps, indemnity was given under that law. Now, the gentleman said it is not liberal enough. If that is so, let us make it more liberal; and I do not propose, as the gentleman supposes, to measure my corn in his half bushel, for effect, but I propose in good faith to do as it seems to me right to do, directly that which we are indirectly doing by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Do you think that these men, the survivors or those provided for in this bill, are men whose personal belongings will amount to a year's sea pay?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, my judgment is that they will not.

Mr. SIMS. Do you think it dishonesty, if they claim that?

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to accuse anybody of dishonesty. I say this—I say, as shown in the Samoan disaster, that when you allow claimants to state the amount, they having the knowledge and substantially the only knowledge of their personal belongings, there is a temptation to make the claim up to what the compensation might be; and in the case of the Samoan disaster, if any man will examine the records, he will see that in the main they did substantially pursue that course.

Mr. SIMS. That they did act dishonestly.

Mr. STEELE. They are no purer than the Methodist Book Concern.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am afraid that in talking about this subject in the way the gentleman is doing he is not just to the victims of the Maine disaster.

Mr. CANNON. I propose to do justice to them; and I am going to vote for this bill and to vote for it from the standpoint of sympathy—public sympathy and my own sympathy. I am for giving these survivors the equivalent of a year's sea pay, but I want to give it without a statement from the survivors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I only wish to say that I am sorry the gentleman did not put his views in a little more delicate and fortunate language. I suggest to the gentleman that from his remarks it would look like his assent came a little grudgingly.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all. I grudge nothing. I am only performing my duty as a Representative.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. You are assuming, however, that these survivors of the disaster will be dishonest?

Mr. CANNON. I am not assuming that. I say I would not place temptation before men by legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Your position, as indicated by your remarks, seems to be that you would give them the limit of the amount that they could steal. I think it a little unfortunate that the gentleman in his remarks resorts to this sort of logic.

Mr. CANNON. I am assuming nothing. I am speaking here in harmony with the project of giving these men relief.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I would prefer that you did it in kinder words.

Mr. CANNON. I am not at heart or otherwise, directly or indirectly, seeking to impugn the motives or honor or honesty of any man living, but I am speaking as a practical legislator of what seems to me to be the proper course.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am very glad to hear the gentleman make that general statement, and I hope the public will take it in connection with his other statements.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask that we may have order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, when my attention was called to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, I was inclined to support it, upon the theory that it rendered the allowance to the survivors of this unfortunate disaster certain. I knew something about the scandal of the Samoan affair, and I thought it desirable to avoid a repetition of that, if such a disgraceful thing could be repeated in this country. But on examining the bill itself it seems to me that the bill is more desirable than the amendment, because the bill itself limits the allowance to a year's pay, still leaving the question of loss to be settled according to the value of articles which have been lost.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois proposes to remove all temptation from these survivors by allowing them more out of the Treasury than any one of them would probably ask. I have long believed that the best part of the Lord's prayer is that which says: "Lead us not into temptation;" but I would hardly ask for our people to be saved from temptation by giving the honest more than the dishonest could ask.

The gentleman removes the temptation to dishonesty by giving the honest ones even more than the dishonest ones would claim. Now, personally that might be a very good way to deal with a question of this kind, but dealing with it as a public servant, and dispensing, as we do, the public funds, it seems to me the establishing of a bad principle. We intend to reimburse the survivors for their losses. Now, do not allow them to speculate on their misfortune by allowing every one of them to take from the Treasury more than they would be willing to certify that they had lost.

The captain of this ill-fated man-of-war draws $4,500 a year. Under the provisions of this amendment he would draw $4,500 to reimburse him for the loss he has sustained. Yet I venture to say that under the most liberal account which the captain of the Maine will file against the Government his losses will not aggregate one-half of $4,500. It seems to me preferable that we should leave these men to specify under proper limitation their losses, that the Navy Department shall inspect the lists which they have filed, and allow their losses, and no more.

That some of them will file lists embracing articles they did not lose, that some of them will probably give fictitious prices to articles which they did lose, no doubt will be true, because, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says, this is the weakness of human nature. But I venture to say that very few of the survivors of that disaster will attempt to speculate upon the generosity of the Government [applause], and I desire to say now that if there is any man commissioned to defend the American flag who would abuse the generosity of the Government, the sooner you can tear our uniform from him the better it will be for the security of this nation. [Applause.]

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, during the debate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] broadly said that those who claimed as survivors of the Samoan disaster presented their claims for all they had authority to claim. I challenged that statement, and he reiterated what he said. I hold in my hand a statement prepared by the officers of the Navy Department, which I will read:

Mullen, commander, salary $3,000, claimed $1,834.60; Hawley, lieutenant, salary $2,600, claimed $793.25; Derr, surgeon, salary $2,800, claimed $127; Corwine, past assistant paymaster, salary $2,000, claimed $391.50; Shearman, lieutenant, salary $2,000, claimed $23.50; Purcell, ensign, salary $1,400, claimed nothing; Brown, pay clerk, salary $1,000, claimed $439.25; White, ensign, salary $1,400, claimed nothing; Davenport, lieutenant, pay $2,600, claimed $250; Jones, ensign, pay $1,200, claimed nothing; Field, ensign, pay $1,200, claimed $58.50; Frick, past assistant engineer, pay $2,200, claimed $394.40; Hall, chief engineer, pay $2,800, claimed nothing; Fillette, first lieutenant, pay $1,650, claimed $503.

Now, that is all the officers, and those are their salaries and what they claimed.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend from California allow me? He does not want to do an injustice?

Mr. HILBORN. Certainly not.

Mr. CANNON. The Auditor states that there are over 250 that have not filed claims; that many of them are still filing their claims, and that there are many undisposed of. The gentleman has said that those are all the officers. There are three sets of officers. Here are a few in another set: Carlin, lieutenant, pay $2,600, amount allowed, $2,300.24; Wilson, lieutenant, pay $2,600, allowed, $2,142; Gibbons, ensign, pay $1,400, allowed, $1,400.

Mr. HILBORN. Oh, of course there were some of them that were allowed the full amount or near it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman said that was all of the officers. Now, then, I stand here upon the information comprised in the letter of the Auditor of the Treasury Department which gives the full record and which verifies my statement.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of this bill, but it seems to me the discussion has developed the unwisdom of the first section of the bill. I will not discuss the Samoan scandal, but will say that as the result of the experience of the Government in connection with naval disasters there was crystallized into law by the act of March 2, 1895, a measure which it was thought would rid us of trouble in connection with claims of seamen and officers shipwrecked at sea.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman allow me at this point?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Of course the gentleman is familiar with the fact, I presume, that under the adjudication of the courts it was decided that that act did not permit an officer to recover for anything except what was prescribed in the United States naval regulations in force at the time of the disaster, and the United States naval regulations do not provide for personal effects of officers which are absolutely necessary, except their uniforms.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was about to state the law the gentleman has cited. As a result of experience, Congress thought it wise to limit the payment to losses on account of clothing and other effects to which officers and seamen are entitled under naval regulations, and of the value ascertained at the time of the disaster.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There is no such provision——

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no doubt the gentleman is more familiar with this question than I am, but having had something to do with the preparation of the act, and understanding as I do that both the Navy and Treasury Departments approved of the act of March 2, 1895——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It does not so show anywhere.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). I supposed that was a settlement of the whole matter, so that if an American man-of-war should thereafter be wrecked the officers and seamen would have the benefit of the general statute, to which they could at once apply without coming to Congress for relief by special act, as had been the custom. I will not offer any amendment to the first section of the bill. I believe, however, that this particular class of losses should be left to the provision of the general law. I would amend the general law only in one respect so far as it relates to the disaster which occurred in the harbor of Habana. I would appropriate a sufficient amount of money to pay the losses at once instead of requiring the claimants to wait until the next session of Congress.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman recognizes that as a serious objection to putting this case under that act?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do. I would make a sufficient appropriation so that the claimants could go at once to the Treasury and get their money without waiting until the next session of Congress.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They could not do so under the general law.

Mr. DOCKERY. I admit that an immediate appropriation is necessary; otherwise the claimants would have to wait until the next session of Congress in order to secure their allowances. The act of March 2, 1895, requires audited claims of this character to be certified to Congress for "consideration." In that respect I would amend the act so as to allow claimants the benefit of their audited allowances without the delays incident to the operation of the law.

But I had hoped my friend from Maine would consent that the first section of this bill be stricken out, so as to allow the general law to apply, carrying, however, in this bill a provision that the appropriation be made immediately available. Then, with one or two amendments to the second section, I think the bill would be entitled to hearty and favorable consideration. I shall support the bill as reported, even though it should not be amended as I have suggested.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it necessary to make any argument in this House to excuse the judgment of the Committee on Naval Affairs in assuming that such a phenomenal disaster as that which shocked the civilized world a few weeks ago in the harbor of Habana is entitled to be considered in a special way on its merits by the Congress of the United States; and when I superadd to that the admission of the gentleman from Missouri that the general statute to which he refers would not furnish the people relief until some time next year, and the further fact that the general statute itself applies only to one portion of the objects contemplated by the bill, I think we are fully justified in bringing the measure here, as we have done, in accordance with the uniform precedents of the Government.

Of course I ought to be grateful, and I shall try to be duly so, for the knowledge that has come to me so tardily, that all the delays to which this bill has been subjected while resting in my hands by the gentleman from Illinois has been due to a desire on his part to get up something more generous toward these people than I had designed. I recognize that very fully, but at the same time it seems to me that the greatest generosity we can show is to act on this measure with as little debate as possible and allow these people to get the benefit of this act as soon as may be.

There are some men—and we must be indulgent, because we are all human—there are some men so constituted that they would make a point of order on a funeral procession if they could not be permitted to drive the hearse. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the first section.

Mr. COUSINS obtained the floor.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I claim the floor for five minutes. The other side has occupied an hour and a half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS] has been recognized.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, whether this measure shall prevail, either in the form in which it has come from the committee or in the form as proposed in the amendment, it is both appropriate and just; but hardly is it mentionable in contemplation of the great calamity to which it appertains. It will be an incidental legislative footnote to a page of history that shall be open to the eyes of this Republic and of the world for all time to come. No human speech can add anything to the silent gratitude, the speechless reverence, already given by a great and grateful nation to its dead defenders and to their living kin. No act of Congress providing for their needs can ke a restmaitution for their sacrifice. Human nature does, in human ways, its best, and still feels deep in debt.

Expressions of condolence have come from every country and from every clime, and every nerve of steel and ocean cable has carried on electric breath the sweetest, tenderest words of sympathy for that gallant crew who manned the Maine. But no human recompense can reach them. Humanity and time remain their everlasting debtors.

It was a brave and strong and splendid crew. They were a part of the blood and bone and sinew of our land. Two of them were from my native State of Iowa. Some were only recently at the United States Naval Academy, where they had so often heard the morning and the evening salutation to the flag—that flag which had been interwoven with the dearest memories of their lives, that had colored all their friendships with the lasting blue of true fidelity. But whether they came from naval school or civil life, from one State or another, they called each other comrade—that gem of human language which sometimes means but a little less than love and a little more than friendship, that gentle salutation of the human heart which lives in all the languages of man, that winds and turns and runs through all the joys and sorrows of the human race, through deed and thought and dream, through song and toil and battlefield.

No foe had ever challenged them. The world can never know how brave they were. They never knew defeat; they never shall. While at their posts of duty sleep lured them into the abyss; then death unlocked their slumbering eyes but for an instant to behold its dreadful carnival, most of them just when life was full of hope and all its tides were at their highest, grandest flow; just when the early sunbeams were falling on the steeps of fame and flooding all life's landscape far out into the dreamy, distant horizon; just at that age when all the nymphs were making diadems and garlands, waving laurel wreaths before the eyes of young and eager nature—just then, when death seemed most unnatural.

Hovering above the dark waters of that mysterious harbor of Habana, the black-winged vulture watches for the dead, while over it and over all there is the eagle's piercing eye sternly watching for the truth. [Applause.]

Whether the appropriation carried by this resolution shall be ultimately charged to fate or to some foe shall soon appear. Meanwhile a patient and a patriotic people, enlightened by the lessons of our history, remembering the woes of war, both to the vanquished and victorious, are ready for the truth and ready for their duty.

The tumult and the shouting dies—
The captains and the kings depart—
Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forgot—lest we forget.

[Loud and long-continued applause.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the beautiful words which fell from the lips of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS] will touch the hearts of all Americans who love liberty. They admonish us, the representatives of a great people, that we have a sacred duty to perform. This meager recompense to the families of the dead is little more than laying a garland upon the tombs of American heroes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and others who have spoken this morning repeated the words from the Lord's Prayer:

Lead us not into temptation.

There are other words in that beautiful prayer which are specially appropriate for us to contemplate at this time:

Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

It is the will of God that the atrocities which for three years Spanish officials have perpetrated in Cuba shall cease; it is God's will that humanity should prevail throughout the world, and when He created this great Christian Republic He imposed upon it the duty of obeying this admonition. We can not neglect this duty any longer. If we do so, we will lose all of that great prestige which we now enjoy throughout the world, and I very much fear that some disaster may come to punish a people recreant to so sacred a duty. [Applause.]

For three years we have listened to the sound of wails from Cuba. We have had constant repetitions of evidence that Americans and American interests in Cuba have not only failed to receive protection, but they have been treated with abuse and contempt, and we have also received uncontradicted evidence that for two years or more peaceful citizens, men, women, and children, have been driven by Weyler's orders into towns to meet the dreadful fate of death by starvation.

We now have positive evidence that as many as 200,000 peaceful citizens have met this dreadful death.

These people, driven from their homes, corralled, and starved in Spanish towns, are not insurgents, but General Weyler's order states that if caught outside the towns they shall be treated as such, which means they shall be massacred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will confine himself to the topic under discussion.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The bill now under consideration was amended four times in the Committee on Naval Affairs, and five or six amendments to the bill are now pending in the House. This develops the necessity of the special committee provided for in the resolution I introduced at the opening of to-day's session. It is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee, consisting of seven members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Vice-President, and seven members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker, be created to consider the question of our relations with Spain growing out of the Cuban question. That all messages heretofore received or which may hereafter be received from the President referring to this question be referred to said committee. That such committee be authorized to send for persons and papers, to take evidence, and to administer oaths to witnesses. That said committe be authorized to employ a clerk and one assistant, a stenographer and messenger, and that said committee report with as little delay as possible the true conditions which prevail in Cuba, what part of the Spanish debt is a burden to the revenues collected therein, the protection given to Americans and American interests in that island by the Spanish Government, the truth regarding the inhumanities and atrocities which have come to the knowledge of this body through semiofficial and other sources, and any other facts relating to this matter which, in the judgment of the committee, should be considered by Congress.

The committee will, with as little delay as practicable, recommend to Congress what action should be taken by this body. The committee shall have authority to report at any time.

It is very evident that Congress will soon receive communications from the President on the Cuban question, and I think every member of the House will agree that these communications should have calm and dispassionate and prompt consideration.

To accomplish this I think this joint committee of the Senate and House should be immediately appointed to investigate and report upon these important questions.

It is due to Congress and to the country that a committee should investigate and inform the House and Senate accurately upon this subject. We are informed that more than $400,000,000 of bonds have been issued by Spain, the interest and principal depending upon the revenues Spain can draw from Cuba. We are informed that the owners of these bonds are the principal force behind what is called "the conservative policy of the United States," which has prevented action on the part of this Government. The truth or falsity of these statements should be investigated and made known to Congress and to the country.

Let the committee be appointed; let us throw off the lethargy which has so long characterized Congress; let us, the representatives of a great people, realize our duty to Christianity and humanity, and let us proclaim our purpose in tones of thunder which will resound throughout the world.

It is my earnest hope that Spain will not force war upon us, but the action of that Government may finally create a condition making it necessary for Congress to act and say whether or not this condition is one of war.

The rules of the House provide that all proposed legislation—relating to the military establishment and public defense shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

That legislation referring—to the relations of the United States with foreign nations shall be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Therefore each committee might claim that matters which refer to the impending controversy with Spain might be referred to either committee.

The joint committee from the Senate and House which I propose could act with the utmost promptitude, and prompt action might be a matter of great importance.

On June 1, 1812, the President's message recommending a declaration of war was received by the House. It was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It was reported back to the House by Mr. Calhoun on June 3, 1812.

On June 18 the House received notice that the Senate had passed the bill, entitled:

An act declaring war between Great Britain and her dependencies and the United States and their Territories.

The House passed the bill the same day, and it was immediately approved by the President.

With regard to the Mexican war I find the following:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 27, 1846.

Mr. Haralson, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (No. 145) to authorize the President of the United States, under certain circumstances therein mentioned, to accept the services of volunteers, and for other purposes; which bill was read a first and second time, and committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

On May 11, 1846, the President's message having been received, the bill was considered, amended, and passed, as follows:

MAY 11, 1846.

"Whereas, by the act of the Republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that Government and the United States:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of America in Congress assembled, That for the purpose of enabling the Government of the United States to prosecute said war to a speedy and successful termination, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ the militia, naval, and military forces of the United States, and to call for and accept the services of any number of volunteers, not exceeding 50,000, who may offer their services, either as cavalry, artillery, infantry, or riflemen, to serve twelve months after they shall have arrived at the place of rendezvous or to the end of the war unless sooner discharged; and that the sum of $10,000,000, out of any moneys in the Treasury or to come into the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect."

It was decided in the affirmative—yeas 123, nays 67.

On July 15, 1861, Mr. John A. McClernand, of Illinois, then a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and afterwards a major-general of the Army, introduced a resolution:

That this House hereby pledges itself to vote for any amount of money and any number of men which may be necessary to insure a speedy, etc.

This was, I believe, regarded as a resolution recognizing the existence of war. I also believe the Declaration of Independence was recognized as the act of the Colonial Congress, which gave the world to understand that war existed between the Colonies and Great Britain, though war had actually existed from April 19, 1775, the date of the battles of Lexington and Concord.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that debate on this section be closed.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to modify my amendment, and hope we may have a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can ask for the previous question at any time. The Clerk will report the amendment as now offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 1, after the word "to," in line 10, and insert in lieu thereof the words "twelve months' sea pay, without rations, of the grade or rating held by such person at the time the losses were incurred."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. With the view to expediting the action on this bill, as other business is waiting, I ask unanimous consent that any gentleman who desires to offer an amendment to the bill send it up and let it be voted on without further debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that all amendments hereafter offered be voted upon without debate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman also asks that any amendment to be offered be sent up. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I move to amend section 2.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read section 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the widow, child, or children, and in case there be not such, that the parent or parents, and if there be no parent, the brothers and sisters of the officers, enlisted men, and others who were lost in the destruction of said vessel, or who have died within one year from date of the disaster in consequence of injuries received in the destruction of said vessel, shall be entitled to and shall receive out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to wit, the relative, in the order named, of the persons heretofore referred to, a sum equal to twelve months' sea pay of the grade or rating of each person deceased as aforesaid: Provided, That the legal representatives of the deceased persons hereinbefore referred to shall also be paid from the Treasury of the United States any arrears of pay due the deceased at the time of their death.

The following amendments were recommended by the committee:

In line 5, after the word "died," insert the words "or who may die."

In line 15, after the word "death," insert the following:

"Provided further, That if any person who shall receive reimbursement under this act for losses incurred in said disaster shall die within the year in consequence of injuries incurred in the destruction of said vessel, the amount so paid shall be deducted from the amount of twelve months' sea pay (without rations) allowed to such beneficiary by virtue of this act of relief."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, unless a separate vote is desired, the Chair will put the question on the two amendments of the committee which have been reported to the House.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment, to insert the word "dependent" before the word "parent," in line 2, of page 2, and also to insert the word "dependent" before "brothers," in line 3, section 2.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

In page 2, line 2, before the word "parent," insert the word "dependent;" and in line 3, before the word "brothers," insert the word "dependent."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That will embarrass the operations——

Mr. LOUD. Oh, well, if we are going to have debate on this, we must have it on both sides.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Thank you.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BAILEY; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not like to have a division on a question of this kind, but we must have it on that. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 106.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. BAILEY was rejected.

Mr. LOUD. I move to strike out, on page 2, section 2, line 2, after the word "parents," the words "and if there be no parents, the brothers and sisters."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The bill follows all precedent.

Mr. LOUD. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "parents," strike out the words "and if there be no parents, the brothers and sisters."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BAILEY) there were—ayes 58, noes 97.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the amendment at the bottom of page 2 been voted upon?

The SPEAKER. That has been adopted by the House. If there is no further amendment to section 2, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to continue for a period of three months any allotments which may have been made in favor of any relatives of the degrees hereinbefore enumerated by any of the officers and men attached to the U. S. S. Maine who lost their lives in or in consequence of the disaster to that vessel: Provided, That the amount of the allotments so continued shall be deducted from the amount of twelve months' sea pay allowed to such beneficiaries by virtue of this act for their relief.

SEC. 4. That the relief granted by the provisions of this act shall be deemed and taken to be in full compensation for and in satisfaction of any and all claims whatsoever on account of losses or death by the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine on the part of the beneficiaries hereinbefore designated, except as to any rights of pension under existing law; and the methods of presenting and establishing said claims hereinbefore prescribed shall be followed in lieu of those prescribed by the acts or parts of acts heretofore enacted relating to the presentation of similar claims.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It is moved by the committee to strike out all that has been read of section 4, and insert.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, of section 4, and insert the following:

That the relief granted by the provisions of this act shall be in full satisfaction of any and all claims whatever on account of losses or death by the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine; and any claim which shall be presented and acted upon under the authority of this act shall be held to be finally determined and shall not in any manner thereafter be reopened, reconsidered, supplemented, nor be subject to appeal in any form; and the method of presenting and establishing said claims hereinbefore presented shall be followed in lieu of those prescribed by acts or parts of acts heretofore enacted relating to the presentation and allowance of similar claims: Provided, That nothing herein shall affect the right of any of the beneficiaries under this act to any pension to which they may be entitled under existing law after the expiration of one year from said 15th day of February, 1898.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. HANDY to the amendment was read, as follows:

Insert in line 12, page 4, after the word "whatever," the words "against the United States."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. On behalf of the committee, that amendment is accepted.

Mr. CANNON. Is that on the amendment to the amendment?

The SPEAKER. It proposes to amend the portion proposed to be inserted, in lieu of what is proposed to be stricken out. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Delaware.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 12, after the word "whatever," insert the words "against the United States."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANDY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment, to make that amendment consistent.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, page 4, after the word "claim," insert the words "against the United States."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONTESTED ELECTION—RICHARD A. WISE AGAINST WILLIAM A. YOUNG.

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the report from the Committee on Elections No. 3 in the contested-election case of Richard A. Wise against William A. Young. I also wish to say that it is agreed by the members of the committee that the minority have leave to file their views in ten days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents the report of the committee, the title of which will be read to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contested-election case of Richard A. Wise against William A. Young.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the views of the minority may be filed within ten days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRUMM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I think, Mr. Speaker, unfinished business is next in order. I think there is nothing changing the order of business.

The SPEAKER. This is a special arrangement by the House that bills should be taken up which are reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I think the order was simply that the business from the Committee on Claims should have precedence over business from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, no.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. There is nothing in the order that changes the ordinary order of business, and the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on Friday is only in order after disposing of unfinished business.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa is confusing two orders.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I think not.

Mr. DALZELL. There was an order made on Thursday that Monday be substituted for Friday, even to the extent of the Friday-night session.

Mr. BRUMM. That is correct.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is all very true. There is nothing in the order, however, that changes the order of business.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I understand that there is an unfinished matter, which was passed in the Committee of the Whole, on which the previous question is agreed to be asked for. It will take less time to dispose of it in that way than to discuss it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion?

Mr. BRUMM. No, Mr. Speaker; I am simply saying that I do not desire to antagonize the gentleman's position. It will take more time to do that than to acquiesce in it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the intention of the House was to give alternate Fridays for the consideration of reports from the different committees; but the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The regular order of business would be the unfinished business; that is, the unfinished business of the House, not the unfinished business of the Committee of the Whole. There is one bill that has been acted on in Committee of the Whole and has been put on the Calendar of Unfinished Business, and that is the unfinished business that the rule speaks of. The rule provides, if I quote it correctly, and I think I can, that after the unfinished business shall be disposed of on Friday it shall then be in order to entertain a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. There is nothing that has changed the rule in the order that was made. The order that was made in respect to the two Claims Committees simply assigned each of them a particular day.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me suggest to my friend that any other construction by the Speaker would forbid the possibility of concluding unfinished business on every Friday.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I think there is not a particle of doubt about it.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think there is any doubt about what was the intent of the House when consent was given. I think, so far as I am concerned, gentlemen around me thought that each alternate Friday was to be given to the Committee on Claims; and if the unfinished business were to come over from the War Claims Committee, it could readily take up the whole day of the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. The difficulty about the matter arises from the fact that the language used in the resolution only contemplates two different kinds of private bills which are to be considered by the House and by the committee, namely, those of war claims and other claims of a private nature.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. General claims.

The SPEAKER. General claims. It takes no account of pensions or of bills from the Committee on Military Affairs, and simply provides how these reports shall have precedence. The reports from the Committee on Private Claims shall have precedence on certain days over war claims, and war claims over private claims on certain other days. Hence it must refer to action in committee; otherwise we are in no way enabled to take up pension claims all through the day. That seems to the Chair to be the crucial test, although the first impression was the other way. Therefore the Clerk will report the bills.

CLAIMS REPORTED BY ACCOUNTING OFFICERS.

The Clerk read House bill 1969, a bill for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, which has previously been printed.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STERLING P. AUSTIN.

The next unfinished business was Senate bill 1232, an act for the relief of the heirs of Sterling P. Austin, deceased.

The bill, which has previously been printed, was read by the Clerk.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read a third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. UPDEGRAFF, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. PAYNE in the chair) for the purpose of considering bills reported from the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills reported from the Committee on Claims. The Clerk will report the first bill.

ISAAC P. TICE.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to retry and determine according to law and in equity the case of the administrators of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, against the United States, decided by the Supreme Court at the October term, 1873, and also to try and determine according to law and in equity the claims of said Tice and others for money collected on account of the Tice meters, but not paid over to him or them under the regulations of the Treasury, or based on contract with the United States; and that in said retrial and trials the statute of limitations shall not be available to the United States against the rights and claims of the estate of said Tice and others: Provided, however, That on the retrials or trials of said cases the United States or the claimant or claimants may offer in evidence any evidence given and filed in the prior trial, including the depositions of witnesses now on file in the Court of Claims or on the files of any of the committees of Congress in relation to the aforesaid matter, which may be introduced as evidence in case of the death or disability of the deponents, together with such other material evidence as the United States or the claimant or claimants may wish to introduce; and the court shall render its judgment in favor of the administrators of said Tice, or in favor of the other persons or their estates, for such sums as may be found to be due and unpaid to said Tice or others on any of said accounts; and the amount of money necessary to pay any judgment or judgments that may be so rendered is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided further, That either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the judgment of the said court.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

On line 4, after the word "and," strike out the word "in."
On line 8, after the word "and," strike out the word "in."
On lines 17 and 18 strike out the word "including" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and also."
On line 23, after the word "introduce," insert the following:
"Provided, however, That all such evidence and depositions, allowed as aforesaid, shall be subject to all other legal objections."
Strike out, after the word "accounts," on line 27, the words "and the amount of money necessary to pay any judgment or judgments that may be so rendered is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, the report is quite lengthy, and as my colleague, Mr. GRAFF, made the report, I surrender charge of the time to him.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, the facts of this case are these: Mr. Tice, now deceased, was the patentee of a meter for the purpose of gauging spirits and enabling the Government to collect the revenue tax for the manufacture of spirituous liquors. On March 18, 1867, Congress passed an act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to select and procure proper meters for the purpose of measuring spirits, and he was authorized by this law of 1867 to contract for such meters so selected by him and compel distillers to use these meters.

The facts show that the Tice meter was the best known at that time; that it was an automatic instrument which measured correctly both the proof and the quantity of spirits manufactured; that in pursuance of the act of March 18, 1867, on April 17, 1867, the Secretary of the Treasury entered into a contract with Isaac P. Tice by which he was authorized to manufacture these meters for the use of distillers, and in that contract it was provided that the Secretary of the Treasury could at any time abrogate the contract, and at the time he did so the Government should pay Mr. Tice the price of the meters then on hand, not exceeding twenty in number.

The contract went on until February 3, 1868, when Congress passed a resolution changing the law of 1867 by authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make these contracts instead of the Secretary of the Treasury. Under the contract of 1867, the first contract made, it was provided that instead of the distillers, who were compelled to use the meters, paying Mr. Tice, they were compelled to deposit the price of the meter with the various collectors of internal revenue throughout the United States.

When the resolution of 1868 was passed, changing the party who represented the United States authorized to make the contract from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the provisions of the contract were changed in this respect only in that the price of the meters was to be deposited by the distiller with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue instead of the collectors of the various revenue districts; but the provision remained the same in the contract made in 1868 by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as it did in the contracts of 1867 so far as it appertained to the Government being obliged, when they abrogated the contract, to pay to Tice for the meters then on hand not exceeding twenty.

June 8, 1870, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the authority which he had under the contract, suspended the contract, but continued afterwards to use the meters to some extent. In 1871 he not only suspended the contract, but totally abrogated it, so it ceased to be in operation. After that, in 1873, two years after the final abrogation of the contract, Mr. Tice died. He had his claim in the hands of a well-known New York lawyer, who had in hand the evidence in the claim, but who about this time reached such a mental condition that he was incapable of acting as attorney for the claimant. He was taken to a sanitarium, and in the meantime an administrator was appointed for the estate of Isaac Tice.

The claim was presented in the Court of Claims against the Government by the estate of Tice. At the time this claim was presented the members of the House will remember that the attorney in whose hands the claims were and who had the special knowledge alone was is such a condition that he could give no information as to the proper evidence for the claimant to introduce in the Court of Claims. The widow of Tice did the best she could, and went before the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims held that the act of 1868 repealed the law of 1867 and abrogated the contract made in 1867 and failed to give the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the authority to make a new contract.

In other words, they held that the last contract for meters made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was without authority, and therefore that the estate of Isaac P. Tice had no claim in law to recover a judgment for the meters then on hand. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. I have here both the decision of the Court of Claims and the decision of the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court overruled the decision of the Court of Claims as to the law, holding that the act of 1868, changing the law of 1867, gave to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue full authority to make another contract; that the contract which the Commissioner made, continuing the old contract of 1867, was practically in full effect; but the Supreme Court also held that the showing of the claimants that there were fourteen of the meters in use on the 8th of June, 1871, was not sufficient evidence to enable them to recover a judgment on the contract, because the suspension of the contract in June, 1870, made it obligatory upon the claimants to show that the meters were on hand on the 8th of June, 1870, instead of June 8, 1871.

As will thus be seen, the Supreme Court of the United States held with the claimants so far as their right to recover under the law was concerned, but held also that the evidence was not sufficient to enable them to recover at that time for meters on hand.

The claimants then proceeded before Congress and obtained a favorable report from the Committee on Claims in the Forty-seventh Congress; also the same committee in the Fiftieth, the Fifty-first, the Fifty-fourth, and the Fifty-fifth Congresses reported favorably, and a number of committees in the Senate have also reported favorably on the bill.

The provisions of the bill simply provide for re-referring this case to the Court of Claims, enabling the court not only to decide whether the estate of Isaac P. Tice shall be entitled to damages under these contracts, but also enabling the court to find out who is legally entitled to the moneys now in the hands of the Government which have been collected for these various meters from the distilleries and which have not been disbursed; and also enabling the court, if the evidence should justify it, to give to the estate of Isaac P. Tice, or any others entitled thereto, damages equivalent to the price of the meters on hand June 8, 1870.

The bill also provides that the evidence which was heard before by the Court of Claims may be reheard upon the new trial, subject to all other legal objections. It enables the claimants to go before this court and prove their claim, if they are able to prove it. Those are the facts of the case in a nutshell.

Mr. DINGLEY. This, as I understand, is a claim under a contract?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Therefore the claimant could have brought his suit in the Court of Claims?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. And he has so brought suit?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. And the court has held against him?

Mr. GRAFF. No, sir. The Court of Claims held that the claimants had no legal right under the contract; but the Supreme Court held that the contract was in full force and effect.

Mr. DINGLEY. He did not prove his claim.

Mr. GRAFF. He did not prove his claim, because there was a technical difficulty about proving that the meters were on hand at a certain date. For instance, the fact was established that a certain number of meters were on hand on the 8th of June, 1871, when the contract was finally abrogated; but the Supreme Court held that the claimants would be compelled to show that the meters were on hand on the 8th of June, 1870—a year before. This bill provides by its terms that these claimants shall have only the right to go before the Court of Claims and recover under the provisions of the law as laid down as the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. DINGLEY. What I do not quite understand is this: This being a claim against the Government of the United States under a contract, and the courts being open to the claimant, I do not understand why the court has not determined the claim, and why, there having been an appeal to the Supreme Court, the decision of the Supreme Court has not settled the matter.

Mr. GRAFF. The difficulty was not because of any invalidity in the contract, but because of difficulties placed in the way of the claimants at that time, with Isaac P. Tice just dead, and the attorney who had the papers in his possession being in such a state of mind and body that he could render the claimants no assistance.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there any communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue showing the facts?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir; that is embraced in the report.

Mr. DINGLEY. He raises no question as to the facts?

Mr. GRAFF. No, sir; and so far as the facts are concerned, it will be necessary for the claimants to establish them or they will not be able to recover. So far as the validity of the contract is concerned, that has been already determined by the Supreme Court of the United States.

It went before the Court of Claims just after the death of the claimant himself. The claimant had no relatives except his widow. She was the administratrix of the estate. The lawyer who had charge of her claim had suddenly gotten into such a condition that he had to be taken to a sanitarium, and the papers in the case were not then obtainable by the parties whom she was compelled suddenly to employ for the purpose of attempting to protect her rights. Since that time the lawyer has entirely recovered, and he has now placed in her hands the evidence with which she thinks she can successfully prosecute her claim.

The Supreme Court overruled the decision of the Court of Claims as to the validity of the contract. That was the principal thing in the discussion before the Court of Claims, but the Supreme Court held that the evidence of the claimant, which showed conclusively that there were fourteen meters on hand June 8, 1871, was not sufficient, because they held that while the contract was suspended on June 8, 1870, and abrogated in 1871, the vital question was, What was the number of meters on hand the year previous, on June 8, 1870? Now, this bill provides that this case shall be tried in pursuance of the principles laid down by that Supreme Court decision, and refers to it.

Mr. EVANS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. What was the value of the meters on hand?

Mr. GRAFF. The meters differed in value. They ranged from $500 to $800. I will say further, with regard to the merits of these meters, that they increased the revenues of the Government very materially.

Mr. EVANS. That is a very grave question. They were not regarded as a success.

Mr. GRAFF. I will say that I think the gentleman from Kentucky will admit that meters could not be purchased except by buying the meters. They could not be bribed; and at that time, you know, the internal-revenue laws were not perfected as they are now.

Mr. EVANS. If I understand this bill, it has two objects—first, to have a readjudication of these questions, so far as they grew out of money paid by distillers to the United States for the benefit of the patentee——

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; and money now in the hands of the Government.

Mr. EVANS. Have you any idea how much money that is?

Mr. GRAFF. I can not say.

Mr. EVANS. And then, secondly——

Mr. GRAFF. It is certain that we can not recover any more than we can prove, and the Government has in its own possession what we have not. The Government has, to a cent, an account of every dollar that has ever been paid in which has not been paid out again to Mr. Tice and his representatives.

Mr. EVANS. I was about to say the bill has two objects. First, it gives jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to pass on the questions that grew out of the collection by the United States of money for the benefit of the patentee.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. And then in addition to that——

Mr. GRAFF. The number of meters on hand in pursuance of the contract.

Mr. EVANS. And in addition to that it gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction to try the question, as based on contract with the United States.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Now, if I understand you, the Court of Claims took one view of the contract rights of the parties and the Supreme Court took another.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. But that the patentee has in fact had his day in court.

Mr. GRAFF. He had his day in court——

Mr. EVANS. But by reason of this unavoidable accident to his attorney——

Mr. GRAFF. The claimant had died, and there was no one there except his widow. Her lawyer had been unfortunate, and she was in a position where she could not make the proof.

If no other gentleman desires to ask a question, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the committee.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand this motion covers all the amendments recommended by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The amendments are agreed to. The question now is upon laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HEIRS OF JOHN ROACH, DECEASED.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 628) to pay the heirs of the late John Roach, deceased, $330,151.42 for labor and material, dockage and detention, and occupation of yards and shops for the gunboats Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to carry out the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884 (22 Statutes, page 477), to pay to the legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $330,151.42, for labor and material and dockage furnished by said Roach, and detention and occupation of his yards and shops by the United States for the gunboats Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, which sum is in full and final settlement of all claims and damages between the United States and said legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, growing out of the construction of said vessels.

The Committee on Claims recommended the following amendment:

In line 6, after the word "seventy-seven," insert "the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed."

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I move to substitute the Senate bill, which is identical with this with the exception of the amendment just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. BRUMM. I think I have the right to make that motion. Why does the gentleman object?

Mr. BARTLETT. I exercise my right as a member to object. I do not think this claim ought to be paid, and I am going to exercise all the rights I have to object to it.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Gentlemen have got their claim for Nashville, and they do not care about other honest claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] does not live in Tennessee, or as near Tennessee as the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BARTLETT. And I repel any such insinuation. I have no claim, and if I had, that suggestion is unworthy to be made upon this floor by any gentleman, and I repel it. It is absolutely without foundation and absolutely false. I would not do that.

Mr. BRUMM. I have made the motion to substitute.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman has a right to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The difficulty is whether it is not necessary to dispose of the House bill first.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why not move to postpone the consideration of it?

Mr. BRUMM. I withdraw my former motion and move to postpone the consideration of the House bill.

Mr. COX. Has not the gentleman from Pennsylvania an absolute right to move to substitute the Senate bill in place of the House bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. COX. I mean to move to take it up in lieu of the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill having been called up for consideration, the Chair thinks it must be disposed of.

Mr. BARTLETT. I call for the reading of the report on this bill.

Mr. BRUMM. I move to postpone the consideration of this bill for one week.

Mr. BARTLETT. I rise to a point of order. This bill having been read and being under consideration, I ask that the report of the committee be now read.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a prior motion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] has moved that the consideration of this bill be postponed for one week.

Mr. BRUMM. I will make the motion that it be postponed until one week from next Friday.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRUMM. Now I move that we take up the bill S. 1116.

Mr. BARTLETT. Can that be done except by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes; that can be done.

Mr. BRUMM. You did it in the Methodist book bill case.

Mr. BARTLETT. All right. I had nothing to do with the Methodist book case.

Mr. BRUMM. I am citing the precedent to you.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken, Mr. BARTLETT demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 2.

Mr. BARTLETT. I raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. BARTLETT subsequently withdrew the point.

Accordingly the motion to take up Senate bill 1116 was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to carry out the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884 (22 Statutes, page 477), to pay to the legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $330,151.42 for labor and material and dockage furnished by said Roach and detention and occupation of his yards and shops by the United States for the gunboats Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, which sum is in full and final settlement of all claims and damages between the United States and said legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, growing out of the construction of said vessels.

Mr. MINOR. The gentleman from Missouri is a member of the committee and desires now to submit a statement to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call for the reading of the report, and in doing so to state that, while there is no minority report, the committee is not unanimous in favor of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there is a House bill and a Senate bill. The report of the Senate bill is very brief. Is it that which the gentleman desires to have read, or the report on the House bill?

Mr. ROBB. The report of the House committee.

Mr. BRUMM. I think the House report ought to be read.

Mr. MINOR. The Senate bill is being considered. Is it not proper that the Senate report should be considered with it, and that that report be read to the House instead of the House report?

The CHAIRMAN. Just whatever the gentleman from Missouri calls for in his time. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. MINOR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 628) for the relief of the heirs of the late John Roach, deceased, for labor and material, dockage and detention, and occupation of yards and shops for the gunboats Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

Your committee are of opinion that the facts set forth in Senate Report No. 96, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, are correctly stated, and adopt the same as their report, and recommend that the said bill be amended by adding in line 6, after the word "seventy-seven," the words "the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed," and as amended the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 96, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1116) to pay to the heirs of the late John Roach, deceased, $330,151.42 for labor and material, dockage and detention, and occupation of yards and shops for the gunboats Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, having considered the same, submit the following report:

This claim was favorably reported by the Committee on Claims during the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and passed the Senate during the second session. The report of that Congress (Senate Report No. 754) fully sets forth the facts in the claim, and your committee adopt that report and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 754, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 1181:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred Senate bill 1181, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

John Roach, on the 23d day of July, 1883, entered into three several contracts with the United States, represented by William E. Chandler, Secretary of the Navy, for the construction of three steam cruisers, the Atlanta and Boston, 3,000 tons displacement each, and the Chicago, 4,500 tons, to be completed and ready for inspection and delivery on or before the expiration of eighteen months from the date of said contracts, copies of which are to be found in Senate Executive Document No. 153, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, at pages 144–157.

Under and pursuant to the said contracts John Roach duly and promptly commenced the construction of each of the said three cruisers at the shipyard of the Delaware River Iron Shipbuilding and Engine Works, whereof he was the substantial owner, at Chester, in the State of Pennsylvania, and thereafter, and until the 18th day of July, 1885, faithfully prosecuted the construction of each of the said cruisers according to contract.

The construction of the said cruiser Atlanta had practically been completed before the said 18th day of July, 1885, except the fittings and machinery thereof, and she had on the 17th of November, 1884, been sent to New York to be completed at the shipyard and machine shop owned by John Roach, known as the Morgan Iron Works, in the city of New York, and she was on the said 18th day of July, 1885, in all respects as to machinery and otherwise, nearly completed and ready for delivery.

On that day the cruisers Boston and Chicago were still unfinished at the Chester shipyard, the Boston being much further advanced toward completion than the Chicago.

Each and all of the said cruisers would have been duly and properly completed by John Roach within the time limited by the contracts, to wit, January 23, 1885; but various changes in the plans and in the construction of each of the said cruisers and its machinery and equipments and fittings were made by the United States, and a large amount of extra work was required of the contractor in respect to each of them, which necessarily delayed the completion thereof beyond the said 18th day of July, 1885, without any fault or neglect on the part of John Roach.

The Boston was completed and removed from the shipyard at Chester on August 28, 1886.

The Chicago was completed and removed from the shipyard at Chester June 21, 1887.

ATLANTA.

The time consumed in completing the Atlanta at the Morgan Iron Works by the Government was ten months and twenty-two days (from August 6, 1885, to June 28, 1886). Quintard and Weed, in their affidavits, state that this vessel could and should have been completed in four months, leaving for occupation of premises by Atlanta six months and twenty-two days.

The charge, as made by the executors of John Roach, for occupation by the Atlanta is five months instead of six months and twenty-days.

CHICAGO.

The time consumed in completing the Chicago at the Delaware Iron Shipbuilding and Engine Works by the Government was twenty-two months and fourteen days (from August 6, 1885, to June 21, 1887). Quintard and Weed, in their affidavits, state that this vessel could and should have been completed in seven months, leaving for occupation of premises by the Chicago fifteen months and fourteen days.

The charge, as made by the executors of John Roach, for occupation by the Chicago is thirteen months, instead of fifteen months and twenty-two days.

BOSTON.

The time consumed in completing the Boston at the Delaware Iron Shipbuilding and Engine Works by the Government was twelve months and twenty-two days (from August 6, 1885, to August 28, 1886). Quintard and Weed, in their affidavits, state that this vessel could and should have been completed in four months, leaving for occupation of premises by the Boston eight months and twenty-two days.

The charge of thirteen months for the Boston for occupation of the yard is made because the whole yard was occupied by the Chicago, and by this the expense is divided equally between the two vessels.

On the 30th of June, 1885 (see Annual Report of Secretary of the Navy, December, 1885, page 318), the Attorney-General rendered to the Secretary of the Navy his opinion that the contract with John Roach for the construction of the dispatch boat Dolphin was null and void (although at that date Roach had substantially completed her), on the ground that the contractor was not required by the contract to furnish a speed of 15 knots irrespective of the drawings furnished by the United States; and further, that suit should be brought to recover from him the installments, $315,000, received by him from time to time on the Dolphin.

The gist of this opinion was that he was bound to furnish a certain speed and at the same time to comply with drawings which he neither furnished nor controlled. Because this contract provided relief for the contractor from the speed provisions in case the defect was in the drawings, because the contract did not impose upon the contractor the penalty for the failures of the United States, the Attorney-General thought the contract was void from the beginning.

The promulgation of this opinion on the 12th of July, 1885, impaired and destroyed John Roach's financial credit, and inflicted on him such financial embarrassment that he became unable to continue and complete the cruisers Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago.

And on this account John Roach made an assignment to George W. Quintard and George E. Weed for the benefit of his creditors on the 18th of July, 1885. The works at New York employed 1,500 men, the shipyard at Chester 3,000 men, and the rolling mills and furnaces connected with these works employed 800 men. All of these vast works were closed for over four months by the enforced idleness caused by the action of the Government.

The works at Chester were capable of producing ten large-class steamers per year, or over 28,000 tons per year, and were valued at $1,000,000, and the furnaces alone for making the iron for the ships cost $250,000. (See United States Census Report for 1880.)

The Morgan Iron Works at New York were valued at $702,000, and they were all kept in enforced idleness by the Government.

John Roach died in the city of New York on the 10th day of January, 1887.

The said Quintard and Weed, as assignees as aforesaid, have practically executed and completed the trusts vested in them by the said general assignment, and have heretofore duly transferred and conveyed to the executors the assigned estate of the said John Roach, deceased, including the claim and demand herein set forth, and the executors aforesaid are now the lawful owners and holders thereof.

After the execution of the assignment for the benefit of creditors above mentioned, and on or about the 6th day of August, 1885, the Secretary of the Navy declared each one of the said three contracts forfeited, and declared that the rights of the United States under each of the same, and especially under the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth clauses of each of the said contracts, were operative, and gave notice of their intention in respect to the cruiser referred to therein to proceed to complete the same, and took charge of each of the said three cruisers and their machinery, with the materials and fittings constructed, furnished, or on hand for the purpose of their construction, and required and received from the said John Roach the surrender of the same and of the said two shipyards, and all their appliances and appurtenances, including the entire plant, as well at Chester, in the State of Pennsylvania, as in the city of New York, and all machinery, tools, and appliances appertaining thereto at each of the said places.

From the time of this forfeiture, August 6, 1885, until the 21st of June, 1887, the Morgan Iron Works at New York, its machine shop and wharves, remained under the control and custody of the Government, and the assignees were not allowed to take any other work.

Similarly from the 6th of August, 1885, until the 21st of June, 1887, the shipyard at Chester, with its whole plant, machinery, tools, wharves and dock, and appliances, remained in the custody and control of the United States until June 21, 1887.

But from and after this forfeiture and this declaration that the Government would complete the work, to wit, August 6, 1885, until November 9, 1885, no work was done or attempted by the Government, and no allowance for this delay is included in this bill.

These works were barred from taking any other work, and were conducted and run solely for the benefit of the United States.

By the terms of each of the contracts (clause 13) it was provided that in case the Secretary of the Navy should proceed under the twelfth clause of said contract to complete the work, such procedure should be without unnecessary delay; but, although the said Secretary of the Navy did proceed to complete the work, such procedure was not without unnecessary delay, but, on the contrary, was accompanied by great and unnecessary delay in the completion of said work, caused wholly by the fault of the United States.

On the 10th of November, 1885, Commander Robeson, acting under the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy, received the Dolphin at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, and never again was the destructive opinion of the Attorney-General cited by any officer of the United States either as an exposition of law or as a ground for either action or inaction on the part of the United States. Concerning the general excellence of the Dolphin the Secretary of the Navy said, in his report of November 30, 1889 (pages 6 and 7):

"The record of the Dolphin, which vessel began with a speed of 15.11 knots on her contract trial, and which has recently returned from a cruise around the world, is not less satisfactory. The results of the inspection of the vessel, after she has been three years and nine months in commission, are reported by the board of inspection, under date of October 2, 1889, as follows:

"'The material used in the construction of this vessel and the workmanship speak well for the designers and the builders. Aside from the slight repairs to her bearings, she is ready for another cruise. By the most liberal estimates the work in the construction department can be done inside of a month. This, the first of the new Navy, makes a splendid showing for structural strength, fine material, and good care.'

"Her captain reports that she can average 14 knots an hour for any length of time, and under favorable circumstances she can run 16 at sea.

"In the course of her cruise the Dolphin has run 58,000 miles in twenty months, and has been under steam nine thousand hours. In this prolonged run she has been stopped for repairs but once, and then for only two hours. This performance is probably without a parallel in the history of naval vessels, and bears conclusive testimony to the high skill of American artisans and the excellence of their work. Nor is it the less remarkable, in view of the confident predictions with which, at the outset of her career, the official condemnation of the vessel was somewhat prematurely pronounced by expert and inexpert judges.

"It is therefore proved by the test of actual cruising that the first modern experiments of the Department have come close to the highest standard of speed which had been reached at the date of their design, and that in structural strength, endurance, and workmanship they are not inferior to anything now afloat."

The cruiser Atlanta could and should, without unnecessary delay, have been completed by the United States on the 28th day of January, 1886, but in fact, by reason of the unnecessary delay on the part of the United States in the doing of said work, the same was not finished by the Government nor the cruiser taken from the yard by the Government until the 28th day of June, 1886.

The cruiser Boston could and should, without unnecessary delay, have been completed by the United States on the 1st day of April, 1886, but in fact, by reason of the unnecessary delay on the part of the United States in the doing of said work, the same was not finished by the Government nor the cruiser taken from the yard by the Government until the 28th day of August, 1886.

And the cruiser Chicago could and should, without unnecessary delay, have been completed by the United States on the 20th day of May, 1886, but in fact, by reason of the unnecessary delay on the part of the United States in the doing of said work, the same was not finished by the Government nor the cruiser taken by the Government until the 21st day of June, 1887.

During all of the time of said unnecessary delay the United States kept possession of the shipyard at Chester, which was, at that time, one of the largest and best equipped shipyards in the country, and embraced within it a foundry, machine shop, boiler shop, pattern shop, blacksmith shop, and joiner shop, and all the usual offices, store buildings, riggers' lofts, etc., requisite for a first-class shipyard, and the same was a complete and thoroughly furnished shipyard in every particular, and had the best modern appliances for every branch of its work, and the possession by the Government was absolute and complete during the whole of the time of said unnecessary delay.

The use of the plant and yard at Chester, with its tools, machinery, and equipment, together with the furnace and rolling mill, of which the Government so took and held possession, was worth the sum of $16,505.20 per month, and for the time of said unnecessary delay, to wit, from May 20, 1886, to June 21, 1887, the reasonable value of the use and occupation by the Government was at least the sum of $214,567.60.

The Boston and Chicago occupied the machine shop, boiler shop, plate shop, foundry, joiner shop, wharves, docks, shears, and storehouses, also the use of steam engines and boilers to run the boiler shop, foundry, machine shop, joiner shop, and shears, and coal consumed to run the various engines, engineers included, at Chester, during the unnecessary delay of enforced idleness by the acts of the Government. Seventeen tons of coal were consumed per day by the various engines in the yard.

The plant was one of the largest and best equipped in the United States, and embraced within it a machine shop equipped with the best and most modern appliances and tools that could be bought to build and equip a ship, from the pig iron to the smallest piece of material that is required in their construction. The machine shop was filled with the most costly tools skill could devise to build the engines, with the vast derricks and appliances, which cost hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The shipyard was capable of constructing 8 large ships at one time, with the boilers and engines to run the various tools.

The docking and wharf facilities were sufficient to accommodate 8 ships at a time, with the vast shears and derricks to put the boilers and machinery on board.

There was a large rolling mill near the premises, which was owned by Mr. Roach, where he made the largest steel and iron plates in the world.

At the Chester Works alone there were 18 engines of various sizes running and consuming coal, during the enforced idleness by the Government's not completing these vessels, as follows:

	Engines.
Machine shop	1
Joiner shop	1
Iron and brass foundry	1
Boiler shop	2
Riggers	3
Boat yard	3
Beam shop	1
Portable engines	2
Steamfitter's engine	1
Total	18

The shipyard and machine shop of John Roach, known as the Morgan Iron Works of New York, occupied about one and one-half blocks of land, extending from Avenue D east, to Ninth and Tenth streets, in the city of New York, with certain valuable wharfage privileges on the East River, and there were upon the premises a thoroughly equipped engine and machine shop, with a large forge, having capacity to do the largest work, such as propeller shafts and crank shafts, together with a fully equipped machine shop, boiler shop, pattern shop, foundries, office buildings, and stores, and had all needful conveniences for handling heavy machinery, and the cranes and derricks needful for putting the heaviest machinery into vessels.

The use of the plant and yard at New York, with its tools, machinery, and equipment, of which the Government so took and held possession for the Atlanta, was worth $6,602.08 per month, and for the whole time of said unnecessary delay, to wit, January 28, 1886, to June 28, 1886, the reasonable value of the use and occupation by the Government was at least the sum of $33,010.40.

For the completion of the said cruisers two corps of men were necessarily organized and employed as an office staff, one at the said shipyard at Chester, and one other at the said contractor's yard and machine shop in the city of New York, known as the Morgan Iron Works.

The compensation paid as wages to this corps of men at the said Morgan Iron Works amounted to the sum of $3,721.64 for each month, and for the whole time of the unnecessary delay, to wit, January 28, 1886, to June 28, 1886, $18,608.20.

The compensation paid as wages to the corps of men at Chester amounted to the sum of $4,061.64 for each month, and for the whole time of the unnecessary delay, to wit, May 20, 1886, to June 21, 1887, $32,801.32.

By each of the said contracts it was provided by the eighth clause thereof, which is identical in each of them, that the hull, machinery, and fittings embraced in the contract, and all materials and appliances provided for or to be used in the construction thereof, should be kept duly insured, which insurance should be renewed and increased from time to time by and at the expense of the contractor in an amount sufficient to cover all advance payments made under the contract, the loss, if any, to be stated in the policies as payable to the United States, and the insurance to be effected in such manner and in such companies as should be approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

During the unnecessary delay in completing the said cruiser Atlanta, to wit, from the 28th day of January to the 28th day of June, 1886, the sum of $1,417.50 was paid and expended for such insurance; and that during the unnecessary delay in completing the said cruiser Boston, to wit, from the 28th day of March, 1886, to the 28th day of August, 1886, the sum of $2,588.50 was paid and expended for such insurance; and that during the unnecessary delay in completing the said cruiser Chicago, to wit, from the 20th day of May, 1886, to the 21st day of June, 1887, the sum of $7,157.19 was paid and expended for such insurance.

The said several sums paid for insurance amount in all to $11,163.19, and the said last-mentioned sum was paid by the United States and claimed by it as a proper charge against the said cruisers, and the same was withheld and retained by the United States from the executors upon the settlement of accounts respecting the same as hereinafter mentioned.

No action has been had upon this claim, or upon any part thereof, by Congress or by any of the Departments of the United States Government.

The several claims embraced herein were presented to the Secretary of the Navy upon the settlement of the accounts concerning the three cruisers, Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago, hereinbefore mentioned; but he declined to take any cognizance thereof, or any part of the same, for the reason that he was not, in his judgment, authorized to pass upon or adjudicate such claims, and he settled and adjusted all the other matters in difference save those hereinabove mentioned concerning said accounts without prejudice to the right of the estate of John Roach "to apply for and receive such sum or sums as Congress or other proper tribunal might award or authorize to be paid on account of such claims."

By reason of the facts aforesaid the estate of John Roach has suffered damages as follows, to wit:

For withholding and detention of the said shipyard plant and its appurtenances at New York during the unnecessary delay in completing said cruiser Atlanta, the sum of	$33,010.40
For the amount of wages of the corps of men employed at New York on said last-named cruiser	18,608.20
For the amount of insurance premiums paid during the same delay on said cruiser Atlanta, the sum of	1,417.50
Total	53,036.10
For the withholding and detention aforesaid of the said shipyard plant and appurtenances at Chester during the unnecessary delay in completing the cruisers Boston and Chicago, the sum of	214,567.60
For the amount of wages of the corps of men employed at said Chester on said cruisers last named during said unnecessary delay, the sum of	52,801.32
For the amount of insurance premiums paid during the same delay on said cruisers Boston and Chicago, the sum of	9,745.69
Said last-named three sums amounting to	277,114.61

This outlay of $277,114.61 is divided between the Boston and Chicago as follows:

From the 2d of May, 1886, to the 28th of August, 1886 (three and a quarter months), the monthly expenditures of $16,505.20 for the shipyard and $4,061.64 for the clerical corps were expended on both the Boston and Chicago, and should be apportioned thus:

To the Boston		$33,421.11
To the Chicago		33,421.11
For the remaining nine and three-fourths months, from August 28, 1886, to June 21, 1887, to the Chicago alone, $20,566.84 per month		200,526.69
Three and one-fourth months		33,421.11
Insurance on the Chicago, thirteen months		7,157.19
		241,104.99
Boston	$33,421.11
Boston, insurance	2,588.50
		36,009.61
Total		277,114.60

RÉSUMÉ.

On the Atlanta	53,036.10
On the Boston	36,009.61
On the Chicago	241,104.99
In all	330,150.71

And the United States, under the terms of the several contracts, are lawfully indebted to the estate of John Roach in the several sums hereinbefore mentioned, amounting in all to the sum of $330,150.71.

In August, 1890, a settlement was effected between the assignees of John Roach on the one hand and the Secretary of the Navy on the other of all matters of difference between the parties except the claim of the assignees for the prolonged use of the yards and shops of the contractor, the claim for the necessary outlay for the staff at each yard during the prolonged term, and the insurance for the same period; and the Secretary of the Navy deciding that he was without jurisdiction to pass upon and adjust said matters of difference, it was expressly stipulated that—

"Nothing in this release contained shall be construed to prejudice the right of said assignees or of the estate of the party of the first part to apply for and receive such sum or sums of money as Congress or the Court of Claims or other proper tribunal may award or may authorize to be paid on account of such claims."

The Richmond Locomotive Works, of Richmond, Va., filed a claim in the Navy Department for losses on account of delay, caused by the acts of the Government, in building the engines of the Texas, and the Department has awarded them $80,049.35, which amounted to $157 per day. In this allowance they have allowed $8,740.24 for interest.

The Committee on Naval Affairs have passed on the allowance and recommended an appropriation in the deficiency bill for its payment. The proprietors of the locomotive works filed affidavits in the Department setting forth their loss. (See House Document No. 92, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.)

Wherefore your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Your committee beg leave to submit herewith the memorial of John B. Roach and William F. McPherson, executors, etc., and also the affidavits of George E. Weed and George W. Quintard, to which reference is made in connection with and as a part of this report.

MEMORIAL OF JOHN B. ROACH AND WILLIAM F. M'PHERSON.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of John Baker Roach and William Futhey McPherson, executors of the last will and testament of John Roach, deceased, respectfully represents:

That John Roach, on the 23d day of July, 1883, entered into three several contracts with the United States, represented by William E. Chandler, Secretary of the Navy, for the construction of three steam cruisers to be completed and ready for inspection and delivery on or before the expiration of eighteen months from the date of said contracts, copies of which are to be found in Senate Executive Document No. 153, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, at pages 144 to 157.

These cruisers were named, respectively, the Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago. The Atlanta and Boston were to have a displacement of 3,000 tons and the Chicago a displacement of 4,500 tons.

Under and pursuant to the said contracts John Roach duly and promptly commenced the construction of each of the said three cruisers at the shipyards of the Delaware River Iron Shipbuilding and Engine Works, whereof he was the substantial owner, at Chester, in the State of Pennsylvania, and thereafter and until the 18th day of July, 1885, faithfully prosecuted the construction of each of the said cruisers pursuant to the terms of the several contracts respecting the same.

The construction of the said cruiser Atlanta had practically been completed before the said 18th day of July, 1885, except the fittings and machinery thereof, and she had on the 17th of November, 1884, been sent to New York to be completed at the shipyard and machine shop owned by John Roach, known as the Morgan Iron Works, in the city of New York, and she was on the said 18th day of July, 1885, in all respects, as to machinery and otherwise, nearly completed and ready for delivery.

On that day the cruisers Boston and Chicago were still unfinished at the Chester shipyard, the cruiser Boston being much further advanced toward completion than the cruiser Chicago.

(2) Each and all of the said cruisers would have been duly and properly completed by John Roach within the time limited by the contracts, to wit, January 23, 1885, but various changes in the plans and in the construction of each of the said cruisers, and its machinery and equipments and fittings, were made by the United States, and a large amount of extra work was required of the contractor in respect to each of them, which necessarily delayed the completion thereof beyond the said 18th day of July, 1885, without any fault or neglect on the part of John Roach.

The gist of this opinion was that he was bound to furnish a certain speed and at the same time to comply with drawings which he neither furnished nor controlled. Because this contract provided relief for the contractor from the speed provisions, in case the defect was in the drawings; because the contract did not impose upon the contractor the penalty for the failures of the United States, the Attorney-General thought the contract was void from the beginning.

The promulgation of this opinion on the 12th of July, 1885, impaired and destroyed John Roach's financial credit, and inflicted on him such financial embarrassment that he became unable to continue and complete the cruisers Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago.

(4) On the 18th day of July, 1885, John Roach, who was carrying on business at said Chester, in the State of Pennsylvania, and also in the city of New York, in the State of New York, by reason of said financial embarrassment made a general assignment in due form of law for the benefit of creditors of all of his property and rights to George W. Quintard and George E. Weed, and the said assignment was thereafter duly recorded, and the said Quintard and Weed, as well in the State of New York as in the State of Pennsylvania, were duly and lawfully vested with all the rights and interests of the said John Roach, in and under the said contracts and each of them.

(5) John Roach thereafter, and on the 10th day of January, 1887, died in the city of New York, having by his last will and testament, dated the 20th day of November, 1886, appointed John B. Roach and William F. McPherson and George E. Weed and Garrett Roach executors, and the said will was duly admitted to probate by the surrogate of the city and county of New York, and thereafter, and on the 21st day of June, 1888, said John B. Roach and William F. McPherson duly qualified as executors as aforesaid, and from thenceforward continued to act and are now acting as the only executors of the said last will and testament. George E. Weed did not qualify as such executor, nor has he acted or assumed to act as such, and said Garrett Roach died before the said will was admitted to probate.

(6) The said Quintard and Weed, as assignees as aforesaid, have practically executed and completed the trusts vested in them by the said general assignment, and have heretofore duly transferred and conveyed to your memorialists the assigned estate of the said John Roach, deceased, including the claim and demand set forth in this memorial, and your memorialists, as executors as aforesaid, are now the lawful owners and holders thereof.

(7) After the execution of the assignment for the benefit of creditors above mentioned, and on or about the 6th day of August, 1885, the Secretary of the Navy declared each one of the said three contracts forfeited, and declared that the rights of the United States under each of the same, and especially under the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth clauses of each of the said contracts, were operative and gave notice of their intention in respect to the cruiser referred to therein to proceed to complete the same, and took charge of each of the said three cruisers and their machinery, with the materials and fittings constructed, furnished, or on hand for the purposes of their construction, and required and received from the said John Roach the surrender of the same and of the said two shipyards and all their appliances and appurtenances, including the entire plant, as well at Chester, in the State of Pennsylvania, as in the city of New York, and all machinery, tools, and appliances appertaining thereto at each of said places.

(8) After taking possession of said yard and machine shop at New York, the Secretary of the Navy proceeded to the completion of the work upon the said cruiser Atlanta, and for that purpose took and held possession of the yard, plant, machinery, tools, and appliances appertaining thereto, at said city of New York, until the 28th day of June, 1886.

The Secretary of the Navy, after taking possession as aforesaid, proceeded to the completion of the work upon each of said cruisers Boston and Chicago, and for that purpose took and held possession of said yard, plant, machinery, tools, and appliances appertaining thereto, at said Chester (and said New York City), until the 21st day of June, 1887.

(9) By the terms of each of the contracts, as expressed in the thirteenth clause of each of the same, it was provided that in case the Secretary of the Navy should proceed under the twelfth clause of said contract (which is identical in each of said contracts) to complete the work, such procedure should be without unnecessary delay; but although the said Secretary of the Navy did proceed to complete the work, such procedure was not without unnecessary delay, but, on the contrary, was accompanied by great and unnecessary delay in the completion of said work, caused wholly by the fault of the United States.

On the 10th of November, 1885, Commander Robeson, acting under the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy, received the Dolphin at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, and never again was the destructive opinion of the Attorney-General cited by any officer of the United States, either as an exposition of law or as a ground for either action or inaction on the part of the United States. Concerning the general excellence of the Dolphin, the Secretary of the Navy said, in his report of November 30, 1889 (pages 6 and 7):

The record of the Dolphin, which vessel began with a speed of 15.11 knots on her contract trial, and which has recently returned from a cruise around the world, is not less satisfactory. The results of the inspection of the vessel, after she has been three years and nine months in commission, are reported by the board of inspection, under date of October 2, 1889, as follows:

"The material used in the construction of this vessel and the workmanship speak well for the designers and the builders. Aside from the slight repairs to her bearings, she is ready for another cruise. By the most liberal estimates the work in the construction department can be done inside of a month. This, the first of the new Navy, makes a splendid showing for structural strength, fine material, and good care.

"Her captain reports that she can average 14 knots an hour for any length of time, and, under favorable circumstances, she can run 16 at sea.

"In the course of her cruise the Dolphin has run 58,000 miles in twenty months, and has been under steam nine thousand hours. In this prolonged run she has been stopped for repairs but once, and then for only two hours. This performance is probably without a parallel in the history of naval vessels and bears conclusive testimony to the high skill of American artisans and the excellence of their work. Nor is it the less remarkable in view of the confident predictions with which, at the outset of her career, the official condemnation of the vessel was somewhat prematurely pronounced by expert and inexpert judges.

"It is therefore proved by the test of actual cruising that the first modern experiments of the Department have come close to the highest standard of speed which had been reached at the date of their design, and that in structural strength, endurance, and workmanship they are not inferior to anything now afloat."

(10) Your memorialists are informed and believe that the cruiser Atlanta could and should, without unnecessary delay, have been completed by the United States on or about the 28th day of January, 1886, but that in fact, by reason of the unnecessary delay on the part of the United States in the doing of said work, the same was not finished nor the cruiser taken by the Government until on or about the 28th day of June, 1886.

(11) Your memorialists are informed and believe that the cruiser Boston could and should, without unnecessary delay, have been completed by the United States on or about the 1st day of April, 1886, but that in fact, by reason of the unnecessary delay on the part of the United States in the doing of said work, the same was not finished nor the cruiser taken by the Government until on or about the 28th day of August, 1886.

(12) And, as your memorialists are informed and believe, that the cruiser Chicago could and should, without unnecessary delay, have been completed by the United States on or about the 20th day of May, 1886, but that in fact, by reason of the unnecessary delay on the part of the United States in the doing of said work, the same was not finished nor the cruiser taken by the Government until on or about the 21st day of June, 1887.

(13) During all of the time of said unnecessary delay the United States kept possession of the shipyard at Chester, which was at that time one of the largest and best-equipped shipyards in the country, and embraced within it a foundry, machine shop, boiler shop, pattern shop, blacksmith shop, and joiner shop, and all the usual offices, store buildings, riggers' lofts, etc., requisite for a first-class shipyard, and the same was a complete and thoroughly furnished shipyard in every particular and had the best modern appliances for every branch of its work, and that the possession by the Government was absolute and complete during the whole of the time of said unnecessary delay.

(14) The use of the plant and yard at Chester, with its tools, machinery, and equipment, of which the Government so took and held possession, was worth the sum of $16,505.20 per month, and for the whole time of said unnecessary delay, to wit, from May 20, 1886, to June 21, 1887, the reasonable value of the use and occupation by the Government was at least the sum of $214,567.60.

The Boston and Chicago occupied the machine shop, boiler shop, plate shop, foundry, joiner shop, wharves, docks, shears, and storehouses, also the use of steam engines and boilers to run the boiler shop, foundry, machine shop, joiner shop, and shears, and coal consumed to run the various engines, engineers included, at Chester, during the unnecessary delay of enforced idleness by the acts of the Government.

The plant was one of the largest and best equipped in the United States, and embraced within it a machine shop equipped with the best and most modern appliances and tools that could be bought to build and equip a ship, from the pig iron to the smallest piece of material that is required in their construction. The machine shop was filled with the most costly tools skill could devise to build the engines, with the vast derricks and appliances, which cost hundreds of thousands of dollars.

There was a large foundry equipped with cranes, blast furnaces, ovens, and all appliances to make the largest castings used for constructing the engines and machinery for the vast establishment.

Blacksmith shop with trip hammers, furnaces, and forges of all classes, where the heaviest and lightest forgings were made for the various parts of the engines as well as the hull and rigging of the ships.

The joiner shop, where all the cabins are prepared and completed before they are put together on the ships, were large and commodious and contained many of the most costly woodworking tools in the United States.

In the rigging lofts, where all the rigging for the ships is fitted before it is put on the ships, there were many costly appliances for the various kinds of work of this class.

The pattern shop and mold loft were equipped with all modern devices, so that the molds for the hulls of the ships and the patterns for the engines as well as the hulls could be all made before the vessels were commenced in the shop and shipyard.

The shipyard was capable of constructing eight large ships at one time, with the boilers and engines to run the various tools.

The docking and wharf facilities were sufficient to accommodate eight ships at a time, with the vast shears and derricks to put the boilers and machinery on board.

There were large furnaces in the yard, used for heating the frames and plates; plating and bending machines, used for frames and plating; and a great part of it was covered with buildings fitted with punches, shears, drills, rolls, bending machines of the most modern design, as well as engines and boilers to run the machinery and the various tools.

The storehouses and offices of the works were constantly used by the Government in completing these ships.

The shipyard and all its appliances were complete and of modern design, so that every branch of the work could be done in one yard.

There was a large rolling mill near the premises, which was owned by Mr Roach, where he made the largest steel and iron plates in the world.

All those shops, with all their appliances, were in the possession of the Government during all this time of enforced idleness and delay by the arbitrary and unjust acts of the Navy Department.

At the Chester works alone there were eighteen engines of various sizes running and consuming coal during the enforced idleness by the Government's not completing these vessels, as follows:

	Engines.
Machine shop	1
Joiner shop	1
Iron and brass foundry	1
Boiler shop	2
Riggers	3
Boat yard	3
Beam shop	1
Portable engines	2
Steam-fitter's engines	1

With the usual number of engineers and firemen in charge of the same.

These engines consumed 17 tons of coal per day, or 5,000 tons a year, which amounted to about $25,000 per annum, or over $2,000 per month for coal alone.

The valuation of the shipyard and appurtenances at Chester, by the assignees, was $750,000.

There were 41.08 acres of land, including docks and wharves, in the shipyard alone, or 1,800,000 square feet.

The valuation of the Morgan Iron Works, at New York, and appurtenances, by the assignees, was $702,000.60.

Description.—The United States Census Report of 1880 contained the following description of this establishment of John Roach's works at Chester, Pa., and the number of tons of ships he constructed at his yard per year, as follows:

"At Chester, Pa., there is one large yard, the property of John Roach & Son, of New York. In 1868 the founder of this business, after a long experience as a boiler and machine builder in New York, had bought the Morgan Iron Works of that city, a large establishment at the foot of Ninth street, on the East River, in which most of his machinery has since been built. In 1872 Mr. Roach bought a large property at Chester and developed there a great iron shipyard, his first vessel being launched in 1873. It has always been a busy yard, producing regularly not less than four and sometimes as many as ten large-class steamers a year. The largest American steamships afloat came from these works. The yard itself is the most important one in the United States.

"The plant at Chester is elaborate, complete, and of the very first order, and represents an investment of about $1,000,000. The works cover about 70 acres of ground, and have a front of 2,500 feet on the Delaware River. The river is over a mile wide at this point, with depth enough to float the largest steamer of the present day. Building slips have been substantially constructed on heavy piling, making accommodations for the building of ten large vessels at once, and the docks and wharves have been furnished with shears and hoisting engines for masting vessels and putting aboard the boilers and machinery. A short distance below the shipyard proper, and located on the river bank, are the Chester rolling and steel mills and a blast furnace, the latter with a capacity of 700 tons per week. The furnace alone cost $250,000.

"These works are owned by the proprietors of the shipyard, cover about 30 acres, and employ 800 men; and it is not too much to say that they constitute the best plant in the United States for making plates and armor of iron and steel and steel castings. It is an interesting fact that at these two establishments, owned by one firm, iron and steel ships can be created, beginning with the ore itself and ending with the finished steamer completely equipped for sea. Every part of the work is done by the one firm, and it is believed that this is the only establishment in the world possessing such complete facilities.

"In the ten years from 1873 to 1882, both inclusive, the total tonnage built by John Roach & Son aggregated about 148,000 tons, the average being 14,800 per year; the largest product in any one year 28,190 tons.

"The success of this yard has been due to qualities on the part of its founder which have characterized the leading shipbuilders of America in a marked degree—energy, a fertile mind, and remarkable ingenuity in adapting vessels to the trade in which they were to be employed.

"A special study would be made of the kinds of cargoes carried by the vessels in a particular coasting route, and an idea would be framed of a ship which would carry more of the given varieties of goods on a lighter draft of water and at a faster rate of speed than the vessels already in the trade. This idea would be worked out in a ship in which the builder would take perhaps a quarter interest, in order to show his confidence in it. His operations have been in the main successful, and the two establishments have at times been employed to their full capacity.

"Fifteen hundred men can be employed in the works at New York and about 3,000 at Chester. It is one feature of the operations of the firm that measures are taken to secure willing work from the men. They are encouraged to be inventive by a system of rewards and promotions. Furthermore, the personnel of the shipyard is kept at a high grade of character by the constant recruiting of young men of mechanical education who are fresh from school and are given a chance to go into the yard and rise."

(15) The shipyard and machine shop of John Roach known as the Morgan Iron Works, of New York, occupied about one and a half blocks of land, extending from Avenue D east to Ninth and Tenth streets, in the city of New York, with certain valuable wharfage privileges on the East River, and there were upon the premises a thoroughly equipped engine and machine shop, with a large forge, having capacity to do the largest work, such as propeller shafts and crank shafts, together with a fully equipped machine shop, boiler shop, pattern shop, foundries, office buildings, and stores, and had all needful conveniences for handling heavy machinery, and the cranes and derricks needful for putting the heaviest machinery into vessels.

(16) The use of the plant and yard at New York, with its tools, machinery, and equipment, of which the Government so took and held possession for the Atlanta was worth $6,602.08 per month, and for the whole time of said unnecessary delay, to wit, January 28, 1886, to June 28, 1886, the reasonable value of the use and occupation by the Government was at least the sum of $33,010.40.

(17) As your memorialists are informed and believe, for the completion of the said cruisers, two corps of men were necessarily organized and employed as an office staff, one at the said shipyard at Chester and one other at the said contractor's yard and machine shop in the city of New York, known as the Morgan Iron Works.

The corps of men employed at the said Morgan Iron Works consisted of the following, to wit:

	Per month.
1 general superintendent and draftsman	$400
1 superintendent of machinery	400
1 chief accountant	400
1 assistant accountant	250
1 time clerk	140
1 foreman pattern shop	180
1 foreman boiler maker	220
1 foreman blacksmith	220
1 foreman coppersmith	225
1 foreman joiner	220
1 foreman of riggers and laborers	220
1 draftsman	240
A store man and messenger	87

The compensation paid as wages to this corps of men at the said Morgan Iron Works amounted to the sum of $3,721.64 for each month, and for the whole time of the unnecessary delay, to wit, January 28, 1886, to June 28, 1886, $18,608.20.

At the Chester yard the corps consisted of:

	Per month.
General superintendent	$400
Assistant superintendent	250
Master shipwright	265
Chief accountant	400
Assistant accountant	250
Another assistant accountant	150
Timekeeper	140
A writer	150
Foreman machine shop	220
Foreman blacksmith	220
Foreman coppersmith	220
Foreman carpenter	220
Foreman joiner	220
Foreman mold loft	220
Foreman of riggers and laborers	220
Foreman foundry	220
Foreman boat yard and plate shop	220
Store man and messenger	87

As well as laborers, teams, and all the appliances of the vast establishment and their uses.

The compensation paid as wages to this corps of men at the said Chester works amounted to the sum of $4,061.64 for each month, and for the whole time for the unnecessary delay, to wit, May 20, 1886, to June 21, 1897, $52,801.32.

(18) By reason of the delay in completing the work upon the said cruiser Atlanta the employment of the said corps above mentioned at the New York yard was continued to the 28th day of June, 1886, and for at least five months beyond the time necessary to complete the said Atlanta at said New York shipyard, and the same was charged against and withheld from your memorialists by the United States, the same being claimed by it as a portion of the expense needful for the completion of the said cruiser, and the total outlay so imposed upon the contractor by the United States was the sum of $18,608.20.

(19) By reason of the delay in completing the work upon the said cruisers Boston and Chicago, the employment of the said corps above mentioned at the Chester yard was continued until the 21st day of June, 1887, and for at least thirteen months beyond the time necessary to complete the said Boston and Chicago at said Chester shipyard, and the same was charged against and withheld from your memorialists by the United States, the same being claimed by it as a portion of the expenses needful for the completion of the said cruisers, and the total outlay imposed upon the contractor by the United States was the sum of $52,801.32.

(20) By each of the said contracts it was provided by the eighth clause thereof, which is identical in each of them, that the hull, machinery, and fittings embraced in the contract, and all materials and appliances provided for or to be used in the construction thereof, should be kept duly insured, which insurance should be renewed and increased from time to time by and at the expense of the contractor in an amount sufficient to cover all advance payments made under the contract, the loss, if any, to be stated in the policies as payable to the United States, and the insurance to be effected in such manner and in such companies as should be approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

During the unnecessary delay in completing the said cruiser Atlanta, to wit, from the 28th day of January to the 28th day of June, 1886, the sum of $1,417.50 was paid and expended for such insurance; and that during the unnecessary delay in completing the said cruiser Boston, to wit, from the 28th day of March, 1886, to the 28th day of August, 1886, the sum of $2,588.50 was paid and expended for such insurance; and that during the unnecessary delay in completing the said cruiser Chicago, to wit, from the 20th day of May, 1886, to the 21st day of June, 1887, the sum of $7,157.19 was paid and expended for such insurance.

The said several sums paid for insurance amount in all to $11,163.19, and the said last-mentioned sum was paid by the United States and claimed by it as a proper charge against the said cruisers, and the same was withheld and retained by the United States from your memorialists upon the settlement of accounts respecting the same, as hereinafter mentioned.

(21) No action has been had upon this claim, or upon any part thereof, by Congress or by any of the Departments of the United States Government.

The several claims embraced herein were presented to the Secretary of the Navy upon the settlement of the accounts concerning the three cruisers, Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago, hereinbefore mentioned, but he declined to take any cognizance thereof, or any part of the same, for the reason that he was not, in his judgment, authorized to pass upon or adjudicate such claims; and he settled and adjusted all the other matters in difference, save those hereinabove mentioned concerning said accounts, without prejudice to the right of your memorialists above mentioned, or the estate of the said John Roach, to apply for and receive such sum or sums as Congress or other proper tribunal might award or authorize to be paid on account of such claims.

(22) Your memorialists herein, to wit, the said John B. Roach and William F. McPherson, as executors of the last will and testament of said John Roach, deceased, are the owners of the said claims and the only persons interested therein, and that the said executors became interested therein by virtue of the last will and testament of said John Roach, deceased, hereinbefore mentioned, and of their appointment and qualification as executors and of the assignments aforesaid.

No assignment or transfer of said claims, or of any part thereof, or of any interest therein, has been made except as stated in this memorial.

Your memorialists are justly entitled to the amount herein claimed from the United States after allowing all just credits and offsets.

(23) By reason of the facts aforesaid your memorialists have suffered damages as follows, to wit:

For withholding and detention of the said shipyard plant and its appurtenances at New York during the unnecessary delay in completing said cruiser Atlanta, the sum of	$33,010.40
For the amount of wages of the corps of men employed at New York on said last-named cruiser	18,608.20
For the amount of insurance premiums paid during the same delay on said cruiser Atlanta, the sum of	1,417.50
Total	53,036.10

For the withholding and detention aforesaid of the said shipyard plant and appurtenances at Chester during the unnecessary delay in completing the cruisers Boston and Chicago, the sum of	$214,567.60
For the amount of wages of the corps of men employed at said Chester on said cruisers last named during said unnecessary delay, the sum of	52,801.32
For the amount of insurance premiums paid during the same delay on said cruisers Boston and Chicago, the sum of	9,745.69

This outlay of $277,114.61 is divided between the Boston and Chicago, as follows:

From the 2d of May, 1886, to the 28th of August, 1886 (three and one-fourth months), the monthly expenditures of $16,505.20 for the shipyard and $4,061.64 for the clerical corps was expended on both the Boston and Chicago, and should be apportioned thus:

To the Chicago	33,421.11
For the remaining nine and three-fourths months, from August 28, 1886, to June 21, 1887, to the Chicago alone, $20,566.84 per month	200,526.60
Three and one-fourth months	33,421.11
Insurance on the Chicago, thirteen months	7,157.10
	241,104.99
Boston	$33,421.11
Insurance	2,588.50
Total	277,114.60

RÉSUMÉ.

On the Boston	36,009.61
In all	330,150.70

And your memorialists claim that under the terms of the three several contracts hereinbefore mentioned the United States are lawfully indebted to your memorialists in the several items of damages last mentioned, amounting in all to the sum of $330,150.71.

(24) In August, 1890, a settlement was effected between the assignees of John Roach on the one hand and the Secretary of the Navy on the other, of all matters of differences between the parties except the claim of the assignees for the prolonged use of the yards and shops of the contractor, the claim for the necessary outlay for the staff at each yard during the prolonged term, and the insurance for the same period; and the Secretary of the Navy deciding that he was without jurisdiction to pass upon and adjust said matters of difference, it was expressly stipulated that "nothing in this release contained shall be construed to prejudice the right of said assignees or of the estate of the party of the first part to apply for and receive such sum or sums of money as Congress or the Court of Claims or other proper tribunal may award or may authorize to be paid on account of such claims."

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

Before me, a notary public in and for the city of New York and county of New York, personally came George E. Weed, who, being by me duly sworn, saith:

I have been in the business of engine and ship building for thirty years. I was familiar with the condition of the steel cruisers Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago at the time John Roach made his assignment, and, in my opinion, these vessels could have been completed in much less time and at much less expense than they were.

The Atlanta and Boston were nearly completed when the Government took charge, and, in my judgment, with the facilities that were at the disposal of the Government, these vessels should have been completed in four months each. I have visited the Delaware River Iron Ship Building and Engine Works, where these vessels were under construction, and where the Boston and Chicago were completed, and am very familiar with their extent and capacity as well as their value.

I have also visited the Morgan Iron Works, at the foot of Ninth street, East River, New York City, and in my opinion a fair and reasonable rental for the Morgan Iron Works, with their machinery, wharves, derricks, and appliances, during the years 1885 and 1886, at the time the Atlanta was being completed at said works, was at least $167 per day. In my judgment a similar rental of the Delaware River Iron Ship Building and Engine Works was at least $400 per day during the years the Boston and Chicago were being completed there by the Government, for both vessels.

During the completion of these vessels by the Government there were certain fixed charges which remained the same whether the work was diligently pushed or not. This we would call the permanent staff, and their pay would continue on days when no work was done or when one-third or one-half of the necessary workmen were employed. During the prolonged term for the completion of these vessels, rendered necessary by the delays of the Government, the daily and monthly cost of a staff was incurred at each of the yards and its cost was charged against John Roach. In my judgment, the cost of this organization at the Morgan Iron Works during the prolonged period was $90.19 per day, and at the Delaware River Iron Ship Building and Engine Works it was $98.43 per day.

I have no interest, direct or indirect, in the claim of the executors of John Roach, deceased, against the United States on account of the cruisers Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago.

AFFIDAVIT OF GEORGE W. QUINTARD.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

Before me, a notary public in and for the city and county of New York, personally came George W. Quintard, who, being by me duly sworn, saith:

I have been in the business of constructing engines and building ships for over forty years; for about twenty years I was owner and proprietor of the Morgan Iron Works, on the East River, at the foot of Ninth street, in the city of New York, until they were sold to the late John Roach.

I was familiar with the condition of the steel cruisers Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago at the time John Roach made his assignment, and together with George E. Weed, my coassignee, I supervised their completion by the Government of the United States. In my opinion, these vessels could have been completed in much less time and at much less expense than they were. The Atlanta and Boston were nearly completed when the Government took charge, and in my judgment, with the facilities that were at the disposal of the Government, these vessels should have been completed in four months each. I have visited the Delaware River Iron Ship Building and Engine Works, where these vessels were under construction and where the Boston and Chicago were completed, many times, and am very familiar with their extent and capacity as well as their value.

I am familiar with most of the shipyards in the country and know their value. In my opinion a fair and reasonable rental for the Morgan Iron Works, with their machinery, wharves, derricks, and appliances, during the years 1885 and 1886—at the time the Atlanta was being completed at said works—was at least $167 per day. In my judgment, a similar rental of the Delaware River Iron Ship Building and Engine Works was at least $400 per day during the years the Boston and Chicago were being completed there by the Government, this price being for both vessels.

During the completion of these vessels by the Government there were certain fixed charges which remained the same, whether the work was diligently pushed or not. This we would call the permanent staff, and their pay would continue on days when no work was done or when one-third or one-half of the necessary workmen were employed. [SEAL.] JOE W. SWAINE, Notary Public.

Mr. BRUMM. I have an amendment which I wish to have read and considered pending conforming the Senate bill to the House bill just as it was passed in the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 6, after the word "seven," the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed;" so that it will be "directed to pay to the legal representatives," etc.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I surrender as much time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] as he wishes to consume in reference to this bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I have no knowledge or acquaintance with anybody connected with this bill, and all the information I have is from a thorough investigation of the matter when I was a member of the Committee on Claims. To go into the details as set out in the report would consume much more time than I desire to take, and indeed I do not think it would be of any profit to the House. The whole case can be summed up about this way: When these contracts were made with Mr. Roach to build these several vessels, there was that ironclad statement inside the contracts, usually inserted in all these contracts. Time was required in which to complete the building of the vessel.

Mr. Roach went to work with an immense outlay for his machinery and his yard and the necessary instruments to complete the work (and they were immense), and change after change was made by the Government in altering the construction of these vessels, and not only in executing or carrying out the changes was delay caused, but in making and arranging these changes in the vessels necessary time was consumed. There arose in the country some sort of claim that you older members on the floor will remember, and a kind of scandal grew out of the transaction. The Government seized the man's property, took it into its possession, and proceeded to complete the vessels that he had made a contract to build.

Now, one of the vessels, the Dolphin, though I have not read the report since I made it in a preceding Congress, was completed substantially when they took charge of his work. That vessel, as shown by every naval officer who has spoken of the matter, is probably one of the most successful and best vessels that we have. Her record is not surpassed in naval history. So the whole question worked itself down to this: Should the Government be permitted to take charge of the property of a private citizen in the execution of contracts? Put it as strong as you please. Assume, if you want to, that Mr. Roach had forfeited his contract legally; the only thing the Government had the right to do was to declare the contracts forfeited and proceed upon its obligation to collect from the builder any damage the Government had sustained. I submit that legal proposition to any lawyer who will reflect one moment. But that is not what the Government did.

Mr. ROBB. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. ROBB. Do I understand the gentleman to take the position that in the contracts the Government had for the building of these ships, upon failure of Roach or his representatives to complete the ships within the time specified, the Government was not authorized to take possession of and complete the ships?

Mr. COX. Do I understand the purport of the question to mean that because a man forfeits his contract with the United States, that confers upon the United States the power to confiscate private property without compensation? Is not that the purport of the question? Why, I have said in effect before that because a man forfeits a contract to the United States he does not become an outlaw.

Mr. BRUCKER. I would like to ask the gentleman this question. I have not read the contract, and the report does not give the terms of the contract.

Mr. COX. The contract is a part of the report.

Mr. BRUCKER. The contracts provided, did they not, that in case of forfeiture the Government would have the right to take possession? That is the practice usually between the party and the Government.

Mr. COX. Not so strong as that. If I remember the contract——

Mr. BRUCKER. You are familiar with the terms of the contract.

Mr. COX. I said that I had not read that for two or three years; but suppose you are right. We will never have any trouble about a point when we agree upon it on either assumption. Now, suppose the contract did provide that unless the vessels were completed within a certain time, the Government should have the right to take possession of private property and complete the vessel. Would you, as a lawyer, say that the Government had a right under any contract to seize the property and use it without compensation?

Mr. BRUCKER. I will answer the gentleman's question. I will answer it in this way: I will ask you whether or not you are familiar enough with the terms of the contract to state whether upon forfeiture the Government had the right to take possession of the property for completing the vessels? If the contract is broad enough to give them that right, I would answer your question yes, because that was a part of the contract relations between the parties.

Mr. COX. I understand the gentleman to mean that if A contracts with the Government that unless he does a certain thing, a certain piece of work, at an exact time, the Government may take charge of his property. What does that mean in law? It means the surrender of the property to the Government for the completion of the contract; but does it mean that the Government may seize and take his property without compensation?

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. RIXEY. As I understand, the contract provided that if the shipbuilder, Mr. Roach, was unable to complete these contracts, the Government had the right to take possession of his yard and go on and complete the contract, and then to pay him for building the ships. On the 18th of July, 1885, John Roach made an assignment, and in that way it became apparent that he could not complete the building of the ships.

Mr. COX. That occurred after they took possession of the shipyards.

Mr. BRUMM. After the trouble had arisen and the loss had been sustained.

Mr. RIXEY. Allow me to complete my question.

Mr. COX. Is it a question or is it an argument?

Mr. RIXEY. I am asking you a question. John Roach made an assignment on the 18th of July, and it became apparent that he could not complete these ships. Now, I say it was for the interest of John Roach that the Government should take possession of the shipyard and complete the ships so John Roach could get his money. The contract so provided. Now, I would like to hear from the gentleman from Tennessee whether that is a confiscation of property?

Mr. COX. That would be very well if they had paid Roach for the use of his property,

Mr. RIXEY. They did pay him every dollar of the contract price for building the ships.

Mr. BRUCKER. Did not they give him credit for the contract price of the ships, and charge him with the cost of completing the ships?

Mr. COX. No; that is not it.

Mr. BRUMM. Yes; that is right, in terms.

Mr. COX. One part of it is right, and in the other it is wrong.

Mr. RIXEY. The trouble is that the gentleman [Mr. COX] has not read the facts of the case.

Mr. COX. The trouble with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] is that he does not understand the facts after he does read them. Suppose the Government did seize the works, and suppose they occupied them in completing the ships and then paid Roach for the construction of the vessels the full contract price. That is putting the question of the gentleman from Virginia as strong as it can be. Is not that all you can ask [to Mr. RIXEY]?

Mr. RIXEY. Is not that all anyone can ask?

Mr. COX. They seized the property and kept it beyond a reasonable time in which the ships could be completed.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. RIXEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the seizing of the property. The Government called for a surrender of the property under the contract. Roach surrendered it, and the Government went on and completed these ships and then paid John Roach every dollar of the contract price. This claim is on the Government because the Government did not use expedition in completing the ships, and they claim compensation for the use of the yard longer than the Government ought to have consumed in completing the vessel.

Mr. COX. That is what I said. I ask you if that is true, that they seized the property and completed the ships, if Roach did get the contract price that he was to receive, would you insist that they could hold that man's property for an unnecessary length of time? If they could do it, they could hold it forever.

Mr. BRUMM. They held it seventeen months and ten days.

Mr. COX. Yes, over and above the time the Government contends was necessary for the completion of the vessel.

Mr. RIXEY. What is the evidence that they held the property longer than they ought to have held it?

Mr. COX. You can get the evidence from any naval report that you read. Here it is here; I will hand it to you.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman from Virginia has read it.

Mr. RIXEY. Yes; I have read that letter; I understand it, and the evidence depends on that of two gentlemen who are the assignees of John Roach's estate.

Mr. COX. Oh, no.

Mr. RIXEY (continuing). And in their opinion these ships ought to have been completed in less time, and that is the whole foundation of the claim.

Mr. BRUMM. The ships were complete within about 10 or 12 per cent, and yet the Government took to finish the ships a number of months more than Mr. Roach agreed to build the ships in the beginning.

Mr. RIXEY. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COX. You are taking up my time.

Mr. BURKE. I want to ask the gentleman one question. How long has this claim been pending?

Mr. COX. Ever since the transaction occurred; passed from one Congress to another.

Mr. BURKE. I see it says on page 7 of the report that no action upon this claim has ever been taken by Congress.

Mr. COX. That means that Congress has never voted to allow it. It has passed the Senate two or three times. It has been up every Congress, but the claim was not reached.

Mr. BURKE. What facts are presented to the House, that they should vote away $300,000 upon this claim? I will ask the chairman, in justice to the committee, to state them.

Mr. BRUMM. I propose to do that in my own time. I do not want to take up the time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. I will give way to anybody that can talk so much better than I can. Here is the whole point. You may talk about it from now until to-morrow night, but it will come down to this: The Government seized the property. They took possession of these very valuable works—as the evidence showed, probably no such valuable works in the United States—and when they took possession of the property, if they had completed the ships and turned the property back to the owner of it, there would have been some plausibility in the argument against the allowance of this claim.

The evidence in this case, if gentlemen will examine it, shows that the Government held this property for seventeen months, when there was no necessity for holding it, during the completion of these ships. There is the point in this case.

Mr. RIXEY. That is the very thing that we deny.

Mr. COX. I am not responsible for the gentleman's denial. That is the point I make. The evidence is here.

Mr. LOW. Allow me to make this suggestion: The very moment the Government took charge of that shipyard, it ceased to be a private yard and became a Government yard, the employees working only eight hours a day, while in a private yard they would work ten hours a day.

Mr. BRUCKER. Did not Mr. Roach, when he entered into this contract with the Government, take into view the probability that if he should fail in carrying out his contract, the Government would assume control of the work and that the working time of the employees would be limited to eight hours a day?

Mr. COX. If gentlemen will allow me to occupy the floor a little longer, they can then have it as long as they please.

Now, let me make another supposition—I can not stop to read the evidence: Suppose, when this contract had been made and the specifications filed, the parties agreed that the Government might change the plans of construction, so that the work could not be completed within the time specified in the contract by reason of the delays resulting from these changes. In that case, who was responsible? Mr. Roach? Will any lawyer say that he was? I say the Government was responsible. And when Mr. Roach did substantially complete one of the vessels and turn it over to the Government, there was not a word of complaint about it. That vessel, as I said a moment ago, has proved one of the best vessels we have in the Navy.

I am willing to leave this question with any gentleman who will reflect a moment. I know that some of us are in the habit of getting up here sometimes and fighting these claims. I have been accused of fighting very earnestly for a claim the other day. But I do not mind any charge of that sort. In my view the payment of a claim should depend upon whether it is right or not, I do not care where it may come from. I think the claim bill which we passed the other day was right. I think this claim is right, in whatever view you may take of it. Whatever delay occurred as to completing these ships within the time specified in the contract was because the Government changed the plans of construction; and when delay had thus occurred by an act of the Government itself, it seized this man's property and completed the vessels itself, holding the property seventeen months unnecessarily and without one word of justification.

Mr. BRUCKER. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I notice that the report speaks about——

Mr. COX. Did the gentleman ever read the report?

Mr. BRUCKER. I listened very carefully to the reading of it. I undertook to obtain a copy of the report, but I find that the copies at the document room are exhausted.

The question I was about to ask is this: This report speaks about extra work put upon these vessels. I understand that all of this extra work was settled for, that the assignees were compensated by the Department. Can the gentleman tell us how much the Government paid for that extra work?

Mr. COX. I do not think it will be found that any compensation paid included a single item as to the delay which had been caused by the Government in this matter.

Mr. BRUCKER. That is not my question.

Mr. COX. The gist of this complaint does not lie in that; the important fact is that when the Government took possession of this property it detained it seventeen months unnecessarily.

Now, what does it propose to do? To go back on Mr. Roach and enforce all the penalties against him because of the delay; it is proposed to make him responsible for all that delay. And when some consideration is asked for Mr. Roach on account of the delay which the Government caused, the answer is made that the Government had a right to delay the work as long as it chose. [Applause.]

Mr. BRUCKER. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. COX. I will if I can.

Mr. BRUCKER. The question I asked was this: How much did the Government pay Roach or his assignees over and above the contract price for extra work?

Mr. COX. Suppose they paid him everything that could be claimed?

Mr. BRUCKER. I am asking how much?

Mr. COX. I do not remember. I do not know whether anything was paid.

Mr. RIXEY. The gentleman said just now that the Government had enforced penalties against Mr. Roach.

Mr. COX. It did.

Mr. RIXEY. I should like the gentleman to state when, where, and to what amount.

Mr. COX. Did not the Government enforce the penalty against Mr. Roach when he could not complete the ships in time, and when it took possession of the property?

Mr. BRUMM. Allow me to say that the penalty imposed with reference to the Dolphin is not paid yet.

Mr. RIXEY. Let me say in reply——

Mr. COX. Well, Mr. Chairman, I did believe that I had the floor, but other gentlemen seem to think differently, so I yield to the gentleman from Virginia any time I have left, in order that he may make his own speech.

Mr. BRUMM. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] a member of the committee.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Chairman, in this case I have done something I never did before in my life. I have committed what I have to say to writing. But permit me to say this is a claim that ran over a period of some three or four years and involves several million of dollars. This was an historical case. I think there were very few people in the United States who did not at the time take an interest in what was considered an unfortunate affair, a calamity for this country. By preparing this argument as I have I believed I could give a fairly complete history of the case in a concise manner and preserve a continuity that seems desirable for the purposes of this claim.

I have attempted in collating the evidence here to establish the claim, not upon the testimony of the claimant, but upon the records in the Navy Department. And when I get through with this case I shall ask this House, if I have established it to their satisfaction, to vote to concur in this bill.

I reported this claim to the Fifty-fourth Congress. I again reported it to this Congress, and I have become so much interested in it, believing as I do that it is absolutely meritorious, that I should dislike very much to see it defeated. It is a case that appeals to the hearts and the consciences of all honest, fair-minded people in this country, and I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that we can approach this claim divested of all partisanship, and that that political aisle may not divide us when our votes are recorded for or against this claim.

It will be necessary for me, in order to establish the basis for this claim, to discuss those unfortunate occurrences that led up to it. I shall therefore briefly refer to the dispatch boat Dolphin, and I shall take that matter up from the time the Government entered in the contract with Roach and discuss it in such a manner that I believe every member who listens to my voice will agree that John Roach was unjustly treated by this Government of ours.

COMPENSATION TO ROACH'S HEIRS FOR DELAYS BY THE GOVERNMENT.

The bill pending before the committee is one to compensate the legal representatives of Roach for the labor furnished and the use and occupation of his yards and shops in the completion of the three cruisers, the Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago, during the delays by the Government. In the consideration of this case there is no question except the prolonged use of his yards and docks and the continued expense to Roach of what are called the fixed charges, including insurance.

Mr. Roach found it necessary July 18, 1885, to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors. This resulted from obstacles which he encountered in the construction of the dispatch boat Dolphin, for which obstacles he was in no wise responsible.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that the question will naturally be asked by members of this House, Why did John Roach make this assignment and where did his embarrassment find birth? I have implicit faith in the cause I represent, and the faith that is in me prompts me to see to it that all the facts in this case be laid bare to the members of this body. Therefore I propose to give a brief history of the unfortunate events that transpired during the time John Roach was engaged in the construction of the dispatch boat Dolphin.

A contract with John Roach for the construction of the Dolphin was made on the 23d day of July, 1883, after provision of law of March 3 had been complied with so far as inviting proposals was concerned.

This contract was entered into by John Roach for $315,000, instead of $400,000, as had been estimated by the advisory board, a saving of $85,000 over the estimate of this board and $65,000 below the next lowest bidder.

Mr. Roach proceeded at once to build this dispatch boat in accordance with the contract. As evidence of the inefficiency of the Navy Department at that date and the impractical and crude notions of what constituted a modern ship such as was desired, there were thirty-six changes made in the original plan of the hull and thirty-eight changes were made in the machinery of this vessel. Besides these thirty-six changes in the hull and thirty-eight changes in the machinery, numerous changes were made from time to time during the construction of the boat.

But not a single change was made either in hull or machinery that was not suggested or approved of by the Naval Advisory Board and the Secretary of the Navy. The act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, making appropriations for the construction of the Dolphin, also created "a Naval Advisory Board," something entirely new in naval architecture, an experiment that was then entered upon by that Congress. The peculiar wording of this act transferred from the Secretary of the Navy much of the power, discretionary and otherwise, that theretofore had vested in this official. In fact, so far as the construction of ships was concerned, the board had really more power than the Secretary of the Navy.

It had more power than the Secretary of the Navy, because the board was created to advise with the Secretary of the Navy and to supervise construction, inspect material, and to prevent any metal from entering into the construction of this boat until it had passed under their eye and met with their approval. Not only that, but the Secretary of War absolutely could not conclude a contract with a private citizen of this country without the approval of that advisory board. So that practically the hands of the Secretary of the Navy were tied by this board.

At this point I desire to emphasize the fact that not a pound of metal entering into the construction of the Dolphin was used by Roach till it had been inspected and passed by this board; not a single rivet was driven, except under their eye; not a particle of material was put in position and fastened there that did not in all respects meet the requirements of the contract and the approval of this board. The Naval Advisory Board was supreme and all powerful. Roach, the contractor, was its servant, made so by conditions in the contract.

And I want to reenforce this point, that the board was continually there and they had supreme authority, and that Roach was bound by the contract to abide their judgment and obey their orders. Let no officer of this Government or citizen thereof say that there is anything wrong with the dispatch boat Dolphin and that Roach, the contractor, was responsible for that defect, and in the same breath exonerate the representatives of the Navy Department, who were at that time on the ground and in full charge and supervision of this work.

It is a well-known fact that at this time this country was entering upon a new policy involving the construction of modern, powerful ships of war, that would be equal in efficiency, if not better, than any ships theretofore constructed by any maritime power in the world. But there was much to learn in order to reach the desired perfection in the construction of these ships. We all felt that we must necessarily pass through an experimental, as well as educational, stage in order to obtain the best results. We believe that our Naval Department and our naval officers were as efficient as any to be found in any other part of the world, but there is no question but what our naval officers know a great many things now in reference to the construction of great modern ships of war that they have learned by actual experience since 1882.

Mr. Roach was unfortunate in this, that he was compelled to deal with the chosen representatives of this Government at a period of time when this great evolution in the construction of our naval ships was going on. That period in our naval history is now happily passed.

The Naval Department can now prepare plans and specifications and supervise in a proper manner the construction and equipment of the grandest ships that the world has ever seen, but it has cost many a contractor very dearly to educate this Department of our Government up to its present condition of efficiency. It is unfortunate that private individuals who entered into contracts with the Government to construct ships should have been required to bear the expense of educating naval officers up to their present high standard. It is not altogether to the credit of this Government that many of its citizens have been crushed and ruined by the mistakes and incompetency of the chosen representatives of a rich and powerful nation.

John Roach prosecuted the work on the Dolphin with all the dispatch possible in view of the constant changes in material, hull, and machinery construction; every change ordered by the advisory board brought its annoyances and delays, and these changes were constant and never-ending.

Roach had but twelve months in which to complete this vessel, so that the annoyances and delays that were constantly consuming time were bringing him dangerously near to the point where delay in the completion of the contract might have been taken advantage of by the Secretary of the Navy, as provided for in the eleventh and twelfth clauses of the contract.

Notwithstanding all the annoyances, delays, and prejudices on the part of representatives of the Navy Department, this vessel was substantially finished, and was ready for its trial trip, and did make its first official trial trip, on the 20th day of November, 1884.

On this trip the steel shaft broke, and the vessel was compelled to return to her dock in order that an iron shaft could be put in the boat—just what Roach had insisted on from the beginning.

The breaking of this steel shaft was just what Roach feared; but it was put there by the Department over his protest.

On the trial trip of November 20, 1884, the Naval Advisory Board in their report stated that except for the breaking of the shaft the vessel would have been recommended for acceptance. And by fair dealing the vessel should have been accepted and full payment made, as provided for in the contract.

The advisory board was always present during the progress of the work on the Dolphin. There was also present a corps of inspectors, so that not a blow was struck, not a bolt driven, a rivet headed, or a movement made except under the eye of a representative of the Government. Every plan and all specifications were prepared or approved by the Government. Every piece of material entering into the construction of this hull or its machinery was there, as provided in the specifications, not a thing wanting to meet the plans and specifications as prepared by naval officers, and yet, strange to say, advisory board No. 2 found the ship structurally weak.

Mr. Whitney, it will be remembered, did not act upon the decisions of the advisory board that was created by statute, and which had from the beginning supervision over the construction of this ship, but on his own account he appointed the second board not only to pass upon the Dolphin, but to also pass upon the efficiency of the legal board.

No wonder we have a disagreement; the contest was not so much between Roach and the Government as it was between the two boards.

Let us now look into the matter of structural weakness found by board No. 2, and see what there is to it.

We find in the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy, October, 1889, the following statement relative to the Dolphin:

The record of the Dolphin, which vessel began with a speed of 15.11 knots on her contract trial, and which has recently returned from a cruise around the world, is not less satisfactory. The results of the inspection of the vessel, after she has been three years and nine months in commission, are reported by the board of inspection, under date of October 2, 1889, as follows:

"The material used in the construction of this vessel and the workmanship speak well for the designers and the builders. Aside from the slight repairs to her bearings she is ready for another cruise. By the most liberal estimates the work in the construction department can be done inside of a month. This, the first of the new Navy, makes a splendid showing for structural strength, fine material, and good care.

"Her captain reports that she can average 14 knots an hour for any length of time, and under favorable circumstances she can run 16 at sea.

"In the course of her cruise the Dolphin has run 58,000 miles in twenty months, and has been under steam nine thousand hours. In this prolonged run she has been stopped for repairs but once, and then for only two hours. This performance is probably without a parallel in the history of naval vessels, and bears conclusive testimony to the high skill of American artisans and the excellence of their work. Nor is it the less remarkable in view of the confident predictions with which, at the outset of her career, the official condemnation of the vessel was somewhat prematurely pronounced by expert and by inexpert judges.

"It is therefore proved by the test of actual cruising that the first modern experiments of the Department have come close to the highest standard of speed which had been reached at the date of their design, and that in structural strength, endurance, and workmanship they are not inferior to anything now afloat."

The record of the Dolphin since November 30, 1889, when the above was written, has been equally good.

There is your structural weakness; and let me say at this point that not one dollar was expended in strengthening this vessel from the time it left the hands of the builders up to the present date, chiefly because no additional strength was required. John Roach had attended to that.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTOR'S OFFICE,
UNITED STATES NAVY-YARD,
Norfolk, Va., October 14, 1893.

SIR: In reply to the letter of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, No. 7356-93, of the 11th instant, I would respectfully forward herewith a memorandum of all work done in this department on the U. S. S. Dolphin while at this navy-yard from January, 1886, until her departure in January, 1887.

After a careful examination of this list and of the orders under which the work was executed, it does not appear that any items were for the purpose of making the vessel conform to the contract under which she was built or for the purpose of increasing her structural strength. The work seems to have been of the character usual and customary in fitting out new ships and mounting their battery, including minor additions and improvements to accommodate the officers and crew.

Very respectfully,
FRANCIS T. BOWLES,
Naval Constructor, United States Navy.

The COMMANDANT,
Navy-Yard, Norfolk, Va.

The official trial trip was made November 24, 1884. Rear Admiral Simpson was president of the board. He reported the results of that trip to the Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

NAVAL ADVISORY BOARD, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, November 24, 1884.

SIR: The board would respectfully report that it was notified by the contractor, Mr. John Roach, that the Dolphin would be ready on the 20th instant for the preliminary trial to test the machinery, engines, boilers, and appurtenances, as required by the ninth clause of the contract. This trial was to be made, as recommended by the board in its letter to the Department of September 11, in Long Island Sound, and the data to be recorded as required by the United States steam log, and as approved by the Department in a letter to the board of October 25.

The contract conditions were as follows:

(2) That the collective indicated horsepower developed by said engines under the prescribed conditions shall be 2,300, and maintained successfully for six consecutive hours; provided that in case of the failure of the development of this power, the vessel shall be accepted if it can be shown to the satisfaction of the Naval Advisory Board and the Secretary of the Navy that this failure was due neither to defective workmanship nor materials.

The board assembled on board the Dolphin at 8 a. m. on the 20th instant, at the dock in East River at the foot of Eighth street.

The ship left the dock at 9.15 a. m., and proceeded at two-thirds power into the Sound. At 10.46 a. m. she passed Execution Rock light at full speed; the agreement being to run as nearly as possible a straight course at full speed to the Middle Ground light, 30¼ miles distant, and as far beyond as necessary to occupy a time of three hours, in order that six hours might expire on the return to Execution Rock light.

At 12 h. 40 m. 10 s. the engine slowed down for twenty minutes to examine a bearing; with this exception the engines worked continuously, the boilers furnished ample steam, the fire-room blowers furnishing excellent draft until 2.36 p. m., when, the vessel having fallen off four points while turning at full speed to return, the thrust-length of the main shaft broke just at the neck of the coupling abaft the main bearing.

No damage, further than a slight injury to the bearings of the broken length of shaft, was done to the machinery, and the vessel then came to anchor, lying 4 miles southeast of Falkner's Island light, and assistance was sent for.

The board is gratified to state that, except for this accident, the vessel would have been recommended for acceptance, as the average collective indicated horsepower of the engines was 1,954 and the maximum 2,151; the average over the ground for the whole distance of 55.7 nautical miles run was, approximately, 15.3 knots per hour.

The board estimates that the speed through the water for one hour, for which more accurate observations were obtained, was at the rate of 16 to 16½ knots.

The trial was sufficient to convince the board that the vessel will fully meet the estimates of her design when a continuous trial is obtained after the shaft is replaced.

After further investigation the board will inform the Department in regard to the probable cause of the failure of this shaft, which, under the terms of the contract, is to be made good by the contractor.

Very respectfully,

E. SIMPSON,
Rear-Admiral, U. S. N., President of the Board.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

The Navy Department, not being content with having perplexed and annoyed John Roach beyond all measure, had still a more bitter dose for him, one that was finally to crush his business, ruin his reputation, and break his heart. On the 30th day of June, 1885, the then Attorney-General, Mr. Garland, delivered an opinion that the contract for the construction of the Dolphin was null and void.

Think of it, will you—the contract for the construction of the Dolphin null and void. This opinion was rendered on the ground that no speed clause was incorporated in the contract. What are the facts? The facts are that seven months prior to the rendering of this opinion the Dolphin had made her official trial trip and the board had reported that the trial was in all respects satisfactory, and save for the breaking of her shaft, that was in no wise chargeable to her builder, the board would have recommended the acceptance of the boat.

The Dolphin had met all the requirements of the Government, both as to speed and structural strength, seven months before the Attorney-General had even been called on to render this unprecedented opinion.

On page 336, Secretary of Navy's report for 1885, in the report of the Naval Advisory Board, they say:

> The speed, being entirely dependent upon the design of the vessel, was not included in any stipulations of the contract, and the whole responsibility for it rests on the designers.

Again, in the very report of the board of examination on which the opinion of the Attorney-General was based, it is said:

> In justice to the contractor it is proper to state that the plans exhibited to the board and those furnished the contractor are very meager, and by no means provide for a vessel of adequate strength for the uses for which the Dolphin was intended. (See Secretary of Navy Report, 1885, page 303.)

And again, in the report of Captain Meade, made after the acceptance of the Dolphin by the Government, under date of March 20, 1886, is found the following:

> To sum up, I consider the Dolphin reasonably strong and her machinery reliable. As to the latter, there is too much of it. It occupies too much space, and seems to have been carefully designed to employ as many men as possible. The general plan of the ship and machinery is unsatisfactory. In my judgment, a vessel like the Dolphin is wholly unsuited to the needs of our Navy. The internal arrangement has many absurd features to the eye of a practical seaman, but on the whole, except as to rough work, my criticism of this vessel concerns the designer rather than the builder. (See Senate Document 153, page 72.)

But, Mr. Chairman, this opinion of the Attorney-General, declaring the contract for the construction of the Dolphin null and void, rendered seven months after the vessel had been completed to the satisfaction of the Government, caused the downfall of old honest John Roach.

A burden was thus placed on John Roach that proved too great for him. It not only ruined his business, but it killed him. He died with a broken heart. The death blow was struck by the representatives of a Government he tried so faithfully to serve, a Government he loved so well.

John Roach died, as we believe, of a broken heart, on the 10th day of January, 1887, at New York, eighteen months from the time this opinion of the Attorney-General was delivered. His death was a national calamity. The maritime interests of a civilized world mourned at his bier. The American people felt that they had parted with a master mind, a brave heart, a noble, honest soul, and a loyal citizen of this Republic. [Applause.]

This opinion of the Attorney-General came like a clap of thunder out of a clear sky. It startled the country and crushed the greatest of America's shipbuilders. The opinion, among other things considered, reached the conclusion that it was the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to proceed against John Roach for the recovery of all advance payments made to him on account of the construction of this dispatch boat; also for damages amounting in the aggregate to nearly $400,000. As a result of this proposed procedure by the Government, Roach found himself no longer able to stem the current that had been so long running against him, and as a sensible and business-like procedure, he made an assignment and selected Quintard and Weed, men of known ability and reputation, as assignees.

To all fair-minded men who knew the personal worth and excellent character and great ability of John Roach the said Quintard and Weed needed no further indorsement than the fact that they had been named by Roach.

It should be borne in mind that John Roach entered into a contract on the 23d day of July, 1883, not only to build the Dolphin, but on the same day he signed a contract to construct the Boston, of 3,000 tons displacement, and for the sum of $619,000, and also to build the Atlanta, of 3,000 tons, and for $617,000, and three days thereafter—to wit, on the 26th day of July—he signed still another contract for the construction of the Chicago, of 4,500 tons, to cost $889,000, so that at the time of his assignment he had on his hands and in course of construction four ships, as follows:

	Tons.	Price.
The Dolphin	1,500	$315,000
The Boston	3,000	619,000
The Atlanta	3,000	617,000
The Chicago	4,500	889,000

RECAPITULATION.

	Chicago.	Boston.	Atlanta.	Dolphin.
Contract cost	$889,000.00	$619,000.00	$617,000.00	$315,000.00
Cost of changes and additions to date	81,550.50	20,955.75	21,901.93	15,880.97
Approximate percentage of contract cost for changes and additions	8¼	3½	3½	5

That House bill No. 628 or Senate bill 1116 are just and meritorious bills can not be doubted. That this Government is justly indebted to the legal representatives of John Roach can not be successfully controverted. But it has been impossible in the consideration of this claim to go at once to the merits of these bills without first considering the underlying misfortunes that led up to the downfall of Roach, and this could only be done by a full and fair consideration of the history of the construction of the dispatch boat Dolphin, because out of the construction of this boat arises the claim that I present to this House here and now.

The hindrances—difference in opinions, constant changes being ordered by the advisory board, the lack of experience and perhaps jealousy among officers chosen by the Secretary of the Navy to supervise the construction of this boat, the breaking of a steel shaft, against which John Roach had filed his protest—all these difficulties resulted in deferring payments that would otherwise have been due and paid, and, finally, in addition to this assemblage of annoyances, came the crushing and final blow of the Attorney-General's opinion.

Then followed the assignment of John Roach.

You may now readily see, gentlemen, how it is that a builder and contractor may be annoyed by these eternal and interminable changes thus ordered. Every one of these changes consisted of matters that had not been theretofore proposed. It changed the deck, changed the strength, changed the internal and external arrangements of the ship, and it took time, and time is what killed John Roach in the end.

The immediate and unavoidable consequence of that assignment was a discontinuation of his ability to obtain money from the various banks to continue the work on the cruisers, and he notified the Government of the United States July 20, 1885, that work had stopped on the Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago. Sixteen days after this notice, to wit, August 6, the Secretary of the Navy took possession of the vessels. This the Secretary had a right to do, and it was his duty to do it. Without any particular phraseology to be found in the contract, the obvious steps for the Government to pursue was to go on and finish the vessels, and on their completion adjust the accounts with Mr. Roach.

The contracts for the construction of these vessels were very explicit upon that point, and no one questions the authority and the duty of the Secretary to go on, "without unnecessary delay," clause 13; but it has been insisted ever since the 20th of July, 1885, by Mr. Roach, by his assignees, and now by his executors, that the Government exercised their right to complete these vessels in a manner which imposed upon Mr. Roach and his estate a very large expenditure of money which would have been unnecessary if the Government had acted with the promptness demanded by due consideration of his interests.

It appears from the report of the committee that the Atlanta was not completed until June 28, 1886, nearly eleven months after the right accrued to the Government to complete the vessel.

The Boston was not completed until August 28, 1886, more than thirteen months after the Government's right to complete, and the Chicago was not completed until June 21, 1887, which was twenty-three months and one day after the right of the United States to complete the vessels accrued. Now, the affidavits of Mr. Weed and Mr. Quintard, both gentlemen well known in the shipbuilding trade and perfectly familiar with the history of these vessels and with the obstacles to be encountered in the construction of all vessels, say that at the date of the assumption by the Government of this work there remained to be done upon these vessels work, and there remained materials to be furnished, which reasonably would not have consumed more than four months for the Atlanta, four months for the Boston, and seven months for the Chicago.

It is well known by all persons familiar with naval architecture that the art of building war vessels has bearing upon it at all hours and on all days the concentrated attention of the brightest minds in every nation that maintains a navy. Consequently those charged with the construction of these vessels desire every week, indeed every day, to embody in vessels under construction the improvements which are suggested from all quarters of the globe, either by experience with vessels afloat or by the students of naval architecture engaged in the development of the art. Hence it was that the Chicago, instead of being completed in seven months, was completed in twenty-three months, and the Atlanta required eleven months and the Boston thirteen months, respectively, instead of four months.

The precise condition of these vessels at the time the work stopped, on the 20th of July, 1885, is set out with unusual clearness in Senate Executive Document No. 153, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, at pages 204 and 205; in fact, pages 185 to 253 of that document contain nothing but inventories and appraisals of these unfinished cruisers at the date when John Roach abandoned their further construction; but the result of these reports are collected in the official communication of the Naval Advisory Board to the Secretary of the Navy of October 9, 1885, page 204.

The contract price for the Atlanta, including extras, was $661,978.16, which the board divides into $620,387, as the value of the work already done, and $41,591.15, as the expenditures necessary to complete, showing on the Atlanta that about 93 per cent of that contract had been completed and not quite 7 per cent remained to be done.

For the Boston the contract price was $660,218.74, which they divide into $610,023.44 as completed and $50,195.30 work to do done, making about 92 per cent completed and 8 per cent to complete.

For the Chicago, the total contract price, $933,692.11, as a total contract, divided into $727,646.71 as done, with $206,045.40 to complete. In this case the percentage was 65 per cent completed and 35 per cent remained to be done. Inasmuch as the contracts required these vessels to be completed in eighteen months, and as both parties assumed that that was sufficient time to complete them, it will readily be seen that by any statement of calculation, such as business men use for the conduct of their business enterprises, the estimates of Mr. Quintard and Mr. Weed are very liberal indeed, as toward the Government, as to the length of time necessary.

Although the work stopped on the 18th of July, 1885, and the Government took possession of the vessels on the 6th of August, 1885, the actual work of completion, which the Government by this contract with Mr. Roach had agreed that it would perform in case of his failure, did not commence until the 9th of November. From the 18th of July until the 9th of November (113 days) Mr. Roach's yards and shops were absolutely idle—no steam in the boilers, no fire in the furnaces, and no workmen doing any work. Thus the time consumed by the Government in getting started would seem to the ordinary observer as very unnecessary indeed.

Mr. ROBB. I should like to ask the gentleman if the contract between Roach and the Government did not require the Government, if it took charge of the property, to make an inventory and appraisement before entering upon the work and completing the building, and if the Government during the time you speak of was not engaged in making that inventory and appraisement?

Mr. MINOR. I want to say in reply to the gentleman that that matter under the contract is indefinite. No specific method for taking the inventory is prescribed. They could proceed upon any theory they desired, so long as the inventory was taken, but I want to suggest to the gentleman that if that Naval Advisory Board had had the interest of Mr. Roach at heart they would have commenced work on the ship the same day they commenced the inventory, because every pound of metal was weighed and every rivet counted, and there are 65 pages of Executive Document No. 153, Forty-ninth Congress, of weights and measures. I say to the gentleman that this material could just as well have been weighed and counted at the time they were being put in the vessels, and the work in that way be expedited, as to have the work stop and the vessels lie there until the inventory was completed.

Mr. ROBB. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman, further, if the law under which these contracts were made and the contracts themselves did not provide for persons other than the advisory board to make this appraisement and inventory, and if it was not necessary for them to make that before the Government could go ahead in the completion of the contracts?

Mr. MINOR. No; that is not so. The fact is, parties who were appointed to assist in this inventory were parties who loved their job, and the longer they could hold it the better it suited their purpose. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ROBB. Where is there any evidence of that?

Mr. MINOR. It lies in the fact that the yards were idle one hundred and thirteen days. By the way, let me remind you, we do not charge a cent for that in this bill.

Mr. BRUMM. That is the fact.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Roach's assignees, on the 17th day of October, complained, as appears in the document already alluded to, as follows:

MORGAN IRON WORKS, New York, October 17, 1885.

SIR: We beg to call your attention to the fact that while your letters of July 25 and August 11 indicated the course you intended to pursue in completing the Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago, nearly three months have been consumed in taking the inventory and making the appraisal provided for in the contract, although under the conditions upon which you proposed completing the work this action is but a formal one——

Mr. BRUMM. The report of your own board.

Mr. MINOR (continuing)— as the amount expended is to be deducted from the sum due upon final settlement. We are, in the meantime, compelled to pay large amounts for insurance and other expenses on the vessel. The best season of the year is passing for doing the work, and the workmen who might be employed are suffering for the means of subsistence.

Mr. ROBB. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MINOR. I do not care to be interrupted any further.

Mr. ROBB. There is a dispute between the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee, and myself. I want to know if you read that as the report of the Naval Advisory Board?

Mr. MINOR. No, I did not.

Mr. BRUMM. That matter that was merely formal is the report.

Mr. MINOR. That matter that is merely formal is the report.

Mr. ROBB. And what you are reading is what Quintard and Weed had to say?

Mr. MINOR. Not the formal part. The matter that was merely formal is in the report.

It appears to us that the time occupied in making the inventory and appraisal has been unreasonably long, even were the conditions such that an absolute settlement was to be had based upon the result.

We would respectfully ask if you can not consistently expedite this matter, especially as the engine and boilers for the Chicago, which are in New York and require about six weeks' labor to be made ready for shipment to Chester, where the hull is, can not be sent through the canal—the most feasible way of shipment—after about the 10th of December.

Yours, respectfully,

GEO. W. QUINTARD,
GEO. E. WEED,
Assignees.

Hon. W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

The bill before the House makes no allowance for this unduly prolonged period of idleness. The injury done to Mr. Roach throughout his vast yards and in his extended business can not be estimated in dollars and cents, and the claim presented contains nothing for these three months, although 5,300 men had been thrown out of employment and $2,000,000 worth of plant was idle.

Between the time that the work commenced, November 9, 1885, and the respective dates of completion of these vessels are the periods for which compensation was asked in this bill—that is to say, for so much of each period as is in excess of the time reasonably allowed by Messrs. Quintard and Weed in their affidavits. As I have already pointed out, this time allowed by them is far in excess of an arithmetical computation of the work that was to be done.

When these vessels were completed and adjustment made between the United States and Mr. Roach, by which he was charged with the additional expense of completing the vessels, his claims for insurance, for the occupation of the yard and machine shops, and for the running expenses of the permanent staff during that portion of the time which was exacted by the Government for its own purposes were presented to the Secretary of the Navy, but were not considered by him, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to pass upon them. A settlement was effected, however, between Roach's representatives and the United States of everything except these items, and it was, as appears by the report of the committee, expressly stipulated that these matters should remain open between the parties to be adjusted by Congress.

His claim is now before the ultimate tribunal which passes upon controversies of this kind. Congress has before it all the evidence that can be available, and the report of the committee, excluding, as it does, all claims for the period between the 18th of July and the 9th of November, presents a very small portion of what would be necessary to make Mr. Roach and his representatives whole for the delays of the United States in the completion of these three cruisers. The report of the Committee on Claims shows the items of claim and the evidence to sustain them, to wit:

Occupation of shipyards and plant	$247,578.00
Insurance paid out	11,163.19
Wages for permanent staff	71,409.52
Total	330,151.71

Mr. Chairman, we concede the right of the Secretary of the Navy to do just what he did under the circumstances, namely, to enter upon and take charge of this property for the purpose of completing these ships.

We say that in doing this he was exercising a wise discretion within the authority vested in him by virtue of clauses 11 and 12 of this contract. But, sir, while we are willing to concede his right to do this, we insist on Roach's rights under clause 13 of that same contract. We protest here and now against the right of this Government to use one portion of this contract to insure it against loss, and then to turn around and absolutely ignore and disregard the only clause in the same contract that contained the smallest measure of protection for Roach. I refer to clause 13, that reads as follows:

Clause 13. In case the Secretary of the Navy shall proceed, under the foregoing clause, to complete the work, such procedure shall be without unnecessary delay, etc.

I challenge any officer of this Government, or any member of this House, to successfully maintain that clause 13 of this contract was not violated. It was violated, and on this indisputable violation rests the justice of this claim. Think of it! From the 18th of July until the 9th of November not a blow struck; all was idleness, still as death, where so recently 5,000 men found employment; one hundred and thirteen days of idleness, all as silent as a tomb, and then for a moment consider the unnecessary delay in completing these ships after the Government had resumed work on them.

The Chicago, instead of being completed in seven months, was not completed till twenty-three months had passed. The Atlanta required eleven months and the Boston thirteen months, respectively, instead of four months.

Now, who will rise and say that clause 13, requiring that this work be prosecuted by the Government, has not been violated?

I say here is a plain, palpable, and unnecessary violation of contract; and on that proposition I am willing to rest this case.

And in addition to that I desire to say that if it became necessary for private corporations owning shipyards in this country to turn them into kindergartens to teach naval officers, they ought to be entitled to a tuition fee. [Applause.]

In closing these remarks, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to believe that there is no basis for making this a political question.

Mr. Whitney came to the Navy Department without previous experience in marine architecture, but ardent in his desires to carry on the policy of building up our Navy.

A new policy had been entered upon, and the responsibilities resting upon the Navy Department were grave and weighty.

He assumed these responsibilities fearlessly, depending, of course, on the officers of the Navy and a patriotic people to sustain him. I believe he did the best he could with the light he had on the subject.

Mr. Whitney is a loyal, progressive American citizen, one in whom may be found the higher qualities of citizenship. That he was deceived and led into byways that ought not to have been trod by him is true; but, Mr. Chairman, let us be charitable and say that on the whole he served his country well.

Mr. Chairman, a word in behalf of the greatest American shipbuilder of his time—John Roach. He began the art of shipbuilding in his youth, without wealth, and among strangers; but, sir, his was a noble spirit. He possessed in a large measure those sterling qualities that are met with in no country so often as in our own America, qualities that have so freely contributed to the progress of our people and the upbuilding of this Republic.

John Roach with rapid strides mounted to the head of his profession. He became the proprietor of works valued at $2,000,000. He built 120 of the finest ships that had ever been launched. These ships aggregated 196,500 tons, and were justly regarded as the highest types of marine architecture.

These ships carried our flag in every clime and to every port on the globe. The beauty and symmetry of these ships found words of praise on every lip, and while expressions of commendation were being lavished on the ships, the eye would glide aloft and there behold the starry banner of this Republic, and then unconsciously came the thought, "This is American." John Roach was an honest man. He died with every debt paid, and his obligations to the world were honestly discharged.

John Roach was a patriot; he loved his country and respected its laws; he gloried in American progress, and with a generous hand he contributed to every laudable enterprise; he carried the burdens of citizenship cheerfully; he assumed the cares and perplexities of life like a philosopher. But, sir, when the misguided but heavy hand of this Government was laid upon him he went down to his grave.

But, sir, the last breath he breathed was an American breath; the last words he uttered were words of love for his country and its flag. [Loud applause.]

I desire to append to my remarks the following appropriate and just tribute to Mr. Roach by one who knew him well:

A FEW WORDS IN MEMORY AND IN HONOR OF THE LATE JOHN ROACH, WHO DIED ON JANUARY 10, 1887, IN NEW YORK CITY.

[By Nathaniel McKay.]

The visits of kings are announced by royal proclamation and by the pomp and trappings of princely splendor, the fame that hedges the accident of birth, and the groveling horde of fawning sycophants that thrive and fatten in the sunshine and smiles of imperial patronage.

Emperors who travel to foreign lands are heralded by flunkeys and couriers, have their arrival welcomed by courtly presence, by the blare of trumpets, and the grand reviews of tinseled guards and feathered captains, who bow low and obsequiously to do them homage.

Kings and princes, nobles and potentates, come to view as nations pass in panorama, and sink to obscurity and are forgotten; but the fire of genius ne'er pales on the page of history.

Dotted along the pathway of national life like milestones upon the highway, men of great intellectual power, richly endowed by nature with rare sagacity and foresight, with prophetic vision of future needs, who comprehend the present and discount the drafts of time, invariably attract the attention of mankind and impress the world by the splendor of their achievements.

There came to this country from the "Emerald Isle," the garden spot of genius, unnoticed, unheralded, and utterly unknown, Mr. John Roach, at the age of 14 years, who, by the inherent force of mental power, tireless energy, and ceaseless toil, has left an imperishable name engraved high upon the roll of honor, written upon ships waving the Stars and Stripes, which have been tossed by the billows of every sea, and emblazoned upon the pages of the naval archives of this great Republic. These great ships, built in America, advertised the name, skill, and wealth of America in every land and on every sea.

The brilliant and unequaled services of Mr. Roach to mankind in the advancement, development, and expansion of civilization and extension of commerce outweigh the worthless and useless lives of a hundred kings.

It seems almost incredible that a mere lad, without money, without friends, and without a technical knowledge of the art of shipbuilding, coming to this country a perfect stranger, could have achieved such stupendous results as crowned his efforts in the brief period allotted to man's activities.

He possessed mechanical abilities of the very highest order; in the department of pure mechanics he probably never had a superior. In original designs, form, and fashion of vessels, embodying strength, economy, durability, speed, and safety, he was simply peerless.

He was the champion of iron-ship building in this country, and always maintained his supremacy in that modern method of marine architecture. His advanced ideas and his practical demonstration in the construction of iron ships aroused the greatest apprehension and awakened the deepest interest in the Scotch and English shipyards—a fact that stimulated Mr. Roach to the grandest and proudest triumphs of his life. His contracts with private parties and with the United States Government were uniformly marked by a thorough and complete knowledge of the science of shipbuilding in its minutest detail, and he invariably carried out his promises and agreements with the strictest integrity and a punctilious regard for the letter, intent, and spirit of his contract.

His ships are to-day models for inferior mechanics to imitate, as they have won the admiration and praise in every port of the world where high-class skill in shipbuilding is understood and appreciated. He drew his plans and specifications with mathematical accuracy; directed and guided his foremen with unerring knowledge, showing in every part of a ship's construction the touch and skill of a master's hand.

He evinced in every department of his immense business the highest type of an able mechanic; he could instantly detect a fault in any part of a ship, and the slightest departure from his plans or specifications which had escaped his foremen he seemed to discern by clairvoyant vision. He possessed in an eminent degree every quality of a great manager. His order, punctuality, kindness to employees, gentleness, and dignity of demeanor to all classes of citizens, sympathy for those who were unfortunate, generosity, and the nobility of his nature won for him the admiration and homage of all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance.

Mr. Roach's vigilance and energy, as well as his executive capacity, have been so strikingly demonstrated that anything more than a simple reminder is now needless. He has obtained by personal exertions contracts from individuals and corporations throughout the Union, and has justified the judgment in his favor by meritorious fulfillment. He has given an enviable character to his works by skill and excellence in execution, and has made America famous on land and water by a thoroughness and fidelity that rendered his manufacture a valued one on nearly every ocean on the globe.

In the employment of large bodies of men he has benefited hundreds of families, advanced the prosperity and marvelous thrift of Chester and New York, and, in his successful season, dispensed a judicious charity that can not be too highly praised, and it is also kept in grateful remembrance. In his death we are deprived of an example of enterprise and of productive and well-organized work that is not so commonly presented as to reconcile us to his loss.

To the workingmen his presence was most directly beneficial, until overwhelmed by reverses which no ability could avert; the encouragement to skilled labor he was able to offer and the emulative character infused into all the establishments were benefits valuable in other senses than a pecuniary one merely.

As the head of a great and important establishment, the largest in the Western Hemisphere, he was emphatically without a rival and without a peer. To the poor he was always generous, without counting the thousands he gave; his sympathy and heart were as generous as those of a child to the needy.

I will not undertake the task of enumerating the vast fleet of ships which the pressing energy and indomitable will of Mr. Roach set afloat upon every sea. The City of Tokio, the City of Pekin, City of Rio de Janeiro, City of Para, and the Pilgrim and 118 other ships, aggregating a tonnage of 190,550 tons, were justly regarded, when completed, as the grandest triumphs of marine architecture. General Grant, when in the midst of his glory, admired these ships as the masterpieces of American workmanship and skill. He visited them all, and made passage in one to Boston with Mr. Roach. He always sought the advice of Mr. Roach in recommending the American marine, as well as building up the Navy.

The Puritan, Miantonomoh, and the White Squadron were superior to anything afloat in Western waters, and are to-day splendid specimens of the shipbuilder's art. The U. S. cruisers Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta were built by Mr. Roach, and when inspected by the most competent naval architects and others skilled in shipbuilding were admitted to be far better in workmanship, form, lines, and beauty of model than anything that had hitherto been produced in the country; and those wonderful ships placed him easily, and deservedly, in the front rank of American shipbuilders.

But calamities follow genius; adversity shadowed his path, and misfortunes and disappointments often crush the heart that beats in unison with honor and throbs synchronously with his country's pulse. He aspired to the highest perfection and grandest achievements in the line that has made his name famous and honored in both hemispheres.

The great calamity that overshadowed Mr. Roach was on July 18, 1885, when he made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors on the condemnation of the Dolphin and the uncalled-for opinion of the Attorney-General. At that time there were but two days' wages due the employees of the works, and the following notice was posted on one of the large doors: "Closed until further notice. Wages for Friday and Saturday will be paid by James Mooney at 5 p. m. Monday."

It was the pride of his life to fulfill every obligation that he made, and by the efficient management of the assignees, George W. Quintard and George E. Weed, whom Mr. Roach appointed himself, they have all been honored and paid in full with the same care as if they had been carried out under his supervision, or even executed with his own hand. While he was fighting the battle of life for existence, he wrote me to come and see him; I did so, and he expressed at that time his great anxiety that his shipyard in Chester should continue in operation, and thus add to the success and triumph of American commerce, which he had devoted so much time and energy to accomplish.

In fulfillment of this desire, since his death, it has been in full operation under the able management of his son, John B. Roach, and George E. Weed, and I am gratified to say that his desires have been accomplished far beyond his expectation. At his death he left his bereaved and devoted widow and children a handsome estate.

These thoughts are painful and full of sorrow. Mr. Roach, under a contract with the Secretary of the Navy, built the beautiful and historic Dolphin; after many trials, in which she fully vindicated every claim, and sustained every provision and paragraph relating to speed, strength, and capacity, as set forth in the contract, she was rejected by the Secretary of the Navy for alleged structural weakness, though upon a careful and critical examination the weakness was found to be in the peculiar methods and manipulations of the distinguished board of experts that examined her, and the designing Attorney-General of Cleveland's Administration, who gave an opinion that the contracts for the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin were null and void.

This broke the heart of the greatest American shipbuilder the world ever produced. It was made by the order of Grover Cleveland to break down this American industry and ruin Mr. Roach, which it did. A great Government making contracts, vast in their amounts—$2,440,000—and in the midst of their fulfillment the head law officer of the Government endeavors to convince the country that the contracts were not legal. Such an uncalled-for opinion would ruin the best and strongest national bank in the United States; but the public press of the country scorned with contempt its wording, and it had no force or effect, but at the time ruined Mr. Roach's credit. I here quote from that infamous opinion, as follows:

"The obvious intention of this was to relieve the contractor of all duty and responsibility as to the speed and power of the ship, and make it feasible to force upon the United States a ship wanting in the prime quality of speed and fundamentality different from what Congress authorized and was desirous to secure. It needs no further discussion to show that what was thus attempted was wholly out of the question.

"NATURE OF THE CONTRACT.

"But the contract is an entirety, and does not admit of being broken up into fragments so as that what is good may be enforced and what is bad rejected. The stipulation which was intended to relieve the contractor of responsibility for the power of the engines, and, as a necessary consequence, for the speed of the ship, forms a large and most important part of the consideration coming to him from the Government. It is impossible to say what was its bearings on the whole contract, nor is it material to do so, inasmuch as it and the other covenants of the Government constitute one entire and individual consideration, the invalidity or illegality of any element of which must necessarily vitiate the whole and abrogate the contract.

* * * "It follows then that no contract exists between Mr. Roach and the United States, and that the large sums of money which have been paid Mr. Roach have passed into his hands without authority of law and are held by him as so much money had and received to the use of the United States and may be recovered from him. And not only so, but the money thus paid him by officials holding a fiduciary relation to the Government having gone into the ship Dolphin, a court of equity will follow it there, and for that purpose entertain a proceeding against the ship itself. * * *

"I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

"A. H. GARLAND,
"Attorney-General.

"The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY."

Senator BURROWS, in his report on the bill (S. 754) for the relief of the heirs of John Roach, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, made the following statement with reference to the contract:

"On the 30th of June, 1885 (see Annual Report of Secretary of the Navy, December, 1885, page 318), the Attorney-General rendered to the Secretary of the Navy his opinion that the contract with John Roach for the construction of the dispatch boat Dolphin was null and void (although at that date Roach had substantially completed her), on the ground that the contractor was not required by the contract to furnish a speed of 15 knots irrespective of the drawings furnished by the United States; and, further, that suit should be brought to recover from him the installments, $315,000, received by him from time to time on the Dolphin.

"The gist of this opinion was, that he was bound to furnish a certain speed and at the same time to comply with drawings which he neither furnished nor controlled. Because this contract provided relief for the contractor from the speed provisions in case the defect was in the drawings; because the contract did not impose upon the contractor the penalty for the failures of the United States, the Attorney-General thought the contract was void from the beginning.

"The promulgation of this opinion on the 12th of July, 1885, impaired and destroyed John Roach's financial credit, and inflicted on him such financial embarrassment that he became unable to continue and complete the cruisers Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago.

"And on this account John Roach made an assignment to George W. Quintard and George E. Weed for the benefit of his creditors on the 18th of July, 1885. The works at New York employed 1,500 men, the shipyard at Chester 3,000 men, and the rolling mills and furnaces connected with these works employed 800 men. All of these vast works were closed for over four months by the enforced idleness caused by the action of the Government.

"On the 10th of November, 1885, Commander Robeson, acting under the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy, received the Dolphin at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, and never again was the destructive opinion of the Attorney-General cited by any officer of the United States either as an exposition of law or as a ground for either action or inaction on the part of the United States. Concerning the general excellence of the Dolphin the Secretary of the Navy said, in his report of November 30, 1889 (pages 6, 7):

"'The record of the Dolphin, which vessel began with a speed of 15.11 knots on her contract trial, and which has recently returned from a cruise around the world, is not less satisfactory. The results of the inspection of the vessel, after she had been three years and nine months in commission, are reported by the board of inspection, under date of October 2, 1889, as follows:

"'The material used in the construction of this vessel and the workmanship speak well for the designers and the builders. Aside from the slight repairs to her bearings, she is ready for another cruise. By the most liberal estimates the work in the construction department can be done inside of a month. This, the first of the new navy, makes a splendid showing for structural strength, fine material, and good care.'

"'Her captain reports that she can average 14 knots an hour for any length of time, and under favorable circumstances she can run 16 at sea.

"'In the course of her cruise the Dolphin has run 58,000 miles in twenty months, and has been under steam nine thousand hours. In this prolonged run she has been stopped for repairs but once, and then for only two hours. This performance is probably without a parallel in the history of naval vessels, and bears conclusive testimony to the high skill of American artisans and the excellence of their work. Nor is it the less remarkable, in view of the confident predictions with which, at the outset of her career, the official condemnation of the vessel was somewhat prematurely pronounced by expert and inexpert judges.

"'It is therefore proved by the test of actual cruising that the first modern experiments of the Department have come close to the highest standard of speed which had been reached at the date of their design, and that in structural strength, endurance, and workmanship they are not inferior to anything now afloat.'

"The works at Chester were capable of producing ten large-class steamers per year, or over 28,000 tons per year, and were valued at $1,000,000, and the furnaces alone for making the iron for the ships cost $250,000. (See United States Census Report for 1880.)

"The Morgan Iron Works at New York were valued at $702,000, and they were all kept in enforced idleness by the Government.

"John Roach died in the city of New York on the 10th day of January, 1887."

Mr. Roach clearly demonstrated that the Dolphin was a strong, stanch, and magnificent ship, fully equal to any vessel of her class afloat to-day, and was so conceded by eminent authorities.

I once criticised the Dolphin in an article relative to her air-tight fire room, which was in the contract and not put in the ship. It was omitted by the advisory board, under whose instructions Mr. Roach built the Dolphin. I said nothing about her structural weakness, and was not informed, when I wrote the article, of the order not to put the air-tight fire room in the ship. And I write this article in memory of a grand and noble-hearted man, to do his memory justice.

I here quote an extract from the report which Rear-Admiral Jouett made on the Dolphin when she returned from a trip around the globe, which speaks for itself, and places beyond question the language of that infamous opinion of the Attorney-General. Rear-Admiral Jouett is one of the most faithful and able officers of the United States Navy; he made a thorough examination of this ship on her return:

"The vessel has been three years and nine months in commission. Considering the service performed and her present admirable condition, she is very creditable to the service. She can average 14 knots an hour for any length of time, and under favorable circumstances she can run 16 knots at sea. With a few improvements this vessel could be duplicated with credit to the Department and country. I know of no vessel possessing so many qualities and comforts to officers and men."

My object in quoting so much about the Dolphin is on account of the great injustice done Mr. Roach by the Democratic Administration. They were determined, when they entered the departments, to ruin any Republican shipbuilder that was in their power. It was not only the Dolphin they were after, but they investigated every contract that was made by Mr. Roach for twenty years, thinking they would find some dishonest measures or accounts of his on file in the Navy Department. They failed in every attempt they made. Even Congress, with its great power—when the Democrats controlled the House, was always investigating.

He gave the committees of investigation all the information that he had in his possession, and opened his books and papers and contracts to all investigators. He was fearless and uncompromising with the Democrats. He would sit for days to be examined by these committees, under oath, appointed on purpose to break him down, if it were in their power.

Mr. Roach always came out triumphant, and he was vindicated in every transaction he ever had with the United States Government.

Mr. Roach was in every respect in advance of all competitors in his line, was a constant and ceaseless worker in devising and originating improvements, inaugurating new styles, and grasping suggestions for practical application, until his ships were unrivaled throughout the commercial world. He devoted his great talents and used every available influence to build up American shipping (of American material) and American laboring interests of this country, which have languished under the listless inaction and stupid policy of Congress, until even the coasting trade is largely carried on in foreign bottoms, to the West Indies, which is a stinging commentary upon the inexplicable indifference and lethargy that have paralyzed Congressional action in applying the proper remedy.

He labored earnestly for months and years, by night and by day, with Congress to convince them of the great advantage the American working people would derive if Congress would aid our shipping.

Those efforts on the part of Mr. Roach were well known to every Senator and member of Congress for twenty years and thoroughly understood and fully appreciated by the citizens of this country. He was confessedly at the head of the shipbuilding industry of the Republic, and, as such, was a conspicuous figure to crush out, which was nearly accomplished by the rejection of the Dolphin, which has since proved the hollow mockery of the inspection and the baseness of the transaction by steaming over 58,000 miles on her cruise around the globe and maintaining in every detail the record that was claimed for her by Mr. Roach.

Her trial in honest and competent hands has more than established all that was asserted in her behalf, all that was set forth in the contract, and has stamped the cruel, sham, and heartless condemnation as fraud, placed upon a worthy and noble-hearted man to gratify political enemies. Mr. Roach earned the animosity of small politicians by his robust honesty, frankness, and adhesion to his convictions of square dealing, and he held in deserved contempt and derisive scorn the petty measures, meanness, sharp practice, and the quibbling subterfuge of the slippery politician, who slimes his path to Congress by disreputable tactics, trades upon his position, and barters the expectations of waiting and hoping constituents for higher prospects and promises of personal gain. The keenness and asperity of his feelings, and sentiments for that class of political parasites, were greatly intensified by the transparent intrigue that preceded the policy resulting in the rejection of the Dolphin.

Mr. Roach represented and combined in his person every quality, trait, and attribute that truly ennobles, refines, and exalts human character. His career stands out like a mountain promontory, and marks an epoch in the history of American shipbuilding, as his name is indissolubly connected with the rise and expansion of our American shipping industry and Navy and the splendid ships that were built under his supervision.

He commenced the voyage of life without wealth, prestige, influence, or friends, but at the helm of his sturdy craft there was an irresistible, pure, and strong moral force, with a chart of unquestionable integrity and a compass boxed by high resolves of inflexible, unswerving duty and honest effort, sustained by an iron will, that directed his bark to a haven and an anchorage of a spotless and unsullied name, as a legacy for his heirs and a priceless heritage for his country.

It may be truly said of Mr. Roach, "We shall never look upon his like again." A grand character, a most notable and conspicuous figure among the leading men of the country, has passed to the silent and shadowy realms unknown to man.

The death of such a man is a national calamity, an irreparable loss, and leaves a void among the greatest mechanics of the nineteenth century.

MR. ROACH ON THE PROTECTION OF AMERICAN LABOR.

"Every American shop, when I was a workman, was an international congress of labor." (Before a committee of Congress on the decline of American tonnage, 1868.)

But he needs no epitaph to remind the passing stranger that he once lived; he requires no sculptor to point in marble to his resting place. His memory will remain fresh in every port, his generous and noble gifts and benefactions are known in every harbor, and the monuments of his genius float in every haven and offing of the world. He is now anchored in that beautiful harbor "Where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1896.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 924) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the resolution agreeing to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 924) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to inform the Senate as to the cost of improving the Saginaw River from its head to a point in Saginaw Bay, with a view of securing a channel 150 feet wide and an increase of depth to 16 feet from the head of the river to the Third-street bridge in Bay City; thence a channel 200 feet in width to the Saginaw Bay, with an increase of depth of the channel to 16 feet, said estimate to be based on the survey made pursuant to the river and harbor act of 1896.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish and report a plan for the improvement of the Homochitto River, in the State of Mississippi, from and including its mouth to the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley Railroad, together with estimates of the cost of making such improvement in accordance with said plans.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 4698. An act for the relief of W. E. Judkins, executor of Lewis McKenzie.

H. R. 6542. An act for the relief of Eldred G. Davis.

HEIRS OF JOHN ROACH, DECEASED.

The committee resumed its session.

[Mr. ROBB addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I have not been speaking an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman rose in the first place and had the report read in his time.

Mr. ROBB. No, indeed; I did not ask to have the report read in my time. I merely asked to have the report read for information of the committee. A number of members here asked for it.

The CHAIRMAN. It could not have been read except in the time of some gentleman, and the Chair stated at the time that it would be read in the gentleman's time.

Mr. BARTLETT. I called for the reading of the report.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB] did not at that time take the floor. He only called for the reading of the report, which was done without objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Texas that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB] took the floor. The Chair awarded him the floor, and then turned to the gentleman from Wisconsin and said he would recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin, who reported the bill, if he desired. The gentleman from Wisconsin said he did not, and then the Chair recognized the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BAILEY. My understanding was that the gentleman from Missouri did not even seek recognition. I will not use the time now to discuss the matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be allowed the additional time consumed in the reading of the report, or, say, thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended for thirty minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is objection, unless a like extension can be made on the other side. The Chair plainly announced that the report would be read in the time of the gentleman from Missouri. I heard the announcement.

Mr. DOCKERY. I certainly shall have no objection to an extension of time on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] objects.

Mr. BRUMM. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 2219, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, and with the recommendation that as amended the same do pass; also that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 628, and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that its consideration be postponed until Friday, April 1; also, that the committee had had under consideration the bill S. 716, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the consideration of the bill H. R. 628 will be postponed until Friday, April 1. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment reported to the bill (H. R. 2219) for the relief of the administrators of Isaac P. Tice and others.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAFF, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 3544. An act to provide for submitting to the Court of Claims for determination the rights of the Delaware Indians in the Cherokee Nation, the Mississippi Choctaws in the Choctaw Nation, the Chickasaw freedmen in the Chickasaw Nation, and intermarried persons in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cherokee Nations, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. R. 88. Joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the preliminary estimates of cost thereof, for the construction of a ship canal, of approved width and depth, from the lower shore of Lake Michigan to the Wabash River, and for the further investigation of the practicability of the construction of such waterway—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

S. 1723. An act to permit C. R. S. Nichols to make a second homestead entry—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3155. An act for the relief of Benjamin Longpre, of Maxwell, Lincoln County, Nebr.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3171. An act to refer certain claims for Indian depredations to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 1601. An act to remit the time penalties on the light-house tender Rose—to the Committee on Claims.

Senate concurrent resolution 31:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to inform the Senate as to the cost of improving the Saginaw River from its head to a point in Saginaw Bay, with a view of securing a channel 150 feet wide and an increase of depth to 16 feet from the head of the river to the Third Street Bridge in Bay City; thence a channel 200 feet in width to the Saginaw Bay, with an increase of depth of the channel to 16 feet, said estimates to be based on the survey made pursuant to the river and harbor act of 1896—

To the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 2013; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPRINT OF A REPORT.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. BUTLER, Report No. 54 on the bill H. R. 628, was ordered to be reprinted for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House will now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] will occupy the chair.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Mr. LACEY, as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule under which this session is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire, before we go any further, to ask unanimous consent that all bills for the removal of charges of desertion and political disabilities be passed over to-night. I hope no one will object. I notice a good many meritorious bills on the Calendar, and I make this request on that account.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed there are only two such bills on the Calendar. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that on this evening bills for the removal of charges of desertion and political disabilities be not considered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move——

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement before that motion is made. I desire to know if there is any unfinished business? If there is, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no unfinished business.

And then, on motion of Mr. RAY of New York, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar under subdivision 2 of Rule XXVI, with Mr. ELLIS in the chair.

A. V. BLOODGOOD.

The first business was the bill (H. R. 2154) granting an increase of pension to A. V. Bloodgood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of A. V. Bloodgood, late a member of Company H, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $50 a month, the same to be in lieu of the pension he is now receiving under certificate No. 227029.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, no apology will be asked by the soldiers' friends of the House for occupying your time when you hear what I say.

I rise to discuss the subject of pensions with but a single thought and purpose—the good of the country and the rights of the soldiers.

I shall not enter the domain of party spirit, but will leave that field to others.

I shall content myself with presenting plain, unvarnished facts, free from all alloy of party interest; nor will I be embarrassed in this discussion by failure of proof, but only such facts will be presented as are known throughout the country and which are proven as clearly as record proof can prove—so clear, indeed, that one who runs can read.

On the evening of February 4, 1898, being the second night only for the consideration of pensions during six months of Congressional session this Congress, the chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee [Mr. RAY of New York] served notice on the House that he would attempt to defend the present "soldier policy," and thus relieve the party managers of the charge, so current and broadcast, that they had departed from a policy of liberality to the Union soldier. He said he would compare this Administration with the former. This was farfetched and voluntary.

Why he should set Mr. Cleveland up as a model I know not; no one in this Congress whom I have heard has spoken a word of praise for him, nor have I heard anyone speak for him since the ultra gold monometallists sanctioned, praised, and immortalized him in the last campaign. One who lives, as does the gentleman from New York, in a palace of glass ought not to throw stones at the houses of his neighbors.

No one ever seriously thought he would give us a comparison or make a defense of the present "soldier policy."

To those who have waited in patience and have gone to their homes disheartened and to their graves in sorrow no defense can be made.

Thousands have waited in patience against the policy of delay and procrastination that has obtained for years in the Department, and which obtains to-day more ruthlessly than ever before, while the rust of time has eaten the evidence of their claims away.

We all receive letters from old soldiers 65, 70, and 75 years of age, appealing to us with the eloquence of Union soldiers, asking us to allow their claims before they die; others, old, tattered, and worn, ask us only to consider their claims and give their minds some rest; yet with these distressing appeals, with pensions tied up in the committee and in the House as they have never been tied up before, he makes bold to threaten a comparison.

You claimed that Mr. Cleveland vetoed private pension bills. With my feelings I would not defend him; but you are doing even worse than that; you are pigeonholing them in the committee; you are delaying them in the House.

The promised defense and comparison has not been offered, and a suspicion arises that the gentleman, a New York lawyer without the finesse of "a Philadelphia lawyer," has found an inextricable Gordian knot beyond his dexterity and impossible of unravelment by mortal man. No just defense can be made. The present "soldier policy" is so tainted with deliberation, so foul with injustice, that no pretended defense will be believed. The soldiers are waiting to hear it; their widows and orphans are waiting to hear it. Make it and place assumption against proof of fact.

If you feel that it is wise to follow those who claim that the soldiers have received enough, say so as men, but do not masquerade and assume a double rôle. You can not reconcile the conflicting sentiment, and to attempt to double deal will not secure the respect of either class.

Not only have you closed the doors to the soldier, but in the very evil of your act you tell him you are munificent.

Let us see how he has fared this Congress. On March 15, 1897, the House adopted the rules of the Fifty-fourth Congress. Section 1, Rule X, reads as follows:

Unless otherwise specially ordered by the House, the Speaker shall appoint, at the commencement of each Congress, the following standing committees, viz:

On Invalid Pensions, among others, to consist of fifteen members.

Section 2, Rule XXVI, reads as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered, said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

These rules have been the fixed ones, in form but not in observance, this Congress. Let me ask the defenders of this "soldier policy" why did you not appoint the Invalid Pension Committee at the special session to consider the rights of soldiers? You appointed the Committee on Mileage and Accounts and others. Is it to be thought that the managing members of this House will appoint committees to pass upon their own claims for compensation, while adjourning for three days at a time, and deny a committee to the soldiers who saved this House of Representatives for us? A lapse of thirty-five years has indeed chilled the patriotism of the country, if this course voices its sentiment.

The above rules, with all the other drastic rules of the House, were forced through, under the operation of the previous question, on the first day of the special session in March, 1897, without opportunity for debate; forced through, as the roll call shows, against the votes and protests of all the members on this side and against the votes of the gentlemen, from Minnesota, Mr. EDDY; from Virginia, Mr. WALKER; from Wisconsin, Mr. MINOR; from Iowa, Mr. HEPBURN; from New York, Mr. MAHANY; from Kentucky, Mr. COLSON; from Michigan, Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH; from Pennsylvania, Mr. BRUMM; from New York, Mr. QUIGG; from Wisconsin, Mr. COOPER; from Massachusetts, Mr. WALKER; from Illinois, Mr. CONNOLLY; from New Hampshire, Mr. SULLOWAY; from New Jersey, Mr. MCEWAN, on the other side of the House.

I do not ascribe individual motive on those votes, but it must be true that each member, in this first registered act in the performance of his public duty in the Fifty-fifth Congress, thought that the rules thus adopted would be enforced.

These hopes were dashed to pieces, and no committee to consider soldier bills was appointed and no soldier legislation was considered during over four months of special session, and no Friday night's soldier meetings were held, as the rule required; that night was as effectually blotted out as if the day had never appeared upon the calendar.

While we should have been holding these meetings and considering this legislation we were adjourning for three days at a time; though anxious to do our duty, we were walking the streets of Washington. Who will defend this "soldier policy?"

Who moved the adjournments? The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], the leader of the majority. Oh, but it will be said that he is friendly to the soldier, and promised if they helped him to power to pass his bill, he would help them by putting money into the Treasury. The bill was passed, but the "soldier policy" still prevails.

But it may be said that the gentleman is, for sure, the friend of the veteran because he tried to make the Speaker appoint the committees. There is no better proof of the false lights set out to dazzle and allure the soldier voter; no better proof of the false banner under which the managers of this "soldier policy" are marching can be found than is seen in the House proceedings of May 3, 1897, when the leader on that side of the House [Mr. DINGLEY] moved the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Speaker be directed to immediately appoint the committees of the House.

And upon that question he demanded the yeas and nays.

So far, the leader was fulfilling his promise to the soldier, to raise lots of money, and to give him liberal pensions; he was passing his bill, and by this resolution he was trying to get committees appointed.

It seems the soldiers were willing to trust him in his promise to pass his bill, to revive the industries of New England and raise money, and it was but fair to them that they should not be delayed in pension legislation, and that their bills should be passed by the time the money reached the Treasury.

But, alas, how vain is all human hope! To the amazement of the soldiers, to whom the gentleman from Maine and his followers had promised to be fair and liberal, after moving that the Speaker should appoint committees, he voted against it himself.

After such inconsistent action, is it surprising, if true, that the great author of the Dingley bill should buy his hat in London? Members on this side, including myself, voted against this resolution, but it will be noted that the resolution offered by him, and which he voted against, provided for the appointment of all committees.

We were governed by motives that did not move the gentleman and his adherents. We would have voted to appoint the Invalid Pensions Committee, but when the country had been ravaged by the disasters that flowed from the demonetization of silver, we did not think it was safe to let you appoint all committees, among others the one on Banking and Currency, that would turn back the tide of Great Jehovah's sunshine on our Western wheatfields and still further oppress us by committing this country more thoroughly to the gold standard, which it is seen it immediately on its appointment this session started to do, under the inspiration of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Indianapolis convention.

By the action of the managers of the other side pension legislation is delayed, held up, and defeated. With the power and control you did not appoint the soldier committee, but, persistently and consistently in opposition to him, you also destroyed his Friday night meetings. When this current which you have created against the soldier will run by, no one can tell. You have set it going, and where it will stop no man can know.

What do we find this session in proof of the "pension policy?" The Senate Pension Committee passed a rule permitting no soldier to appeal to that body for relief till a year after action by the Pension Bureau, if presented to the Bureau.

The soldiers must give up one year more of their lives before relief will be given by the great lawmaking power of the Government. The same rule has been substantially enforced by the committee of this House.

The same lawmaking power that passed the act so quickly calling the soldiers to arms, now for the first time in the history of the Government commands them to wait a year, however meritorious their claims, however just, before they will give them consideration.

The Commissioner of Pensions, the Hon. H. Clay Evans, has closed the doors of the Pension Bureau to the soldiers in like cases. If a mistake is made there, or however just the remedy sought, the soldier is told that his head is off, and will remain off for a year, and he can not be heard.

This order comes to us in this form from the Pension Bureau:

Hereafter claims for increase of pensions will not be considered within twelve months from the last action—allowance or rejection.

H. CLAY EVANS, Commissioner.

Under a late rule of the Pension Bureau a pension agent or attorney who directly or indirectly solicits or procures his soldier client to get his member of Congress to call for the status of his claim suffers disbarment at the Department.

Recurring to the proceedings of the 4th of February of this year, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], in urging relief by special bill in this House in a most meritorious case, showed and said that the soldier had been denied relief at the Bureau of Pensions "because the construction there was too rigid against the soldier."

Defenders of this "soldier policy," tell me what you will say in defense of this.

What else do we find? The Appropriations Committee this session cut off a hundred names from the list of employees in the Pension Bureau, and this House passed the bill, thus putting the waiting soldiers back that much further in their wait for pension consideration, although they have been for years waiting, and are now patiently waiting.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON], than whom the soldier has no better friend, than whom no better soldier fought upon the field, has called to the attention of the House the evils of this "soldier policy," but his efforts to secure relief have been met by no feelings of comradeship by the champions of this system. They have not moved to give relief. He seems to have offended them. The "head and front of his offending" is that he is a soldier, a member of this House and of the committee, and a Democrat, and not in sympathy with this policy of defeat to the soldier. You can not convince those who have waited so long that the clerks were not needed.

This is another stroke of "soldier policy" as false as any, and it is proved by the record. You needed these clerks before, and in the former Congress voted the money to pay them. You are far behind in pension cases and you need them now. If you do not need them now, you did not need them then; and if you did not need them then, why did you vote in the Fifty-fourth Congress to continue them? This inconsistency calls for an explanation.

You can not convince the soldiers who have waited for from one to eight years that you are not far behind in the consideration of pension claims.

What else do we find? The evidence before the Appropriation Committee showed, in round numbers, that $10,000,000 more was needed to pay pensions than the committee reported and the House appropriated.

How long will the soldiers' claims be held back; how much delay will ensue from this? Is this a new idea of equity under your "pension policy?" Is this a new idea of justice to those you paid in greenbacks during the war? Is not this a denial of just rights and demands due to brave men and Americans? Let us see what else the managers in this House have done, and who is responsible for it.

On February 21, at a substituted evening for pension legislation, the members on this side of the House came to make a quorum and to pass soldier legislation. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], members of uniform courtesy, asked the chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee, in decorous thought and sentiment, if he would not expedite and quickly pass and close up that evening the pension bills of the soldiers, so that filibustering tactics could not be resorted to next day, as had been before, to hinder and delay them by the "pension-policy" managers.

The gentleman from New York, whose plain duty it was to follow this procedure, rose in his place and to his full height, and said he could not be intimidated.

Intimidated to do his duty, did he mean? "Intimidate" well and truly expressed his position, for the word implies an effort to compel one to do that which he did not want to do.

I level at no man and no set of men any charge that is not proven well.

I charge that the interests of the soldiers of the country are to-day betrayed in the house of their pretended friends.

Let me give you the proof of a conspiracy to thwart and disconcert the soldier, not a manly, open fight, as he fought, but a guerrilla, filibustering warfare, a fight in the dark, a stabbing in the back.

When I use the word "conspiracy" I mean it in no offensive sense. I only characterize a policy adopted by the managers of a party to abandon its saviors; nor do I intend any offense to any member of this body; and if I use language and terms, they are only such as clearly express a condemnation of a policy adopted by the managers of a party and carried out by its forces and instruments. The managers of this policy are controlled by an influence overpowering and oppressive.

As this House, under its rules, is controlled by its Speaker, so is the Invalid Pension Committee, as it seems, dominated by its speaker.

I make no reflection against the chairman undeserved. Let him stand on his record—on his policy. I charge it home to him. I charge only that which has been proven in this House to the satisfaction of its members; it is proven in the record of our proceedings to the satisfaction of the country.

At the beginning of this session an Invalid Pension Committee of fifteen members was appointed under the same rules under which it was not appointed at the special session, and it may be claimed that the sin of omission has now been washed away.

But how well was enforced this session the rule of Friday night meetings?

Only five in three months of Congressional session.

By what answer will you meet this dereliction? Tell me, how will you answer it?

With hundreds of Senate pension bills before our committee, with many thousands of pension bills to consider and report, the majority on this floor, against the wishes of some of its members, waited till January 28, 1898, fifty-three days from the first of the session, to give a Friday night session for soldier legislation. At that meeting the trail of the serpent was again seen in the sand.

Instead of rising and passing in the House the pension bills considered, or even moving the previous question on them, and thus securing for these little pension bills the same security in their passage as is invoked for the mighty and powerful—this rule of safety was omitted.

On February 4, the next soldier day, the managers moved to take up another bill and asked for a roll call, wasting an hour's time, but were defeated by this side of the House voting solidly against them, and joined by enough of the soldiers' friends on that side to defeat their "soldier policy" on that day by a vote of 126 to 116. Thus 116 members on that side recorded themselves against the consideration of soldier legislation. What occurred after this defeat?

They filibustered and delayed, and occupied nearly the entire day in parliamentary tactics to delay the passage of a few little pension bills, as follows: A pension to Mary W. C. Burgess, Benjamin F. Tuck, Ella D. Cross, Emily E. Atherton, James J. Gibbs, Mrs. Annie Whittenmeyer, Rosa Karger, Laura A. Barry, John Bruce, Mary J. Hart, Mrs. Christine C. Barnard, and Isabella G. Daniels.

During this filibustering the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] on that side said—I quote his words in the RECORD:

> But the gentleman also knows that, so far as I am concerned, I have always said Friday night sessions were a farce and a species of legislation that never should be enacted by anybody.

This filibustering was the result of the opening left by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] on the evening of January 28, and the soldiers suffered. A passage of the bills then or an ordering of the previous question would have saved a legislative day.

On Thursday, February 10, to get rid of another soldier day, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], as the leader, without excuse offered or other apparent motive, moved an adjournment till Monday, which, by the votes of the other side, was carried by a vote of 128 to 111, and another spike was driven in the fabric of the "soldier policy."

The Invalid Pension Committee is composed of 10 Republicans and 5 members on this side of the House.

The soldiers have no truer friends than members of this side of the House—the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BOTKIN], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON], the gentleman from California [Mr. CASTLE], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS], members of that committee.

I know Republican members of that committee who are friends of the soldier, but I say, and it is proved to the point of certainty, that the chairman is assisting the managers of the House in this "pension policy."

On Friday night, February 25, when we had met here in a less number than one-fourth of the House to consider pension bills, after passing seven bills, as every member knew, without a quorum—a usual practice—the point was made of no quorum by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN], and after the then Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], had ascertained that a quorum was not present—a fact that was known to every member while we were passing the seven pension bills above referred to—the gentleman from Mississippi withdrew the point of no quorum. Then did the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee of this House [Mr. RAY], interpose an objection to the withdrawal, and himself emphasized the point of no quorum.

Let him stand, if he can, upon this record against the soldier. That night by his action was lost to the soldier. True, he tried to shift the burden, but his Republican colleague from New York [Mr. MAHANY] well put it when he said, as shown on pages 2464 and 2466 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—I set it out as it occurred:

> Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of no quorum, under the circumstances.
> Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not seem to appreciate the fact that the count has been made and the result announced, and it is determined that there is no quorum present.
> Mr. MAHANY. That is precisely what I suspected. Some gentlemen appear to entertain a desire not to pass these bills.
> Mr. MAHANY. And I desire to emphasize the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] insisted that the point of "no quorum," even when withdrawn, blocked further legislation.

How well could the chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee, in charge of these little pension bills, have asked unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings, as in his experience many times had been done under similar conditions.

present the facts and let them speak for me. Answer the facts if you can. "By their fruits ye shall know them." It remains to be seen who will attempt to defend this programme of the managers of the House. If any do, I shall take occasion at some future time to show the sentiments expressed on the subject of soldier legislation by the great founders of your party, by statesmen living and dead, by civilians and warriors, by leaders of former years, and by members of this House, and compare them with the declarations on this floor in favor of this policy against the soldier to-day.

We will see by "the defenders" who are following the dictates of their masters. There was a tribe in Africa, the members of which, if their monarch was deformed, did not scruple to mutilate themselves, so that they might bear a similitude. When marching Indian file along the tangles and rocky places, if the chief stumbled, each in turn stumbled.

If the chairman is excused as an individual, he is charged as a follower, and probably as a partisan, with being an instrumentality in carrying out this opposition to soldier-pension legislation, and thus arrays himself against the great founders and leaders of his party in former years, as well as against some of their truest friends in his party to-day.

What further proof do we find? In the first eighty-two days of this session, to February 26, 1898, the fifteen members of this committee reported 86 of these small pension bills to the House, as against 162 bills, more difficult to investigate, reported by the War Claims Committee, composed of eight Republicans and five members on this side of the House, which committee considers claims due citizens loyal during the war, and as against 688 pension bills reported by the Invalid Pensions Committee of the Fifty-fourth Congress in the long session from December 2, 1895, to June 11, 1896, in six months, and against 257 pension bills reported by the Invalid Pensions Committee in the short or three months' session of the last or Fifty-fourth Congress, from December 7, 1896, to March 3, 1897.

One-half of this session gone and only 86 pension bills have seen the light of day to February 26 from that committee presided over by the gentleman from New York, as against 344 pension bills reported in the same time in the first session and 257 pension bills reported in the same time in the second session by the Invalid Pensions Committee of the former Congress.

With thousands of little pension bills before his committee, the chairman reports to this House the small number of 86 in eighty-two days.

Oh, but he may say that he did not have clerks enough. But the chairman is there to further just pension legislation; he is there to move the previous question; he is there to stop filibustering; he is there to serve the soldiers, and when it is found that he needs help for fifteen members to report 86 pension bills in eighty-two days, he should ask the House for help and see who would refuse it.

The chairman asked and received a clerk on February 16. Why the delay? The only excuse apparent to this House is that the committee was busy in getting out 86 bills in three months, as against 315 bills in each three months on an average in the last Congress.

This committee, after repeated requests and profert by me to the chairman, did report favorably a bill, and it passed this House, giving a battle-scarred and armless soldier a pension—one whose wife for years has pumped a hand organ on the streets of Washington while her armless soldier husband, with soldier hat and soldier uniform, solicited alms of generous people.

The people of Washington, whose charity has supported this country's ward for years, while he has been waiting, are thankful, as I am, for this small favor, large as it may seem to be under the present "soldier policy;" but I might add in passing that the same bill was introduced by Senator Voorhees and it passed the Senate in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and received at that time a favorable report from the House committee; introduced again in the Senate by the senior Senator from Indiana, Mr. TURPIE, and on December 17, 1897, it passed the Senate.

Mr. Chairman, as I speak these words I think I hear again the utterances of the gentleman from New York in response to a request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLARDY] at the evening session on February 25, when the latter asked him if he would not expedite the soldier legislation, and repeated to me on the soldier evening of March 11, when he said that "courtesies" had been shown to us by the committee.

To me it was no "courtesy," but justice, to give a pension to an armless Republican soldier, whose wife, with long, white hair, had pumped the hand organ on the streets of Washington to support him, and which soldier has for five long years sat in yonder gallery on Friday nights waiting for his name to be read by the reading clerk of the House—in this same Capitol past which he so proudly marched over thirty-five years ago on his way to the defense of his country.

If the gentleman thinks he can "intimidate" me with such a weapon of "courtesy," he will find that it is like the javelin thrown by the hand of a feeble old man; it will never reach the heart of its victim. What is the cause of this policy, so changed, so repressing to patriotism, so unjust to our soldiery? What is the cause of this change of front, change of heart? No bill for the general relief of the soldiers has been reported by the committee. None will be reported by the chairman in time to become a law, giving the soldiers or their dependents any substantial relief.

Why be niggardly to the soldiers? Why not deny to others and be liberal to the Government defenders? You in effect but a short time ago donated $6,500,000 to the Kansas Pacific Railway corporation. Had this been saved for the soldiers, it would have gone to meritorious people. A country like this can not discriminate against its soldiers. You paid them in paper dollars in the field, when you paid the bondholders in gold. You ought not to limit the soldier now, but you are doing so.

Is this a new rule of fair dealing in your high code of moral ethics?

I am moved to warn you against a "soldier policy" that dampens American patriotism and cools American ardor.

Let no man say that I am prompted by any than patriotic motives. I was not a soldier, but it is equally true that Fort Sumter was fired upon before I was born. If any man says I did not suffer, and with me loved ones, let it be hurled back at him. Go to that humble Indiana home from 1861 to 1866 and find the proof. Go to the battlefields of Shiloh, Bull Run, and Chickamauga; see who failed to answer the roll call of the Thirtieth Indiana after that last battle, and why; go to the rolls of Libby Prison and there find the record of disproval.

If not yet satisfied, go to the records of your Pension Bureau during the time of a policy more liberal than this, and then stay the gibes and taunts that are sometimes hurled at a defender of the soldiers because he is a Democrat. Go there and find the proof of your conviction.

Had I been of age the horrors of war might have deterred me, but it did not deter my father; it did not deter the thousands of brave men who responded with alacrity to the call of their country. They did their duty nobly and well, and now the nation should be grateful and generous to them. Many of you members have been here for years; you have seen the panoramic changes of legislation, but it makes the heart of a new member sink in sadness to see a party like yours turn against the soldiers.

I regret that I was compelled to take up even a little time of the House, but I felt that it was a duty incumbent upon me, as it is upon each of us, to do my best and utmost to remove the mask behind which so many who make and enforce the pension laws are hiding.

My sentiments, I know, find an echo on this side, as well as a generous response in the hearts of many on that side of the Chamber. [Applause.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 7, after the word "infantry," insert "and pay him a pension."
In line 7, strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty" in lieu thereof.
Strike out all after the word "receiving," in line 9.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DANIEL PHILLIPS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1465) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Phillips.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Daniel Phillips, late a sergeant in Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of his present pension.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, the Fifty-third Congress, which was Democratic, during its entire life, both sessions, passed 119 pension bills. This Fifty-fifth Congress thus far has had reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions nearly 200 bills. It has passed and sent to the Senate already 102 bills, carrying more money than all the 119 bills passed by the Fifty-third Democratic Congress. [Applause.] The Committee on——

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman from New York allow me?

Mr. RAY of New York. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has already reported three general bills to this House, doing, or which will do, when enacted into law, a great deal of good to the old soldiers. Now, the speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] having occupied forty minutes of the two and one-half hours we have for pension work, during which forty minutes we could have passed at least twenty-five of these pension bills giving needed relief to old soldiers, I trust that the remainder of the evening will be given to the consideration of the needs and rights of the old soldiers. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. ELLEN O'RORKE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1722) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen O'Rorke.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. Ellen O'Rorke, late a volunteer nurse in the service of the United States Army during the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "of," strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY F. HAWLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 179) granting a pension to Mary F. Hawley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary F. Hawley, widow of late Capt. John B Hawley, Company H, Forty-fifth Regiment Illinois Infantry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty," and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN J. BOATWRIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 294) granting an increase of pension to John J. Boatwright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John J. Boatwright, late of Company I, Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $30 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GRATIA H. MARTIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4435) to pension Gratia H. Martin, of Williamstown, Vt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Gratia H. Martin, of Williamstown, Vt., dependent mother of Carlos Martin, late of Company D, Twelfth Regiment of Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and of Company C, Eighth Regiment of Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and that said Gratia H. Martin be granted a pension of $12 a month as such dependent mother, subject to the provisions of the pension laws.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out the words "of Williamstown, Vt."
At the end of line 8 strike out the word "that."
In line 9 strike out the words "said Gratia H. Martin be granted a pension" and insert in lieu thereof the words "pay her a pension at the rate."
From lines 10 and 11 strike out the following: "as such dependent mother, subject to the provisions of the pension laws."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HANNAH C. PILE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5372) for the relief of Hannah C. Pile.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Hannah C. Pile, widow of Gen. William A. Pile, at the rate of $25 a month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5, after the words "William A. Pile," insert the following: "and pay her a pension."
In line 6 strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to offer the following amendment in lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee. After we had reported the bill the gentleman who introduced it furnished us with further information, which we caused to be reduced to writing, and which threw new light on the subject and shows that the widow is clearly entitled to the full rate allowed to a widow of a soldier of the rank of her husband, $30 a month. The gentleman who introduced the bill only asked $25, but in view of the evidence, which I will have printed in the RECORD, and which is true, I am directed to withdraw our amendment and offer in lieu thereof the following:

Strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The statement is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 17, 1898.

To Committee on Invalid Pensions, George W. Ray, Chairman.

DEAR SIR: In response to your request to place before your committee, in writing, my statement made to you relating to the pension of Mrs. Hannah Pile, widow of General Pile, I submit the following:

General Pile's record as a soldier and citizen is one to which his friends point with pride; there is no stain upon it. At the time of his death he was president of the city council of Monrovia, Cal. This is one of the "boom" towns of southern California, where values have fallen from "boom" prices to one-tenth the values formerly paid. All who had purchased and had deferred payments to make suffered and usually lost their property. The general was among this class, with a mortgage on his home for more than it is now worth, and loss of outside property on deferred payments.

His wife has struggled from the day of his death to pay interest on her home mortgage and to support herself. Her property could not be sold for enough to clear the mortgage. And, as a matter of fact, she has less than no property at all. She is economical, and as hard working as any woman of her age can be. She has had a continual struggle, and her mortgage has increased by unpaid interest over a thousand dollars in the past few years.

She has one son living; he is a student in an art school in San Francisco, working his way through, and can not contribute to his mother's support. She has no wealthy relatives to support her, and is well along in years, nearly 68, I believe. I have lived by the family for years, and had business relations with the general for five years. Mrs. Pile has often told me she had to depend on her chickens and bees to pay her grocer.

It is but a simple act of justice to place her on the list at as high a rate as the wife of any officer of his grade, and I sincerely trust your committee will report a $30 rating for her.

Very truly, yours,

E. M. WARDALL,
Home address, Monrovia, Cal.
(City address, 503 B street NE.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, after the word "Pile," insert the words "and pay her a pension."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to read "$30 a month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 298) granting an increase of pension to Charles McAllister.

The bill was read, as follows:

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Volunteers," insert the words "and pay him."
In line 7 strike out the words "$12 per month" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the pension."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Oliver, late a private in Company C of the One hundred and fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

F. L. BOTKIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4692) to pension F. L. Botkin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of F. L. Botkin, permanently helpless son of Amos H. Botkin, late of Company G, Third Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $90 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "to" at the beginning of the line.
Strike out the word "thirty," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH E. INGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1018) granting a pension to Sarah E. Ingham, late an army nurse.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Sarah E. Ingham, late an army nurse, at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "nurse," insert the words "and pay her a pension."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Sarah E. Ingham."

JOSEPH V. BOWIE.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph V. Bowie, late of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HANNAH LETCHER STEVENSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was Senate bill 439, an act granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Letcher Stevenson, widow of the late Brig. Gen. John D. Stevenson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Hannah Letcher Stevenson, widow of the late Brig. Gen. John D. Stevenson, at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Mrs."
In line 7, after the word "Stevenson," insert the words "and pay her a pension."
In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."
At the end of line 8 add the words "in lieu of the pension she is now receiving."
Amend the title so it will read: "An act granting an increase of pension to Hannah Letcher Stevenson."

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I trust that the amendment proposed by the committee, to strike out the word "fifty," as passed by the Senate, and change it to "thirty," will not prevail. It so happens that I have been familiar with General Stevenson and his record ever since the war. I have known him in St. Louis for over thirty years. General Stevenson was born in the State of Virginia, was educated in the State of South Carolina, and notwithstanding all his early training and his early surroundings, he was one of the first men who lined himself up in defense of the flag of his country.

He moved to the State of Missouri along in the early forties, was a gallant soldier of the Mexican war, was a captain in the famous regiment of Colonel Doniphan of the State of Missouri, achieved an early fame in the outset of our country's history, and when the war of the rebellion broke out he was a member of the State legislature of the State of Missouri. He contested with all the strength of his nature the attempt to carry the State out of the Union.

Early in 1861 he volunteered in defense of his country and became a colonel of one of the Missouri regiments. He was engaged in all the campaigns of the West, participated in all the great battles of the West, and he was promoted to command a brigade and a division. He was promoted to brigadier-general and then to major-general. He was in command at Harpers Ferry, and I hold in my hand an extract from Series I., volume 46, of the Army Records, a telegram sent to Brigadier-General Stevenson at Harpers Ferry, from Mr. Stanton, the Secretary of War, which reads as follows:

Accept the thanks of the Department for your diligence, skill, and success in the achievement mentioned in your telegram of this date.

At the close of the war General Stevenson was commissioned a colonel in the Regular Army, and resigned one or two years thereafter. This is the record of Maj. Gen. John B. Stevenson; a brighter one does not exist in the annals of the war.

It was only on the 4th day of February that this House passed a bill in favor of the widow of Major-General Leggett, whose record stands on all fours with General Stevenson's, and there is no more reason why the bill as passed the Senate should be changed from $50 to $30 a month than there was a reason why the pension granted to the widow of Major-General Leggett should have been passed at $30.

And out of over 100 pension bills passed during the last ten years, there is only one single instance of a bill having been passed at a less pension than $50 a month for the widow of an officer ranking as brigadier-general.

In this case, Mr. Chairman, there is a strong appeal to the sympathies of this Congress in view of the fact that the widow of this good old soldier is standing to-day upon the very verge of the grave, without means, and almost without friends, except the comrades of her good old hero husband. And it seems to me, gentlemen, if there is any case in the history of this pension legislation that should appeal to the judgment and sympathies of this House, it is the case of the widow of John B. Stevenson. I hope that this amendment will not prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the House to what this Committee of the Whole has just done in the case of the widow of General Pile, whose record was as brilliant as that of General Stevenson, his service as long and arduous, his widow just as poor, and almost as near the grave. And we have given her, by the vote of this House, $30 a month. That has been the rule in such a case just approved by the House. Thirty dollars a month is the full amount given to the widow of a general of the rank of General Stevenson by the general law when the death of the soldier is due to his army service.

Now, in this case there is no pretense—there can not be any—that the death of the soldier was due to his army service; and all we are giving this widow above the $8 a month that she receives under the general law now on the statute books is a gratuity granted on account of her being the widow of an officer and of her financial needs.

I know how easy it is to appeal to men on the ground of the distinguished services of an officer dead and gone. But as I have said, and will repeat it, our committee is of the opinion that a wise and conservative course in special pension legislation will enable us to do more good, to pass more bills, than to rush into anything that will savor at all of extravagant legislation.

If there has been any one serious criticism throughout the country in days that are gone, among the old soldiers, in regard to legislation of this kind, it is that we have paid a great deal of attention to rank and very little attention to suffering and needy and meritorious old soldiers who served in the ranks.

Thirty dollars a month is a good pension for this old lady. It will enable her to be well cared for during the remainder of her life. There are dozens more of this same class of bills that will come before this House for consideration, where the beneficiary is seemingly in good health, where the husband was a general officer or a colonel and rendered good service.

Put the widow in such cases on the pension roll at $50 a month, where the death of the soldier was not due to army service, and before the end of this session you will have raised a clamor among the old soldiers throughout the country against this kind of legislation that will absolutely drown out the little clamor that is raised now because you think we do not go high enough—do not go as high as we could or might in the case under consideration.

The only object we have is to be wise, to be conservative, and to have our action commend itself to all the old soldiers throughout the country who are suffering and needy, who marched in the ranks and slept on the ground beneath the sky, exposed to storms, and who when the battle was on stood shoulder to shoulder and marched right up to the muzzle of the death-dealing cannon.

You can go higher if you desire, but let me warn you that there is the same danger that has existed heretofore of raising a clamor through the country among the rank and file, based on the claim, as I said before, that we forget the private, that we forget the private's widow, and give the big pension to the brigadier-general, the major-general, the captain, and the colonel, and to their widows, when they are no more needy, no more in want, no more deserving than those who bore the title of private only, and who carried the musket, and suffered wounds and untold agonies. [Applause.]

Now, I submit this question in all fairness, in all honor and candor, to the good judgment of men possessing good judgment. I say again that we should not be taken off our feet by sentiment, for we have not one case only to deal with, but before this Congress is over we shall have a score or more of this same class of cases to deal with.

Mr. BRUCKER. What does the proof show with reference to the physical condition and pecuniary circumstances of this widow?

Mr. RAY of New York. The proof in this case shows that so far as health is concerned she is in good health for a lady of her years.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. About 80 years.

Mr. RAY of New York. She is 77, I think.

So far as property is concerned, the proof shows that she is without property. But the proof further shows, as do the statements made to the committee, that she has friends who will see her well taken care of whether the pension is granted or not.

If this were an isolated case—the only case of the kind—I would not protest should you see fit to give her a hundred dollars a month. But remember this fact—that there are dozens of cases yet to come just as meritorious as this; and remember what you did here a few moments ago with regard to the widow of General Pile, who is in precisely the same circumstances, of substantially the same age, and just as destitute, worthy, and meritorious as is this widow. Let us be consistent in our action in these cases.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, if I may.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. You spoke about a rule having been adopted. I should like to know when that rule was adopted and by whom?

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, the gentleman entirely misrepresents me. I have not said anything in my remarks about a rule or about its being adopted.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I so understood you.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word on this pension case. The statement is made here that the widow of General Stevenson is in perfect health, as far as is consistent with her age. She is now over 78 years of age, and I desire to read a word from the affidavit of Gen. John W. Noble, former Secretary of the Interior, with reference to Mrs. Stevenson:

STATE OF MISSOURI, City of St. Louis, ss:

John W. Noble, of lawful age, being duly sworn, upon his oath deposes and says: That he was well acquainted with the late John D. Stevenson; that the said Stevenson, at the time of his death, left no property or effects of any kind or description; that deponent is personally well acquainted with the widow of said Stevenson, to wit, Hannah Letcher Stevenson; that she is now more than 78 years of age, very infirm in both body and mind, and wholly without means of support, and is dependent upon the kindness of others for the necessities of life; that on account of her advanced age she is wholly unable to earn a living. And further deponent saith not.

JOHN W. NOBLE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 21st day of January, 1896. My commission expires July 27, 1900.

[SEAL.] GEO. H. SHIELDS, Jr.,
Notary Public, City of St. Louis, Mo.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if any case is worthy, if a soldier's widow should ever be provided for by the beneficent act of the House of Representatives, it should be done in this case of the widow of General Stevenson. It is true that she will not suffer. The good people of my city and State, Democrats and Republicans alike, those who fought upon either side, will not see her suffer. But she stands in the position of a poor old lady, weak and infirm in both body and mind.

She deserves, if any soldier's widow deserves, the recognition, the kindness, and the generosity of the Government of the United States. Her husband served honorably in two wars—in the Mexican war and in the late civil war. He rose to great distinction, to that of a major-general in the war of the rebellion.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. May I ask the gentleman a question? Was she the wife of the soldier during either of these wars, or both of them?

Mr. JOY. During both of these wars she was the wife of General Stevenson, and was with him much of the time during his war service. He was, I think, but 2 years older than she. They were about the same age, and were married before he went into either war. Now, I say that a woman who has stood by her husband throughout his whole life, her husband being a soldier whose record is equal to that of any soldier who fought upon either side, we, as members of Congress, should give her what we give to the others of the same rank and necessity. [Applause.]

There is no reason to cut down Mrs. Stevenson's pension. There is no reason to say to the dead Stevenson's spirit that his widow shall not be cared for equally as well as those, perhaps equally deserving, but no more so, of other generals or colonels or captains.

My friends, I trust that we will all vote against this amendment to cut down her pension from $50 to $30.

Mr. RAY of New York. If my friend will permit one word, we are not cutting her pension down, because this lady is drawing a pension under the law of only $8 per month, and $8 is all she can draw under any law now upon the statute books. When we give her $30 per month, as we propose to do by this amendment, we are increasing her pension $22 per month, simply because she was the wife of a brigadier-general; and while we do that, we are not increasing at all the pensions of thousands of widows of soldiers scattered all through this land, poorer than she, crying for bread, with no one to support them, who only get $8 per month, and who we shall leave drawing $8 per month only.

Mr. JOY. One word in reply to the chairman of the committee. There are none poorer than she; nor is she drawing a pension of one dollar as a survivor of a soldier of the late war. She is drawing $8 per month as the widow of a Mexican veteran.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the House is upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BRUCKER. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PEARCE of Missouri) there were—ayes 39, noes 37.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri demanded tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are refused, 17 members, not a sufficient number, voting in favor thereof.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I do not think the House understood the proposition. I ask that the question be put again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any misunderstanding about the proposition, the Chair will put it again.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I do not think this House understood it.

The CHAIRMAN. All in favor of tellers upon this proposition will rise and be counted.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. RAY of New York. I should like to make one suggestion here, in order that we may get along with these bills. This is a waste of time. This raises the issue with the Senate on this matter. The Senate presented a rate of $50 in such cases. The House presents the rate of $30. It will lead to a controversy and can be settled in conference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to have unanimous consent for one-half minute to speak about this.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing is in order except the taking of the vote by tellers. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I just want to make two statements. General Stevenson——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri have one minute.

Mr. BREWSTER. I object.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 39, noes 40.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the adoption of the other amendments.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division, Mr. Chairman. I should like to ask the Chairman to state the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the other amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Mrs."

In line 7, after the word "Stevenson," insert the words "and pay her a pension."

At the end of line 8 add the words "in lieu of the pension she is now receiving."

The amendments read were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BARLOW. Mr. Chairman, in view of the action just taken, that $50 is to be the rating for a brigadier-general's widow, I move the reconsideration of the action just taken on the bill H. R. 5373.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order in Committee of the Whole. It can only be done in the House.

Mr. BARLOW. May I just make a statement?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to make a statement.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I object.

ELIZA B. LOWRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7482) granting a pension to Eliza B. Lowry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Eliza B. Lowry, widow of Alexander Lowry, Company C, Eighty-third Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. M. LOUISE ANDERSON.

The next business was on the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 5994) to grant a pension to Mrs. M. Louise Anderson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of M. Louise Anderson, widow of John B. Anderson, late of Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Michigan Infantry, at the rate of $12 a month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 7, strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks for the reading of the report. The Clerk will read.

The report (by Mr. DRIGGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5994) granting a pension to M. Louise Anderson, have examined the same and all the evidence relating thereto, and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to increase from $8 to $18 per month the pension of M. Louise Anderson, of the city of Washington. This claimant is the widow of John B. Anderson, who served in Company K, Seventeenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, from February 10, 1863, to March 2, 1864, when he was honorably discharged on account of loss of right arm by reason of gunshot wound received in battle. This soldier was also shot through the left arm at the elbow.

It appears from credible evidence, which is not disputed, that the soldier suffered almost constant pain in the stump of the right arm to the time of his death; that same never fully healed; that his system was as a consequence much run down and debilitated; that his nervous system was shattered and the brain seriously affected; that he had frequent spells of dizziness; that he had a bad cough and expectorated bloody matter; that one day he fell, became unconscious, and died in about twenty days. The evidence establishes that the soldier was of good habits, free from all disease except those resulting from the wounds, and above described.

The soldier was pensioned at $36 per month only, although clearly entitled to $45 per month.

The general-law claim of the widow was denied on the ground that a "sufficient" pathological connection between pensioned and death cause was not shown. From this conclusion your committee beg leave to respectfully dissent. If a healthy man bleeds and bleeds until he dies, and is otherwise in perfect health, the fair presumption is that death results from the excessive bleeding.

In this case only one death cause was present, and only one cause of the death cause, and that a natural and probable one, existed. This was of service origin, viz, an arm shattered by a bullet, consequent amputation, consequent shock and impairment of and breaking down of the health and tissues, and resulting death.

Only a disposition not to see could prevent the ordinary medical man from seeing the pathological connection between this soldier's wound, received in the service, and his death. No other possible death cause is claimed. This widow, who was the wife of the soldier during the war, has been denied her rights at the Bureau of Pensions, and your committee feel fully justified in righting the wrong so far as possible. She is poor and very needy.

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know from the chairman of the committee what is the age and condition of this widow at this time. Is she not just as helpless and just as deserving as the widow of the brigadier-general whose pension has been increased to $50?

Mr. RAY of New York. She is as poor as a woman can be and she is as worthy as a woman can be and she is as nice a lady as ever drew breath. She is compelled to do washing, what little she can get, to earn a living. She came on here from the State of California in order to get justice. The gentleman from California [Mr. BARLOW] introduced the bill at $12 a month, and in view of the circumstances and need of this woman we increased that to $18 per month as a measure of justice to her.

The only possible distinction between this case and the bill that we have just passed is this: Mrs. Stevenson is the widow of a brigadier-general. This woman's husband did not reach that rank and this woman is not quite as old, but she lost her husband by reason of his army service.

Mr. TALBERT. I just wanted to call the attention of the committee and the country to the fact that the widows of brigadier-generals and the widows of officers generally have plenty of champions in this House, but never have I heard anyone to stand up here to champion the cause of the widows of privates.

Here is an instance. I say it is a sad commentary upon this House that whenever a brigadier-general's widow or a colonel's widow or anybody of that sort comes here, she can find champions enough, but when a poor woman who happened to be the wife of a private, who possibly was a better man by far and a brighter gem than the general—why no one can be found to do her honor or to advocate an increase of her pension.

I just wanted to say this much, and I say no more in regard to the matter. [Applause.]

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, allow me to call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina to the fact that this nation has honored the widows of brave private soldiers, and not only honored them, but has provided them "munificent" pensions to the amount of "$8 a month!" Eight dollars a month is the amount they have allowed to the private soldier's widow. They have provided for them in that way.

But, just as the gentleman from South Carolina says, you make an exception of every general's widow and every brigadier-general's widow and the widow of every officer of the Army, by giving them from $30 to $72 per month, but the widow of the poor common private you limit to $8 a month. What an outrage! Now, for the purpose of testing the magnanimity of this House and the temper of the members of this committee, I am going to move an amendment in this case and see how consistent our friends both on this side and the other side are on the question of pensions. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment to the amendment on this bill, and instead of giving this widow $18 a month, to make the amount $24. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment to the amendment of the committee, so as to strike out $18 and insert $24.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRUCKER. Division, Mr. Chairman!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 1.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID N. THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 777) to increase the pension of David N. Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension now paid to David N. Thompson, late a private of Company C, Thirty-fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and pay him the sum of $50 per month in lieu of the pension that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out the words "increase the pension now paid to," and insert in lieu thereof the words "place on the pension roll the name of."

In line 7 strike out the words "the sum of fifty," and insert in lieu thereof the words "a pension at the rate of thirty-five."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. RAY of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 777) granting an increase of pension to David N. Thompson, have carefully considered the same and the evidence relating thereto, and respectfully report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $12 to $35 per month the pension of David N. Thompson, of Horton, Iowa.

This soldier served as private in Company C, Thirty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from February 2, 1864, to July 27, 1865, when he was honorably discharged. The medical records of the Army show that the soldier had diarrhea while in the military service. He filed a claim for invalid pension December 10, 1894, under the act of June 27, 1890, alleging chronic diarrhea, palsy of the left side, and disease of nervous system. This claim was adjudicated July 23, 1895, and he was pensioned for disease of nervous system.

April 3, 1896, the soldier filed a claim for pension under the general law based upon his service aforesaid, and alleging that while in the service and in the line of duty near Savannah, Ga., on or about the 1st of May, 1865, he contracted chronic diarrhea and disease of liver.

The evidence that the soldier contracted his present disabilities in the service is unsatisfactory to the Pension Bureau, although much substantial and uncontradicted evidence has been filed to that effect, and much additional credible evidence has been filed with your committee. The soldier was in good health when he entered the service. He contracted diarrhea while in the military service, as the medical records show.

When he left the service he was much emaciated and very weak. His nervous system was shattered. The evidence shows that the claimant became overheated and suffered from brain fever in the service.

It is probably true that the disabilities of this soldier contracted in the service have resulted in his present almost helpless condition. He now has palsy or paralysis of his left side, and his nervous system is shattered, and, in short, he is substantially helpless. The soldier is very poor and has a wife dependent on him for support.

If this soldier could prove that his present disabilities are the result of his army service he would be entitled to a pension of $50 per month, as he requires the frequent and periodical attendance of another. Acting conservatively, and keeping in mind the soldier's inability to present more satisfactory proof that all his present disabilities are the result of army service, your committee believes that an increase to $35 per month is fully justified from the evidence. There can be no doubt that disease of service origin has rendered this soldier absolutely unable to perform any manual labor whatever.

The soldier is of good character, and nearly all the citizens of the place where he resides have united in a petition asking that this man's pension be largely increased. The evidence filed with your committee in addition to that at the Pension Bureau is very voluminous, and comes from citizens of respectability and high standing.

The bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 4 strike out the words "increase the pension now paid to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "place on the pension roll the name of."

In line 7 strike out the words "the sum of fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a pension at the rate of thirty-five."

Mr. TALBERT (during the reading of the report). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the report. The wonder is that he is not dead before now.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, in this connection I desire to call the attention of the House again to its action in the case of the widow of a general and its proposed action in this case, for I find nobody proposes to increase the pension of this old soldier. He marched for days in every storm that nature showered down on his head and he faced the cannon on dozens of bloody battlefields, and incurred disabilities that have prostrated him and made him helpless, and he is now without a cent to support him.

The general law gives him $12 a month, and that is all the Bureau would or could award him. Think of the service he performed for this country! Think of his sufferings! Think of the sufferings he has endured since and the suffering he endures now! Think of the poverty that surrounds his home and his wife! But I do not hear the champions of the widows of brigadier-generals, whose husbands incurred no diseases or disabilities, and who did not die because of any disability incurred in the service, crying out in favor of this old soldier or favoring an increase for him. No one asks that, but we find gentlemen use all their power for a widow, the widow of a general, who did not lose anything because of the war and whose husband drew somewhere from $3,000 to $5,000 a year from the Government for more than forty years.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I was just on the point of rising to move an amendment when the gentleman from New York rose to make his speech, and now I move to make it $50 a month. I think it has been well set forth by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that he deserves this pension, and inasmuch as we gave a pension of $50 a month to the widow of a brigadier-general we should give that amount to this old soldier.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I listened with some interest to the remarks of the chairman of the committee as he electrified the House with the statement that the soldier served in the many storms of battle, and how he moved, until the wonder was how he was living, as was the case with Napoleon Bonaparte. If I noticed the reading of the report aright, and I think I have, he enlisted on the 2d day of February, 1864, when the storms of battle had generally subsided.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Oh, no.

Mr. GARDNER. And he was mustered out in July, 1865.

Mr. SULLOWAY. When the smoke had cleared away.

Mr. GARDNER. He served a very short time in the Army—served, as I say, when the storms of battle had mostly swept by; and, as I see by the report, in a short time after he entered the Army he contracted disease, the disease which has followed him ever since.

Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, as a general proposition, those soldiers who contracted the diseases generally described in these reports early after entering the service, no matter what the records say about it, were not sound men when they entered the service. The further fact in this case is certainly clear as day that this applicant, for whom such sympathy is expressed—and I have as much as anybody—does not trace the origin of his disability to military service. I can not repeat the oratorical flourish with which it was stated here that the law only allowed him $12 a month.

Why, sir, the reason that the law only allows him $12 a month is that he applied under the act of 1890, and he made application under that law because he knew, I assume, that he can not trace his disability to military service. What pension attorney having a case applies under the act of 1890 unless he is conscious that his client can not trace his disability to military service at all?

Mr. RAY of New York. This man applied under the general law, alleging his disability to be due to service, and the Bureau denied him, and then he was driven to apply under the other law—the act of 1890. The gentleman is mistaken in saying the storms of battle had swept by in February, 1864; they were just coming on in their greatest force. This man marched all through the campaign and took part in all the battles down to Atlanta. He went from Atlanta to the sea, and marched from there up through Georgia and the Carolinas; and the committee find that in all human probability he contracted his disease and disabilities in the service. I hope the gentleman will not detract anything from what this brave old soldier did, or anything from the glory that is his due.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I will take but a moment longer. The chairman of the committee states the matter as strongly as I desired, that this soldier did apply for a pension under the law, but failed to satisfy the Department at any time that his disabilities were due to military service. That is the fact disclosed by the record.

The amendment offered by Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM D. FOOTE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4962) to pension William D. Foote.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William D. Foot, of Mattoon, Ill., of Company G, Fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay him a pension of $72 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. WARNER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4062) proposing an increase of pension to William D. Foote, have examined the same and all the evidence, and respectfully report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $12 to $50 per month the pension of William D. Foote, of Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., who served from February 22, 1864, to July 1, 1865, in Company G, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, and was honorably discharged.

He is shown by the records to have been wounded in the right elbow in battle, April 5, 1865, and to have been treated therefor in hospital.

He filed and established a claim therefor under the general law, and was pensioned at $2 from date of discharge, increased to $4 from September 18, 1880, and to $6 from November 13, 1889.

No claim has been made under the general law for any other disability, nor has any other disability been alleged as due to service in any declaration or affidavit filed in the Pension Bureau. It is probable, however, that his present condition is largely due to army service and hardships.

August 22, 1890, he filed a claim under the act of June 27, 1890, based on wound of right elbow and rupture of left groin, and was pensioned therefor and for slight deafness of both ears at $12 per month from date of filing.

Evidence filed with this committee shows that claimant has had a stroke of paralysis and is totally helpless, can not feed or dress himself, can not take food without great difficulty, can not articulate without great difficulty, and many words can not pronounce at all. His mental faculties are also greatly impaired. He has to have an attendant all the time, night and day. He is poor, his little home is encumbered in the building and loan association, and he has no income or means of support except his pension of $12 per month.

There is no pretense that his present disability is the result of his own vicious habits.

From the nature of the disease now afflicting the soldier it is evident that he can not survive long.

Your committee therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

At the end of line 4, strike out the word "Foot" and insert the word "Foote."

In line 8, strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Add, at the end of line 8, the following: "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William D. Foote."

MATTOON, ILL., January 24, 1898.

In the matter of William D. Foote, late a private in Company G, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

I hereby certify that I have this day examined the said William D. Foote, and find the following physical condition:

There is a general paralysis of the right side of the body.

He can articulate with great difficulty; many words can not be pronounced at all. Mental action very slow; can not protrude the tongue. Can not take food without much difficulty; face very slightly drawn; there is total paralysis of the right arm, voluntary motion totally lost. Fingers and hand flexed and firmly contracted; when asked to grip the hand there was not the slightest motion or contraction of the muscle to be felt. The right leg is also paralyzed, can not draw it up when extended in bed; irritation of the sole of the foot caused marked reflex contraction, voluntary motion and action lost.

Action of the heart regular, pulse 80; for the last few weeks has frequent sinkings from heart failure, unconscious for some time after each return. Has a large left inguinal hernia extending into scrotum, 5 inches long, 3½ inches broad. The mind is deranged much of the time; from the length of the time the condition has existed I think the paralysis is permanent, with indication of a fatal termination at no distant date. Mr. Foote is unable to wait on himself in any manner whatever. I am a regular practicing physician for thirty-five years; am 58 years old; served two years in the United States Navy as acting assistant surgeon during the rebellion. Have served about thirteen years as United States examining surgeon for pensions.

I have no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

This statement is without any suggestions from anyone and in my own hand, to be typewritten.

Respectfully, L. F. MORSE, M. D.

MATTOON, ILL., January 24, 1898.

In the matter of William D. Foote, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, state as follows:

J. Wesley Welker, M. D., age 44 years, and practicing physician of twenty-one years' standing, being duly sworn, says:

On the 24th day of January, 1898, I made an examination of William D. Foote, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and found him afflicted with paralysis of the right side, involving the right leg, right arm, throat, and tongue (making dilitation and articulation imperfect and difficult). His mental condition is also impaired, as he has a very vague conception as to time and events. All of which renders him totally helpless and requiring a constant attendant.

Respectfully, J. WESLEY WELKER, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 25th day of January, 1898; and I certify affiant is entitled to full credit.

N. B. Allison, being duly sworn, upon oath states as follows:

My name is N. B. Allison; age 42; reside at 1717 Wabash avenue, Mattoon, Ill.; have been intimately acquainted with W. D. Foote since 1879, and have noted by his pension certificate that he was a private in Company G, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry; have visited him upon an average of once a week since he received a stroke of paralysis about one year ago, since which time he has been entirely helpless with regard to getting into or out of bed; his mind and speech are seriously affected and gradually becoming worse, an attendant being required in his room day and night.

Prior to his receiving the stroke of paralysis I have heard him complain at times of being unable to raise his right arm to the level of his shoulder, and giving the wound in the elbow received in the Army as the cause. I have also witnessed him suffer great pain on occasion while lying upon the floor because of his ruptured condition.

In the matter of William D. Foote, Company G, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, would say I have known him for two years. I am his nearest neighbor, and live on the adjoining lot, next door to him. Our houses are not more than 100 feet apart. I was present on the 11th day of November, 1896, when he was stricken with paralysis, his present trouble. I heard the screams of his wife and ran over to see what was the matter, and found Mr. Foote unconscious. I was one of the parties who helped to carry him in. A doctor was summoned and pronounced it a case of paralysis.

I am almost a daily visitor to see him. He has to be cared for continually, both day and night. Since the day he was stricken he has been as helpless as a child. He frequently has bad sinking spells, and I look to see him die. He can only speak a few words that can be understood. The last few months he has been confined to his bed and some person has to care for him. I would further state that Mr. Foote is a poor man, and his home is mortgaged to the building and loan, and he is likely to lose it unless he gets relief. My age is 36 years. Residence, Mattoon, Ill.

In the matter of William D. Foote, Company G, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, would state that I have stayed with the said Foote constantly, day and night, since the 7th day of May, 1897, with the exception of three weeks' time during which I was away.

Some one has to constantly watch, lift, and care for him. He is almost as helpless as a babe. He can only use one hand and leg, and can not talk to make his wants known. It takes one person all the time, and part of the time two, to care for his wants. He has sinking spells and the doctor has to be called. I have expected to see him breathe his last with these spells. His wife is a small, weakly woman, and as it takes a man person to lift and handle him, and he requires constant attention, he has to hire some one to be in attendance. He is poor, and his little home is in the building and loan. He has no income save his pension, under the law of 1890, at $12 per month.

I am 51 years of age; by occupation, house lather; post-office, Mattoon, Ill.

Mr. DRIGGS (during the reading of the report). Mr. Chairman, I move that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the report of the committee by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting "seventy-two." I believe the time has come when, if we propose to pension anyone, we should pension the soldiers absolutely helpless, and who can not take care of themselves or their families, and this man is in that exact condition. This man is partially, if not entirely, paralyzed; he can not feed himself; his home is encumbered, and he is in poverty.

I say that is the kind of a man the Government should give the full limit. Raise him from $50 to $72 a month and you are doing what is right by the men who stood by the flag. I say these are the men who should be taken care of more than the widows of generals. They are the men who went out and fought the battles, and went through the hardships, and when they are laid down by disease and can not take care of their families, then is the time that we should give them the full limit.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be on the committee amendment. If that is voted down, it would give the pensioner the amount of $72 in the original bill.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I was the author of this bill. I introduced it and had it referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I introduced it for the reason that the Pension Office had adopted a rule of $72 as the proper measure for persons totally disabled. I had occasion to go to this man's home before I came to this session of Congress, and made an investigation to satisfy myself.

I interrogated his nurses and those with him and three physicians, and I found him in this condition from personal inspection as well as by facts obtained from these parties. He is totally helpless, as helpless as a child 10 days of age. He can not speak, he can not move his hands, can not turn over in bed, can make no expression, directly or indirectly, either by speech or motion. He is in that helpless and unfortunate condition, and so I introduced the bill for this amount.

Mr. TALBERT. What is the reason he could not get a pension from the Department?

Mr. RAY of New York. Because his disabilities are not due to service.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HUNTER] has the floor.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] is speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois yielded to the gentleman from New York to answer a question.

Mr. RAY of New York. It all rests upon this proposition. The United States through its Congressional action has said that a soldier who incurred his disability in the service, and is now totally helpless, and needs the constant aid and attendance of another shall draw a pension of $72 a month. This man is in that condition, but his disease, his present condition, is not the result of army service.

It is not due to his service in the Army, and while we gave him $50 because of his helpless condition, we maintain the distinction, that all sensible men who think will maintain, between those who were shot to pieces in battle and those who have incurred their disease and disabilities from some other cause long after the war was over. I trust the gentleman will keep that distinction in his mind, although he will not find me the one to oppose the giving of all any soldier deserves in accordance with the law written upon the statute book or the plain principles of common sense and humanity.

So long as this committee does not have the amounts recommended by it cut down I shall be content, and when this House sees fit to increase the amount that we report, I shall be satisfied, because you will not charge the committee, or its chairman certainly, with indulging in unwise and extravagant pension legislation.

I want to say to my colleagues on the Republican side, and I will say it to you gentlemen on the Democratic side, that extravagant legislation is something that will come back to trouble you, and to trouble us all, when the cry goes out through the country that it is indulged in, and I repeat, that to-night we give the widow of a brigadier-general, who did not lose her husband because of any army service, more pension than we give to the old soldier shot to pieces on the battlefield or to his deserving widow. This is not generally approved, and can not be, by the privates, by their widows, or by the masses of our people who want justice and liberality, but consistency and equality, all things considered.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I regret exceedingly, Mr. Chairman, to break in upon the action of this committee and to talk at all upon any of these questions, for the simple reason that more good could be accomplished if we were to accept at once the reports of the committee and pass bills as they are reported to the House. This case, however, is one that came under my own observation, and, having examined the testimony, I am impelled to say that if ever there was a case showing absolute, positive inability to support one's self—nay, more, a case of absolute helplessness, so that the most puerile and weak infant on the face of God's earth is not the care that this man is—here we have such a case.

But, Mr. Chairman, we have followed a line, not a rule, and made a general proposition. Why? I speak now in the presence of a number of the men upon the Invalid Pensions Committee. We did this solely because we could not procure a higher rating from the majority of that committee.

Mr. Chairman, if the Congress of the United States would do an honest thing toward the soldiers of this country—if it would do a manly thing—90 per cent of all the claims that now come before us would not be here at all. I have listened to the chairman of our committee, and I wonder that he has not seen the facts of the case in another direction.

I stood on the floor of this House in open session and called attention to the fact that thousands—nay, hundreds of thousands—of the soldiers of this land—men who stood in the front of the battle, men who from the hour that the dove of peace came upon this country at the close of the war have gone through pain, misery, humiliation, and poverty—are rejected at the Pension Office for the very same reason given for rejecting the application of this man and others who come here for relief by private bills—because they are unable to prove that their diseases and their wounds were received in the line of duty and in the service of the country.

Mr. Chairman, it is useless to blame the chairman of this committee. The differences between him and myself, perhaps, on these measures are as wide as the sea. But I desire to pay him this compliment—and I speak it sincerely—that no man has ever worked harder than he; nor has any committee ever appointed by the House worked more faithfully than this committee. Yet I find that much of his work does not follow the line in which I should labor.

If this committee could be called together and could give an honest service pension, removing the barriers of the existing law, breaking down some of the inefficient, indecent, inhuman rules of the Pension Office, we should not be disturbed here on this floor by appeals in cases of this kind.

I desire to resent a remark made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT]. I know he did not mean what the words of his remarks would imply; but he said that he had never heard any man raise his voice upon the floor of this House for the privates in the service of the Union. I beg to say to him that within two months of my coming on this floor I was made a target to be shot at; nay, more, to have my words misconstrued and to have a majority on the other side of the House put words in my mouth that I had not uttered, but, on the contrary, had disclaimed, solely because I was making a fight, not for the generals, but for the privates in the service of the United States. I desire to resent that imputation.

Nor do I believe that all of you who are here to-night voting increases of pensions are sincere. If you are, then be as earnestly sincere in meeting the questions which are to follow. And remember to be just as sincere if any committee should have the courage to dare to bring upon this floor a bill, which I have said in open House I disbelieved you will ever do, granting a fair and just service pension.

I repeat here to-night that the soldiers of the United States will not believe in your professions of sincerity, in your declared intentions to do good to them, until you shall equalize matters for the benefit of those who do not come here aided and abetted by friends upon the outside—men who can not reach you, but whom you can reach by the amendment of your laws, making the proof in a pension case no more difficult or exacting than the evidence required in the courts of the land.

I repeat it now that there are soldiers who carried the flag to the front, who never were in hospital an hour in their lives, who may not have been wounded, but who came home from the war physical wrecks—courageous, honest, sincere, proud-spirited men, not even asking of this Government anything except an honorable discharge, but who to-day are mendicants upon the streets or inmates of soldiers' homes, under the rule of a military discipline as galling as the chains of slavery, and bound to remain there, because they can not prove that their wounds or diseases are of service origin. Under the rule of the Pension Department the witnesses necessary to prove a case would have ofttimes to be sought for either in hell or in heaven, for they are not upon earth. Yet you are still demanding that applicants shall make such proof.

I beg you, gentlemen, from this time on be sincere. Wherever you find a man totally helpless, a man who wore the blue—I care not whether he received his disease in service or not, help him. This Government is not so poor—and God knows it is not so measly mean, if it can break loose from those influences that absorb to themselves the wealth of the country—that it can not take care of every soldier who has lost his health or received serious injury in the service of the United States. No taxpayer East, West, North, or South will ever complain of the tardy justice you may do to these men.

I am in favor of passing this bill at $72 a month. I so voted in the subcommittee; I so reported to the full committee. The line which we have followed has been wholly because of a custom in our committee, not a rule, which has grown up in favor of cutting down these allowances.

I appeal to you to be as generous in one case as in another. Do not allow yourselves by reason of any pique or humor to do injustice to the soldiers of this land, for it is not through pique or humor or avarice that this House can work its way to the approbation of the American people so long as it lifts its hand against the soldier or refuses to cast its vote in his interest by an amendment to the general pension laws. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, since I have been a member of this body, for three terms, I have missed hardly a single Friday night session, and I can truthfully say that I have never stood up in the presence of this body and opposed a single pension for a true and tried old veteran soldier whose services I thought demanded recognition at the hands of the Government, but I have always opposed fraudulent and unmeritorious claims. During that term of service, I repeat it, the champions have appeared here generally in the interest of brigadier-generals, colonels, and majors, and their widows, and not in the interest of the private soldier and his widow. [Applause.]

I repeat it, the gentleman from Ohio to the contrary notwithstanding. If he has raised his voice, I have never heard it, in defense of the private soldier. He may have done so, but I believe this is the first time I recollect seeing him here to attend a Friday night session, and if he has ever raised his voice for a private soldier here or his widow, I have failed to hear it. Now, I would not do him any injustice, but I repeat and reiterate that it is a sad commentary upon this House, that it is a fact—and you may take the records of the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses up to date, leaving out the Fifty-fifth, because possibly I go too far to say Fifty-fifth—and you will find that 50 or 75 per cent of the pensions granted are to the widows of officers at from fifty to a hundred dollars a month, and in hardly any instance have we increased the pension of the widow of a private soldier above $12 per month. You will find the record true in that regard.

Now, I know the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] made a long-winded speech upon pensions in a general way, charging fraud, possibly, getting tangled up with "most" and "many." [Laughter.] I do not know that that did the soldiers any good.

There has been a good deal of wind spent here praising the old soldiers. [Laughter.] But, my good friends, what I mean is this: That when you come to find a man championing a soldier's widow, it has generally been the widow of some man who wore the epaulettes, and not of the men who stood in the trenches, not the men who met each other in the red blaze of battle, but the general, who was far behind, possibly in a bomp-proof position, who never did anything. I say their widows have found champions here, but the widows of private soldiers have not found them, as a general thing, since I have been a member of this Congress, and I repeat it.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, only a question. I see by the report that this officer was one of the men who entered service on the 22d of February, 1864, just after the draft. I wanted to inquire if the chairman of the committee is acquainted with the case and whether the evidence shows that he was drafted or not?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, he was not a drafted man.

Mr. GARDNER. What is the evidence? Out of six cases that I have had certified lately, who went into the service upon that date, five of them were drafted.

Mr. RAY of New York. Does the gentleman mean five bills for the relief of soldiers reported from this committee?

Mr. GARDNER. I say that in six cases of gentlemen who entered the service on the 22d of February, 1864, five of them proved to be drafted men. It was after the draft in January of that year. I simply make the inquiry.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to know what I am answering first. I do not understand the gentleman to say that any bill reported from this committee in this Congress has been to increase the pension of a drafted man.

Mr. GARDNER. I was asking the question of the chairman of the committee. We had a case a while ago of this particular date, and now we have one here, and in neither case is the fact stated. I ask for the fact; that is all.

Mr. RAY of New York. You have stated in connection with your question that you found, out of six cases——

Mr. GARDNER. I said in the case of six gentlemen, not in connection with bills here, but in six cases that I had occasion to inquire into recently, of men who had entered the service on that date, five of them had gone in under the draft of January of that year.

Mr. RAY of New York. I desire to say this: I think I understand the gentleman, and if I do not seem to, he will correct me. I will say that this man was not a drafted man. He was an enlisted man.

Mr. GARDNER. The report does not show his age at all. The simple fact remains that he went in in February, 1864.

Mr. RAY of New York. I think the evidence here does show his age.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know what the evidence may show with reference to his age; but he is about 55 or 56 years of age, as I understand.

Mr. GARDNER. He was old enough to have entered the Army at the beginning of the war.

Mr. HUNTER. Yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. I desire to say to the gentleman that I will take occasion to say, and say it now, that we have reported no bill from our committee granting a pension or an increase of pension to a drafted man thus far. The cases have been of men who enlisted and served their country faithfully and well. No such case as is referred to by the gentleman has come up here, and of course when the gentleman referred to cases that he had looked into, he did not mean to indicate that they were cases reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. GARDNER. I should like to say distinctly that the cases were not before the committee. I do not mean to intimate that there are no cases in which the pension of a drafted man ought not to be increased. I would not agree to that proposition.

Mr. RAY of New York. I have not said that.

Mr. HUNTER. This is not a drafted man.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is on the amendment to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-two." Voting down the amendment will be equivalent to restoring the original figure of $72 a month and adopting the amendment will reduce the amount to $50 a month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the other amendments recommended by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he will not now move that the committee rise and report these bills to the House, so that we may pass them this evening?

Mr. RAY of New York. We can pass these bills to-night, even if we report a few more. Let us do all we possibly can.

Mr. CLARDY. We have only twenty minutes now.

Mr. RAY of New York. We have proceeded so slowly to-night that we can dispose of every one of these easily, even if we pass a few more bills through the committee, if they do not give rise to discussion.

JOHN W. CHANNING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1442) granting an increase of pension to John W. Channing.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $30 per month, the name of John W. The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "at the rate of $30 per month."

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the following: "and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words "under certificate numbered two hundred and thirty-five thousand and seventy-three."

The amendments were agreed to.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out the word "Miss."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BETHIAH H. ROLLINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3179), granting a pension to Bethiah H. Rollins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Bethiah H. Rollins, late an army nurse, at the rate of $12 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 6, after the word "nurse," insert the words "and pay her a pension."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FREDERICK G. MOORE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1295) to increase the pension of Frederick G. Moore, late of Company I, One hundred and fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Frederick G. Moore, late of Company I, One hundred and fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 4, strike out the words "pay to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "place on the pension roll the name of."

In line 6, after the word "infantry," insert the words "and pay him."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I now give notice, before moving that the committee rise, that in the House I shall demand the yeas and nays upon Senate bill 439. I shall move the committee amendment and demand the yeas and nays, and have that question settled by the House itself.

Mr. GARDNER. Why, the committee amendment was lost. How are you going to get the yeas and nays on it?

Mr. CLARDY. If you do that, you will not get these bills through to-night.

Mr. RAY of New York. I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The notice just comes too late.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. LACEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ELLIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration various bills under the special rule and had directed him to report them favorably, some with amendments and others without amendments, as follows:

Without amendments: S. 1465, S. 294, S. 1111, and H. R. 7483. With amendments: H. R. 2154, H. R. 1722, S. 179, H. R. 4435, H. R. 5372, H. R. 298, H. R. 1540, H. R. 4692, H. R. 1018, S. 439, H. R. 5994, H. R. 777, H. R. 4962, H. R. 1442, S. 1200, S. 3179, and H. R. 1295.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill (S. 439) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Letcher Stevenson, widow of late Brig. Gen. John D. Stevenson (reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole) be passed by and that we dispose of the other bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill just read may be passed by for the present. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CADETS TO MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMIES.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 15) to prevent the appointment of cadets to the Naval or Military Academy of the United States from States, Territories, or districts in which said cadets do not reside, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 3, after the word "cadet," to insert "excepting the cadets appointed at large;" in line 8, after the word "cadet," to insert "excepting the cadets appointed at large;" and in line 15, before the word "prior," to strike out "two years" and insert "one year;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no cadet excepting the cadets appointed at large shall be appointed to, or received into, the Naval or Military Academy of the United States of America from any State, Territory, or district in which such cadet does not actually reside at the date of his appointment; and any such cadet, excepting the cadets appointed at large, in addition to being an actual and bona fide resident of the State, Territory, or district from which he is appointed and to which he is accredited at the date of his appointment and reception into the Naval or Military Academy of the United States of America, shall also have been an actual resident of the State, Territory, or district from which he is appointed and to which he is accredited for a period of one year prior to the date of his appointment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF GIRLS IN THE DISTRICT AND TERRITORIES.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2880) to raise the age of protection for girls in the District of Columbia to 18 years.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that if any person shall carnally know any female between the ages of 16 and 18 years, out of wedlock, in the District of Columbia, such carnal knowledge shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and the offender, being convicted thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for a term not exceeding eleven months and twenty-nine days, or fined not exceeding $200, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment; and that the act shall not be construed as repealing or modifying any statute relating to rape.

Mr. HOAR. I know that the legislation for the District of Columbia is ordinarily kept distinct from that of the Territories, but I desire to propose an amendment, which I have no doubt will be approved by everybody, making the bill apply to the Territories, instead of it being merely a separate statute for the District. I will ask the Senator to accept the amendment by inserting the words "or in any Territory of the United States." The matter has been before the Judiciary Committee, but they referred it to the Committee on the District of Columbia, that being the proper place for it. If the Senator has no objection, I should like to move that amendent.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I move to insert in line 5, after the words "District of Columbia," the words "or in any Territory of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to raise the age of protection for girls in the District of Columbia and the Territories to 18 years."

REIMBURSEMENT OF THE STATE OF WYOMING.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to call up the bill (S. 3140) to reimburse the State of Wyoming for money expended by the Territory of Wyoming in protecting and preserving the Yellowstone National Park during the years 1884, 1885, and 1886; which was passed over on the Calendar yesterday in my absence.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the State of Wyoming $7,780.44, and appropriates that sum, being the actual amount paid out by the Territory of Wyoming during the years 1884, 1885, and 1886 for expenses incurred in preserving the formation, natural curiosities, and objects of interest in the Yellowstone National Park, through patrolling, policing, and governing, after it was declared a national reservation and before United States troops were placed therein for its protection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator explain how the expense was incurred? There seems to be no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. WARREN. There is a report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let the report be read. The bill was called up yesterday when the Senator was absent, and I asked that it might go over without prejudice because there was no printed report with the bill and therefore I could not tell anything about it.

Mr. WARREN. I can explain the bill in a few words.

The Yellowstone National Park was set apart from the public domain in 1872, but no appropriations were made to care for it. There was no appropriation for the pay of a superintendent even for some seven or eight years. In 1882, I think it was, an appropriation was made for the pay of a superintendent, but nothing was otherwise provided for the care of the park. It was about 1883 when a law was passed providing that upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior upon the Secretary of War troops might be detailed. In the meantime, early in 1884, when travel was rapidly increasing, the park becoming well known, no sufficient appropriation having been made for taking care of the park, and spoliation going on, the Territory of Wyoming was appealed to to assist in taking care of it.

After considerable correspondence between the executive of Wyoming, the Delegate in Congress, and the Interior Department, the legislature responded by appropriating $8,750, and sending its agents and officers to care for the park until later, when the Government took practical and effective care of it by installing there a troop of cavalry. The purpose of this bill is to pay back to the State the amount of money that was so expended.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Interior Department recommend the passage of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. The bill has not been submitted to the Department of the Interior, as it did not seem necessary. It went before the Senate Committee on Claims, and the present chairman of that committee [Mr. TELLER] was Secretary of the Interior at the time when these transactions occurred.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. TELLER. Some days since the bill (H. R. 1595) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, was amended by the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives. It deals with a matter touching our Western irrigation question, and is now in the House with the amendments of the Senate, which have not been acted upon. I ask an order of the Senate that the House may be requested to return the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado that the bill referred to by him may be recalled from the House of Representatives? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

ADJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNTS WITH PUBLIC-LAND STATES.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 361) fixing times when, regulating the manner in which, and declaring the character of the accounts between the United States and the several public-land States relative to the net proceeds of the sales and other disposition of the public lands made and to be made therein by the United States, which shall hereafter be stated and certified to the Treasury Department for payment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That bill will excite considerable discussion. It involves probably five or ten millions of dollars, and it can hardly be disposed of under the five-minute rule. I am obliged to object to unanimous consent for its present consideration. If the Senator moves to take it up, and if the Senate wishes to consider it now, that is another matter; but, I repeat, it can not be disposed of under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say that this bill, being the unfinished business, will come up at 2 o'clock, and I shall endeavor at that time to have the Senate consider it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill.

EUNICE TRIPLER.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1101) for the relief of Eunice Tripler, widow of Charles S. Tripler.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Mrs. Eunice Tripler, widow of Surg. Charles S. Tripler, United States Army, $3,000, for services by Charles S. Tripler in his lifetime in preparing, superintending, and directing the publication of a manual for the medical officers of the United States, and provides that the payment of that sum shall be a bar to any further claim against the Government for the use of the book herein referred to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JULIUS A. KAISER.

Mr. HANNA. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1227) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information, subject to objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Julius A. Kaiser upon the retired list of the Navy, in the grade of passed assistant engineer, as of the date he was entitled by law or navy regulations to examination for promotion from assistant engineer to said grade.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report accompanying the bill will be read, at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. HANNA March 10, 1898, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1227) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

Bills similar to this have heretofore been considered by the Committees on Naval Affairs of the House and Senate during the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, and Fifty-fourth Congresses, and the facts and conclusions thereon fully ascertained and reported by both Houses.

Your committee again recommend the passage of this bill for the reasons set forth in House Report No. 490, first session Fifty-fourth Congress, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1897) for the relief of Julius A Kaiser, submit the following report:

Similar bills with this one have heretofore been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House and Senate during the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fifty-first, and Fifty-second Congresses, and the facts and conclusions thereon then fully ascertained and reported to both Houses.

Your committee, after fully considering the whole case, ask leave to adopt the report submitted by them in the Fifty-second Congress, and again recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 2346, Fifty-second Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bills (H. R. 1303 and H. R. 5097) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arise will be found stated in House Report No. 534, Forty-eighth Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended as a part of this report. Your committee concur in the conclusions stated in these reports and report back the bill (H. R. 1303) and recommend its passage, and ask that H. R. 5097, of similar import, be laid on the table.

[House Report No. 534, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1318) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

Julius A. Kaiser is now an assistant engineer on the retired list of the Navy, having been retired on the 8th day of July, 1873, for disability incident to the service. It appears that the injury by which he was incapacitated for active service was a compound fracture of the forearm, received on January 1, 1870, while making some repairs to the machinery of the U. S. S. Ashuelot. Although injured on January 1, 1870, he was not ordered before the retiring board until July, 1873, a period of three and one-half years, during all of which time he continued on duty on the Asiatic station.

Long before the time of his retirement he had completed the sea service required by regulation of the Navy Department to entitle him to promotion, but by reason of his absence in the Asiatic station, and for other causes not involving fault on his part, he was not examined for promotion.

Had he been so examined for promotion he would, under section 1562, Revised Statutes, have been entitled to the pay of an assistant engineer from the date of completion of the sea service required by the regulations of the Navy Department.

He completed the sea service on the 19th day of January, 1870, and was consequently entitled to the pay of a passed assistant engineer from that date, but for the fact that his absence on duty prevented his examination.

It appears that the other officers of his date, while not actually promoted until 1874, were given rank and pay under the section above referred to from the time they became entitled—one from the 19th of October, 1869, the other from the 31st of March, 1870.

Mr. Kaiser's record in the service is exceptionally good. He graduated first in his class at Annapolis and served with distinction throughout the war, having much service on the monitors, which was justly considered the most arduous character of service.

It seems to your committee that Mr. Kaiser is entitled to be put in the position which his actual service entitled him at the time of his retirement, and of which only the requirements of the service, and no fault of his own, deprived him, viz, to be promoted to passed assistant engineer from the date from which he was entitled by law and regulation to the rank and pay of that position.

Your committee therefore recommend the adoption of this report and the passage of the bill as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORLANDO J. HOPKINS.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3737) granting an increase of pension to Orlando J. Hopkins. The Senate committee have not amended the House bill. The beneficiary is in a very precarious condition and is liable to die before the bill becomes a law.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Orlando J. Hopkins, late first lieutenant Company A, Fifty-ninth Ohio Infantry, and captain and commissary of subsistence, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3729) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this bill, as its title indicates, proposes to make further provisions for a civil government in the District of Alaska. The Territory of Alaska was discovered by a Russian lieutenant in 1741, and ceded to the United States by the treaty of 1867. The proclamation of ratification of that treaty by this Government is dated June 20, 1867. The Government did not undertake to legislate in any manner for the District until 1872. In that year an act was passed extending the customs laws to Alaska, prohibiting the importation of firearms and distilled spirits, prohibiting the killing of fur-bearing seals, except under certain specified conditions, conferring upon the district courts of the United States in California, Oregon, and the Territory of Washington jurisdiction over the District. It likewise authorized what subsequently became known as the seal contract, authorizing the killing of seals and the renting of the islands of St. Paul and St. George to the Alaska Commercial Company.

Thenceforward certain provisions were made from time to time for the government of the Territory in an incidental way in the appropriation acts, but no definite or distinct effort obtained in the direction of furnishing civil government for the country until 1884. The act of 1884 merely authorized the appointment of a governor for Alaska and devolved upon him certain limited functions. He was made commander-in-chief of the militia, but the country did not contain any militia. He was made governor without revenue, without a legislative assembly, and without any other function, as far as could be determined, except to commute sentences in certain cases until the will of the President of the United States could be ascertained in the premises. He was likewise required by law to report annually the action of the companies authorized to fish and to kill seals in the North Pacific Ocean and in Bering Sea.

A judge was appointed for the District under the law of 1884, and the general laws of Oregon as they existed in 1884, the date of the passage of the act, so far as they could be properly made applicable, were applied to that District. It so happened that there had not been any revision of the laws of Oregon for many years prior to 1884, and consequently the courts and the commissioners attempting to administer the law were of necessity required first to look at the revised statutes of Oregon and then to consult the various session laws of that State passed between the time of revision and the year 1884.

Such confusion existed, first, in the attempt to determine what the laws of Oregon really were at a given date, and second, to determine how far the law could be applied to Alaska, that no officer ever made any very accurate application of the law or determined exactly what it meant as applicable to that District. The result has been a very feeble and unsatisfactory administration of justice in that country.

The committee, when called upon to direct its attention to the betterment of the government of the District, was first confronted with the question as to whether or not a legislative assembly should be provided, or whether a delegate in Congress should be allowed from the District.

After careful consideration of the question presented, the committee determined that it would be, for the present, inexpedient and unwise to attempt to create a legislative assembly to provide for the local needs of the District. Its immense area, the manner in which the population is scattered over the country, the unsettled condition of the population, the unknown problems of the future as to what may be expected in the way of definite, permanent settlement, and the limited means of communication seemed to forbid for the time being serious consideration of a legislative assembly for the District.

For instance, the District of Alaska contains 581,000 square miles. It is nine times as large as New England. It is five times as large as the States of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland. It is two and one-quarter times as large as Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Kentucky, and Tennessee. It is two and one-quarter times as large as the States of Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and Florida. It is within a few square miles in area of the size of Nevada, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Nebraska, and Montana. It is larger than Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas. If you multiply the area of Texas, that imperial Commonwealth, by 2, you can then add the whole area of New England to the geographical division thus created, and those States combined may be set down within the center of the District of Alaska and not touch the edge at any point.

The population of the country, so far as the Indians are concerned, in the interior is essentially nomadic. There have been Russian traders in that region for over a hundred years. The number of American citizens in the interior, up to a very recent date, was quite limited. Owing to the discovery of gold in paying quantities during the last two years, a great rush of persons into the District from all over the world has been witnessed. How long these numbers may remain as large as at present or to what extent this tide of immigration may swell in proportions no one at the present time can predict with any degree of accuracy.

It seemed to the committee that the attempt to hold an election in Alaska during the gold excitement would be something like holding a general election at a circus. If places were fixed for the polling of votes at a given camp thirty days in advance, it might happen that the two, three, four, or five thousand votes anticipated as likely to be cast there would entirely disappear before the day of election. The cost of attempting to hold an election in the country would be problematical, but certainly very great. For these reasons the committee determined, for the time being at least, that it would not be wise or expedient to have a local legislature.

In view of that conclusion and the lack of local government which naturally followed from it, it became clearly obvious that no provision could be made for the execution of the laws through a governor who was not provided with any revenue or any legislative assembly to enact laws. Consequently the present somewhat unsatisfactory government seemed better suited to the situation if elaborated and made somewhat more elastic than any other we could for the time being devise. Hence the governor was continued, his duties being practically left under the bill here presented as under existing law, with the exception of a provision authorizing him, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to make a contract with one or more asylums west of the Rocky Mountains for the care of the insane of the District.

The bill then provides that the District of Alaska shall constitute one judicial district. The District is divided by the bill into three subdivisions. One of the judges will be required to reside at Sitka, in the southeastern part of the District. Another will be required to reside at St. Michaels, near the mouth of the Yukon River in Bering Sea. Another judge will be required to reside during his term of office at Circle City, on the Yukon River, a short distance west of the international boundary line. A clerk and United States attorney is provided by the bill for each court. The jurisdiction of each subdivision of the court is made coextensive with the limits of the District.

Mr. GRAY. Of the whole District?

Mr. CARTER. Of the whole district. That was done because of the total inability of the committee to determine accurately any definite geographical lines which could be established as lines of demarcation readily ascertainable if we attempted to subdivide the district into various judicial districts.

In order to overcome the difficulty which might obtain in case of a suit being commenced, for instance, at St. Michaels in a division of the court against a person residing 1,200 miles distant at Circle City, the bill provides for the transfer of causes from one district to another in any one of a number of contingencies on the application of the defendant, and causes may be transferred, as provided by the bill, on the motion of the court where it appears that the action was commenced at a point remote from the residence of the defendant.

Under existing law the United States commissioners are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. In a country destined to expand, with the incoming of a mining population, with great rapidity, it was concluded that a larger number of commissioners might be required for the various settlements than the foresight of Congress might be able to provide. Consequently the appointment of the commissioners has been transferred to the judges of the courts, and the commissioners are taken from the salaried list and are paid by fees. Their jurisdiction is similar to the jurisdiction of United States commissioners, and in addition they shall be vested with the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, as provided by the laws of the State of Oregon. They will be, under certain conditions, authorized to grant writs of habeas corpus returnable before the district judge. Their jurisdiction in civil matters is extended to $1,000 in suits not involving title to real estate.

An extension of the number of deputy marshals is authorized by the bill. It is provided that there shall be three chief deputy marshals of the District, who shall attend each subdivision of the contemplated court. The chief deputy marshals are to be vested with power, in the absence of the marshal, to appoint deputy marshals, and the appointment shall be practically the act of the marshal through the chief deputy. This departure from all precedents was deemed necessary because while the marshal is to be located at Sitka, it might occur during midwinter, when access to the marshal's office would be forbidden by natural obstacles, that additional deputy marshals would be required to aid the court in the execution of process in the interior of the country at Circle City. The bill anticipates such contingencies by providing that the chief deputy marshal assigned to any division shall have power to appoint deputy marshals when required so to do by the court.

The United States commissioners will be ex officio justices of the peace and invested with certain probate jurisdiction under the pending bill, and they are to be compensated for their services upon the fee system rather than the salary system as it obtains at present for this reason: We can not contemplate the number of mining camps and settlements. We can not foretell with any degree of accuracy the number of communities destined to spring up on the various rivers and streams in this country during the next twelve months; therefore it is clearly beyond our view accurately to determine the number of commissioners to provide for by law when compelled in connection with the work to provide appropriations for their salaries.

Within recent time information has come to the committee of mineral discoveries and developments on the great Tananah River, extending from the summit of the mountains down to the Yukon River, at the town of Weare on that stream. What is known as the Koyukuk, extending to the northeast from the Yukon, has become the scene of considerable mining activity, and it will occur, I take it, that mining settlements will spring up along the shores of Bering Sea and the rivers tributary to it north of the Yukon.

The judge of the court residing near by can respond to the demands of these various communities, as they spring up, by appointing a United States commissioner to reside there. This commissioner will not necessarily be a person giving his entire time to the work of the commissioner's office, but the country merchant or the tavern keeper or any citizen interested in the preservation of law and order in the community may, upon petition of the citizens, be appointed by the judge of the court a commissioner. The marshal will appoint a deputy marshal for such settlement, and thereupon the justice of the peace, the United States commissioner, and a deputy marshal will be promptly appointed to administer the law and preserve the peace in each and every community. There are many abuses connected with the fee system, but it seemed to the committee, under all the circumstances, necessary to have a flexible system which would respond to the growth of this unknown region.

Another feature of the bill that is of some moment is the provision that the section of the Revised Statutes prohibiting the use of the United States Army as a posse comitatus is expressly repealed as to the District of Alaska. It will be difficult to maintain courts, to enforce the rights of property, and to protect persons in that country unless some force exists behind the court capable of executing its process. It is believed that no injury will result from allowing such United States troops as may be stationed in that Territory on proper occasion to be called to the aid of the United States marshal when an exigency arises. It is believed that the government provided for in this way by fees as to the minor officers will be in a great measure self-sustaining.

The committee have not reported, but will accept on the floor, an amendment providing for a license system to be extended to the District of Alaska. At the present time no taxes are levied or collected in that vast region. Along the coast, in the vicinity of Sitka, Juneau, and the Lynn Canal, and far to the west, a great deal of very valuable property exists. It will be the province of the Government to protect this property, and it seemed but just to the committee that in some form or other that property should pay for at least part of the cost of protection.

We have not undertaken to levy any assessment upon real estate nor to assess personal property, but the revenue will be collected in the way of a license tax, which will apply to quartz mills and not to the placer mines; which will apply to the canneries and fishing and trading companies, and likewise to the sale of intoxicating liquors, whether at wholesale or retail.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire right in that connection in regard to these trading privileges. I have received a large number of letters on that subject. As to the trading privileges—I do not know much about them—I should like to inquire if they are protected by this proposed legislation so that those who are now there will have some preference rights under proper arrangements?

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that in this bill we do not undertake in any manner to dispose of the property rights of the parties referred to. In the bill now pending in conference between the two Houses, known as a bill extending the homestead laws and providing for rights of way in Alaska, the question referred to comes up and is under consideration; and I believe the disposition is to protect as far as possible all rights which are colorable or vested.

Mr. STEWART. That is sufficient.

Mr. CARTER. It is believed that under the license system contemplated the revenue derived by the Government from that District will be quite sufficient for, if not considerably in excess of, the cost of administering the proposed government there.

The bill undertakes to protect persons who have constructed mission schools by providing that they shall not for the time being be disturbed in their possessions. The same provision obtains with reference to the Indians who happen to be in possession of and occupying any part or portion of the Territory.

It is believed, Mr. President, that the bill will result in bringing to the people who may settle in any part or portion of that country the aid of the ordinary machinery of the law, and render unnecessary the organization of vigilance committees or other unlawful combinations for the purpose of protecting life and property.

One or two features of the bill may be called somewhat extraordinary, but I suggest that the conditions are extraordinary. The lack of highways of travel and ready means of communication, the severity of the climate, the fact that we do not know where settlements are to spring up, the fact that adequate accommodations do not exist there for the courts, has led the committee to allow the judges great latitude in providing for the current and necessary expenses of the courts. Where in many cases the previous approval of the Attorney-General seems proper as to expenses, we allow full discretion to the judges of the courts.

For instance, at Circle City and at St. Michaels, when the judge arrives, he will probably find that there is no adequate accommodation for a court, no court room, no building obtainable. The same will be true with reference to a jail building. Hence in this bill we have provided that the judge may cause a jail building to be constructed at not to exceed three places in each subdivision, at a cost not exceeding $3,000; that he may cause the construction of a suitable building wherein to hold the sessions of the court, at a cost not exceeding $5,000.

Ordinarily the previous consent of Congress or the approval of the Attorney-General would be necessary and indeed entirely appropriate before the authorization of any such expense, but the judge who arrives at Circle City in August will find it impossible to hear from the Attorney-General on the approval of any estimate submitted until probably next spring, or too late in the winter to admit of construction or preparation for the holding of courts or the incarceration of persons condemned to imprisonment. This power is extraordinary, but we think it necessary in order to carry out the purposes of the bill.

The salaries of the officers may challenge some attention.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. As I gathered from the reading of the bill, there are three court divisions created.

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. With one judge.

Mr. CARTER. With three judges, one for each division.

Mr. VEST. With three judges and three district attorneys?

Mr. CARTER. Three district attorneys and three clerks. One judge is located at Sitka, one at St. Michaels, and one at Circle City.

Mr. VEST. I understood there was but one judge; and what the Senator states makes what I was about to say more pertinent and emphatic. I can not understand why there is a necessity in a country like Alaska for three judges and three United States district attorneys. As the Senator from Montana remarked a few moments ago, there are no roads in Alaska; all communication is by water. In going to Alaska, there are but two hours' travel across Princess Charlotte Sound when the tourist is exposed to the waves of the Pacific Ocean. All the balance of that enormous trip of more than 3,000 miles is over a salt-water river as placid and tranquil as the Potomac.

The United States Government, when I was in Alaska, had one revenue cutter, which was devoted to the public business, and application had been made for another, which, I think, has since been granted by Congress, so that they have now two, and possibly three. There is not enough business, even allowing for an enormous increase by reason of the new discoveries in minerals in the Klondike, to occupy a reasonably industrious lawyer either as a judge or district attorney one month in the year. There was a United States judge at Sitka when I was in that District, a very excellent lawyer, and he informed me that, with the exception of libeling some of the vessels of the Canadians which had encroached upon our seal fishery and a few cases of opium smuggling and bringing of illicit liquor into the District, there was positively no business at all. The district attorney gave me the same information.

A district attorney, as I said, a reasonably industrious lawyer, can go in a United States vessel, a revenue cutter, from one point to another, as he must go, because he can not travel overland and transact all the business; and I should think he would be glad to do it, for if there is any country on top of the earth where a man ought to be employed in order to escape suicide or insanity it is Alaska.

Why this multiplicity of judicial officers and of district attorneys? There may be an increase of litigation, and I suppose there will be, at the Klondike, but that may terminate as suddenly as it began. However, at Sitka and Juneau and Fort Wrangell there is positively not as much business as there is in one week in a court in the District of Columbia, and there can not be any reasonable argument in favor of this multiplication of officials. I should like to know from my friend from Montana, who has given great attention to this matter, upon what ground this sort of legislation can be justified? I know the immense area which he has stated of the District of Alaska, but it is a district sui generis; the United States attorney travels by boat; and, as I remarked before, I have no doubt he would consider it a recreation to be permitted to leave Sitka and go to the Klondike, to St. Michaels, to Juneau, or Fort Wrangell, for those are about the only places where you can land after you leave Tacoma until you return.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the figures appearing upon the face of this map relative to distances would constitute a portion of my answer to the Senator from Missouri. From Seattle to Unalaska the distance is 1,955 miles; from Seattle to St. Michaels, by way of Unalaska, the distance 2,705 miles; from Seattle to Circle City, by way of St. Michaels, the distance is 3,012 miles; from Seattle to Dawson City, by way of St. Michaels, the distance is 3,304 miles; from Portland, Oreg., to Sitka, the distance is 650 miles; from Portland to Juneau, 874 miles; from Juneau to Dyea, 100 miles, and from Sitka to Yakutat, 288 miles, and the intermediate distances are subdivided.

The fact is, as stated by the Senator from Missouri, that there are no roads, and during at least from five to seven months in the year there is no water in sight in the center of Alaska. The Yukon River begins to freeze early in the autumn at its mouth, and it is stated on authority that I do not question that a boat can not with any degree of certainty anticipate reaching the island of St. Michaels before the 10th day of July in any year. A gentleman who spent twelve years in the Yukon Valley said it would be wise for us to change the date for the meeting of the court at Circle City until some time late in July or in August because of the fact that the river would be closed and that it would be impracticable to get a boat up into that country before the month of July.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2680) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. Does the Senator desire to proceed to the consideration of that bill at this time?

Mr. CAFFERY. I do, unless the Senator will conclude his remarks shortly. I shall give way, with the privilege of resuming the floor after the Senator finishes his remarks.

Mr. CARTER. I will let the matter go over for the time being, with the understanding that it may be taken up at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana, unless some other Senator desires to address the Senate upon the pending unfinished business.

MARY F. HAWLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 179) granting a pension to Mary F. Hawley; which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty."

Mr. SHOUP. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

BETHIAH H. ROLLINS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3179) granting a pension to Bethiah H. Rollins; which was, in line 6, after the word "nurse," to insert "and pay her a pension."

Mr. KYLE. I move concurrence in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY HAYNE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1200) granting a pension to Miss Mary Hayne; which was, in line 6, to strike out the word "Miss."

Mr. SHOUP. I move that the amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

QUARANTINE REGULATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2680) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, this bill is to amend the act of February 15, 1893, with regard to Federal quarantine and to grant additional powers to the Marine-Hospital Service. It is proper to state what the act of 1893 is and to point out its main particulars, so as to know what are the purposes of the present bill to amend it. I will briefly give a résumé of the main provisions of the act of 1893.

The first section provides that no vessel coming from any foreign port or place shall be permitted to enter a port of the United States unless in compliance with the quarantine regulations of the State and such rules and regulations as are prescribed by the act itself. The penalty included in this first section for violating any of its provisions is $5,000, and constitutes a lien upon the offending vessel.

Right in this connection I will draw the attention of the Senate to the peculiarity of this punitive provision. The laws of the States are recognized in the matter of quarantine, and a penalty is denounced for any violation of those laws. So we have the anomaly of the violation of the State laws punished in a United States court after due prosecution. That is one of the provisions which the present bill amends. I do not think there is any constitutional or other power for us to adopt the laws of the States and give sanction to them by punitive provisions of the United States statute. That defect was pointed out in the act before the Senate in 1879. It was pointed out by the then Senator from New York, a very distinguished man, Mr. Conkling, and it was pointed out by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. The bill of 1879, then pending, included as one of its provisions this identical punitive clause, which I think is illegal, and therefore ought to be stricken out.

Running over the sections, I come to the second section, which provides for obtaining consular certificates of foreign consuls or medical officers engaged in service at the consular ports by vessels sailing from a foreign port to any port of the United States. These certificates must set forth the sanitary condition of the vessel, that it has complied with all the rules and regulations to secure the best sanitary condition of the vessel, cargo, and passengers. The President is authorized to detail any medical officer of the United States at the port to furnish information, to make inspections, and to issue bills of health. There is no objection to that provision, and that provision is maintained.

The third section of the act of 1893 is proposed to be stricken out by the pending bill. That third section directs the Supervising Surgeon-General, immediately after the passage of the act, to examine the quarantine regulations of the State and municipal boards of health and, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to cooperate with the State board in the execution and enforcement of their rules and in the enforcement and execution of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases from foreign ports or countries into the United States or from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into another State or Territory or the District of Columbia.

One of the main provisions of this section is to direct the Supervising Surgeon-General of the United States to cooperate with all the health authorities of the different States and aid them in the execution of the State laws.

Another provision of this section is that at such ports or places in the United States as have no quarantine regulations, or when such regulations are, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, defective or insufficient, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make additional regulations and rules, such as may be necessary to prevent the introduction of disease from foreign countries into the United States or from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into another State or Territory or the District of Columbia; and when such rules are made, they are ordered to be promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury and enforced by the aid of the authorities of the States or the municipalities when the authorities of the States and municipalities will undertake to enforce them; and if they decline or refuse to do so, then they are to be executed by the Secretary of the Treasury himself or under his direction.

The other provisions of the act of 1893 down to section 6 give the execution of the quarantine duties and laws provided for to the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, and give him directions to obtain information as to the sanitary condition of foreign ports from which contagious or infectious diseases may be brought into the United States; and all consular officers are directed to make sanitary reports of the condition of their ports to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury is to obtain from all accessible sources such information as to the sanitary reports of all places within the States and communicate the same to the collectors of customs, etc.

Mr. President, I direct special attention to section 6 of the act of 1893, which is not proposed to be repealed by the pending bill. That section reads as follows:

SEC. 6. That on the arrival of an infected vessel at any port not provided with proper facilities for treatment of the same, the Secretary of the Treasury may remand said vessel, at its own expense, to the nearest national or other quarantine station, where accommodations and appliances are provided for the necessary disinfection and treatment of the vessel, passengers, and cargo; and after treatment of any infected vessel at a national quarantine station, and after certificate shall have been given by the United States quarantine officer at said station that the vessel, cargo, and passengers are each and all free from infectious disease, or danger of conveying the same, said vessel shall be admitted to entry to any port of the United States named within the certificate.

I call special attention to this section, which is now the law and which is not attempted to be repealed by the pending bill, in order to answer some objections made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] as to the advisability of permitting a ship to enter a port of the United States without the certificate or permission of the State quarantine officers. Their arguments were directed against the advisability of permitting any vessel to enter a port of the United States from a foreign country notwithstanding any certificate or bill of health issued by the United States quarantine officials authorized to be issued by the pending bill.

That is the law now, and the advisability of granting permission by and through United States quarantine officials has been passed on by the Congress of the United States. So it is futile at this moment and against this bill to raise any question of the advisability of a ship entering a port of the United States after the health officer of the United States shall have given it a clean bill of health. I say it is utterly futile to raise that question, because it is settled, and it would be utterly and entirely nugatory, in my opinion, to have a quarantine law that only performed the office of shutting out a vessel, and contained no provision for permitting it to enter a port after performing quarantine. And the permission ought to be given by the same authority which ordered and directed the quarantine.

The very object of a quarantine is to permit the entry of a vessel. That has been the object of a quarantine ever since quarantine has existed. Senators upon this floor now tell us that it is inadvisable, that it is wrong, to permit the entry of a vessel into a port unless it shall have gone through the gauntlet of inspection at the hands of State authorities, and even in that event, if the citizens living in the community should object, then their permission must likewise be obtained.

Quarantine derives its name from the period of detention of forty days as applied to vessels from north Africa and ports supposed to be infected coming into the ports of the Mediterranean. They were subjected to a detention of forty days, as the word indicates. I believe the word is of Italian origin. The ancient quarantine was to keep the vessel forty days, for it was supposed that if any person had the germs of the infectious or contagious disease in him, or if any part of the cargo was infected, the disease would have manifested itself in that period, and the vessel perhaps could be permanently excluded. If not, if everything was clear, if no disease manifested itself in the person of the passengers, the vessel was permitted to land and discharge its cargo, and its passengers were permitted to go wherever they chose. The supposition was that if disease did not develop in them during that period they were safe from it.

Under modern methods, after science has discovered the means of destroying infection, of purifying ships, the detention of a vessel as to its cargo is very slight. The quarantine is for the purpose of admitting the cargo of the vessel and its passengers after proper scientific means and remedies have been resorted to and applied, and the vessel purified and the cargo disinfected. The passengers themselves are subjected to a process of disinfection. After that is accomplished a cargo is permitted to land and so are the passengers. The detention at the port in my own State has never been, to my knowledge, over fourteen days, and more frequently than otherwise, after fumigation and other disinfectant appliances have been used upon the ship and cargo, it is allowed to enter the port of New Orleans immediately, without any unnecessary detention. So the mediæval idea of detaining ships in quarantine and preventing commodities from being landed does not now obtain.

The first object of every quarantine regulation is to keep the disease out. That is the first and primal idea. After the disease gets in, then in order to prevent its spread, to prevent the ravages that follow in the wake of the dreadful scourge, there is a second quarantine, and that quarantine is to isolate the infected individual and to purify the infected place. It is not the idea of the shotgun quarantine, which is to string a cordon of firearms around an infected place. You can not shut out infection, you can not eradicate it, by brutal methods. It must be done by application of scientific means and methods. You must destroy the infection. Efforts in that direction have met with remarkable success in nearly all the Gulf States.

Mr. President, to revert to the discussion of the act of 1893, it will be observed that section 7 of that act gives the President power to suspend or prohibit for such period as he may deem expedient the introduction into the United States of persons or goods whenever in his opinion, notwithstanding quarantine, there is imminent danger of the conveying of infectious or contagious diseases into the country or from one State to another. He is authorized to stop all immigration, to stop all travel, to stop all transportation of goods in an emergency of that sort. That section is unrepealed and is a wise provision.

Section 3 of the act of 1893, to which I have drawn attention, is entirely stricken out in the pending bill. The same objectionable features of that act contained in the first section, which created the anomaly of throwing upon the United States the office of enforcing through its punitive power the regulations of States in the matter of quarantine, are also found in the third section and are also stricken out. With these provisions stricken out and the balance of the act of 1893 retained, the committee which reported the bill think, and I think, that the bill complies with the exigencies of conditions prevailing in the United States in regard to preventing the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States and, if they gain an entrance, to prevent their spreading from one State or Territory to another State or Territory.

The pending bill has two main divisions—first, the maritime quarantine; second, the interstate quarantine—and they both stand upon the same basis; that is, the necessity of regular, uniform, and efficient regulation. There is no difference whatever as to the necessity of requiring the same efficient law, the same uniform, regular execution of the law, in the case of maritime quarantine and in the case of interstate quarantine.

Mr. President, observe the unrepealed provisions of the act of 1893. What does the act provide for? It provides for obtaining all information in regard to the presence of contagious or infectious diseases in foreign ports and the immediate communication of that intelligence to the health authorities of the United States. It provides for the sanitation of the vessel and such rules and regulations, in the language of the act, as will bring about the best sanitary condition of the vessel, its cargo, and its passengers, and it places the execution of all these rules in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] says that this extensive jurisdiction of saying when and how goods and passengers shall be transported from abroad into our borders is a power too great to confide to any one man. It could rest nowhere else. The maritime quarantine is bound to be in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. These vessels come laden with merchandise and immigrants, both under the jurisdiction of the United States—the goods, as to the collection of the duties upon them; the immigrants, as to the inspection required under the immigration laws.

The collectors of customs, under the very first act passed by the Congress of the United States in 1799, establishing the Marine-Hospital Service, were directed to comply with all the health laws of the States in the execution of their rules and regulations of quarantine. The collectors of the ports and United States officials, who have charge and supervision of ships and their cargoes, so far as collecting the Federal revenue is concerned, and who have charge over the character and kind of persons who shall be allowed to come to our shores in them, are the proper persons to look after this matter of quarantine.

The head of the Department, having jurisdiction over ships, their cargoes and passengers, is the proper person to take charge of and have jurisdiction over the subject of quarantine. He is now clothed with entire jurisdiction over the merchant marine, and we are told that when this merchant marine is the source from which the infectious and contagious diseases spring, that official ought not to be clothed with the power of health regulations, intimately connected and blended as they are with the ordinary duties of the Treasury Department. With deference to the Senator from Florida, I think there is nothing in the argument that the Secretary of the Treasury should not be intrusted with control over whatever health regulations Congress may adopt.

As to the argument that too much power is conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury, I fail to perceive its weight, I fail to perceive its importance. I hope Senators will take into consideration that any health regulation whatever has to be executed in times of emergency with rapidity and certainty. There can be no convocation of doctors, no dispute, no delay. Yellow fever is an enemy; cholera is an enemy. All infectious and contagious diseases have to be met like an enemy to the human race, and your general must be in supreme command of the health army. There must be one authority, one executive arm. There is no place here for a division of authority, a convention of debaters, a discussion as to the methods to be pursued to drive back the foe. It has to be done quickly, decidedly, and efficiently. The Secretary of the Treasury, in my opinion, is the proper official, and the only official, in whom ought to reside the execution, by officers under him, as is the Supervising Surgeon-General, of all these health and quarantine regulations.

Mr. President, it may enlighten this subject to give a brief review of the legislation that has taken place heretofore in regard to quarantine. The first act, as I stated, was passed in 1799, and was referred to by Chief Justice Marshall in the celebrated decision in Gibbons vs. Ogden. That act, which I have here before me in the Revised Statutes, is so brief and so indicative of the prevailing idea relating to quarantine at that period that I will read it. It is the act of 23d February, 1799, section 4792 of the Revised Statutes:

> The quarantines and other restraints established by the health laws of any State respecting any vessels arriving in or bound to any port or district thereof, shall be duly observed by the officers of the customs revenue of the United States, by the masters and crews of the several revenue cutters, and by the military officers commanding in any fort or station upon the seacoast; and all such officers of the United States shall faithfully aid in the execution of such quarantines and health laws, according to their respective powers and within their respective precincts, and as they shall be directed, from time to time, by the Secretary of the Treasury. But nothing in this title shall enable any State to collect a duty of tonnage or impost without the consent of Congress.

In that early day, in the very first act of Congress passed upon this matter, the officials of the Treasury Department were directed to enforce and to help to enforce the different regulations of the different States. This is cited in order to show that the executive arm of a health law was then thought, and properly, to be the customs officials of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, I will run over these acts with a view of showing the growth of this idea that the adoption and the execution of quarantine laws affecting large portions of the country ought to be made and enforced by the United States.

The first act on this subject referred to by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] was the act of April 29, 1878, and on reviewing the sections and provisions of that act it will be seen how very careful the Congress of the United States was to conserve and to acknowledge the health laws of the United States. The first section provides:

> That no vessel or vehicle coming from any foreign port or country where any contagious or infectious disease may exist, and no vessel or vehicle conveying any person or persons, merchandise, or animals affected with any infectious or contagious disease, shall enter any port of the United States or pass the boundary line between the United States and any foreign country contrary to the quarantine laws of any one of said United States into or through the jurisdiction of which said vessel or vehicle may pass, or to which it is destined, or except in the manner and subject to the regulations to be prescribed as hereinafter provided.

The second section simply provides for information of any infectious or contagious disease in a foreign port to be conveyed by the consular officer at that port to the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, and to give a full statement of the date of departure and the port of destination of any vessel arriving from such port to the United States.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Louisiana permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator to be reading from the first act on this subject?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. If I understood him correctly, one provision of that law saves to the States the right to determine whether a vessel shall come in, and prohibits the Federal authority from interfering with that act. Am I correct?

Mr. CAFFERY. You are partially correct, sir. It says that no vessel shall enter contrary to the quarantine regulations of any State. This impliedly prevents it coming in by any regulation of the United States contrary to a State statute.

Mr. BACON. I understand that it is the purpose of the pending bill to enact directly to the contrary of that provision, and to overthrow that provision of the law as it was then enacted. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir; but you are not entirely correct, as the provision has been overthrown in acts subsequent to 1878.

Mr. BACON. If I have followed correctly the Senator and his colleague on the committee, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], I understand that one main purpose of the bill is to put it within the power of the Federal official to say peremptorily and arbitrarily whether a vessel shall or shall not come in. In other words, if the Federal official determines that it shall come in, then there shall be no State authority which can conflict with that order. Am I not correct?

Mr. CAFFERY. My attention was called away just now by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] and I did not hear the Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Montana asked me a question which distracted my attention for the moment.

Mr. BACON. I will repeat it. Of course it is very important that we shall have the issue clear cut.

Mr. CAFFERY. Exactly.

Mr. BACON. I understand the contention as presented by the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Missouri to be that the efficiency of quarantine regulations can only be secured by having the paramount authority or power in the Federal official, so that when the Federal quarantine authority decides on the question whether a vessel shall enter a port, that decision is final and can not be conflicted with by any other and contrary decision on the part of the State authorities. Am I correct?

Mr. CAFFERY. You are.

Mr. BACON. If I am correct in that, then it seems to me that the former proposition which I suggested to the Senator is undoubtedly true, that the bill now proposed to be enacted will overthrow the provision in the act which he has just read. Am I correct?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly; but the Senator is entirely incorrect in presuming that that provision had not been overthrown by the act of 1893.

Mr. BACON. I did not presume anything to that effect at all. The Senator was reading——

Mr. CAFFERY. You presumed that this is the only bill which overthrows the provision which I have just read from the act of 1878, but both the act of 1893 and the act of 1879 provide that the certificate given by the quarantine officer of the United States at the port of entry shall be sufficient to allow a vessel to enter.

Mr. BACON. Then the Senator understands that the law as it now exists would make it unlawful for a State quarantine, even if it had that scope, to prohibit the entrance of that vessel?

Mr. CAFFERY. I think it would under some circumstances.

Mr. BACON. Both the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] commented upon the fact that directly the opposite was now true, and that under the law as it now exists a vessel may have a permit from the Federal authority to come into a port, but that a subsequent State quarantine will still keep it out. That was the complaint made, and that, I think, is the law now.

Mr. MALLORY. Yes; that is the law.

Mr. CAFFERY. I understand from what the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Missouri said, that double quarantine fees for inspection and disinfection were demanded by State quarantine officers. I can state from information derived from the Supervising Surgeon-General and from one of the rules and regulations which they have adopted, that notwithstanding the State law in that regard can be set aside under the act of 1879 and the act of 1893, if deemed inefficient and insufficient by the Supervising Surgeon-General—or the Secretary of the Treasury, rather—yet in order to harmonize with and not antagonize the health authorities of the State, they will, upon application, consent to another inspection and another disinfection. But they do not admit that the act of 1893 and the act of 1879 give the State authorities that permission and that privilege.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon the interruption and if I do not intrude——

Mr. CAFFERY. Not at all.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator as a lawyer will recognize the fact that the language of the act of 1879 and the act of 1893 has no reference whatever to the question of any conflict between State and Federal authorities. It simply prescribes what under Federal authority will be a sufficient authorization for the entry of a ship, and the question as to whether or not that will override State authority I do not think is contemplated in the act. However, I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him to such an extent. I had no such intention when I arose. The only purpose I had was, if possible, to get the issue as clear-cut between us as it can be made.

Mr. CAFFERY. I read from section 6 of the act of 1893, which gives in unambiguous and unmistakable language the right of a ship to enter a port under the certificate of the health officers of the United States whenever, in their opinion, there was not proper facilities for disinfecting the ship by the health officers and the United States authorities undertook to disinfect. So, therefore, when the proper facilities do not exist the United States health officers can disinfect and fumigate; they can give their certificates, their bill of health, their permit to enter, and it does not leave, in my opinion, any room to admit a counter authority upon the part of a State to say that when the United States says a vessel shall come in the State authorities can say it can not.

The only difference between the Senator from Maine, if any difference at all, and the Senator from Missouri and myself in this particular is that I contend that this jurisdiction of the United States in allowing a vessel to enter is complete under the act of 1879 and the act of 1893, and the State authorities can not object to the right of the vessel to enter after the United States certificate shall have been given that it may enter. I will now revert to the act of 1878.

Mr. BACON. Yet the Senator proposes, as I understand it, to strike out section 3 of the act, which prescribes that there shall be cooperation between the Federal and State boards.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do. I think that that section causes useless complications and prevents that unity of action and harmonious execution and rapid execution which a law of this kind requires.

Section 3 of the act of 1878 makes it the duty of the medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service and the custom officers to aid in the enforcement of the national quarantine rules and regulations established under the preceding section, which simply directs any consular officer of the United States or any other representative of the United States at a foreign port immediately to give information of the existence of any infectious or contagious diseases at a foreign port, and so on, as I have heretofore read. Then the Surgeon-General, under section 4 of the act, is directed, upon receipt of the information of a vessel from a foreign port where contagious diseases exist, immediately to convey intelligence of that fact to the municipal and State health authorities and the United States officers at any port or the destination of the vessel in the United States.

There is another act of 1878, but I do not see it here now.

Mr. BACON. Possibly I can furnish it to the Senator. I have it here now.

Mr. CAFFERY. I have quoted from the act of the 29th of April, 1878.

Mr. BACON. There is an act of March 3, 1879. I beg the Senator's pardon. This is 1879.

Mr. CAFFERY. I believe there were two acts in 1878.

Mr. BACON. Two of 1879 and one of 1878.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will proceed with the act of March 3, 1879. That act provided for a national board of health, to consist of seven members, to be appointed by the President, and section 2 states the duties of the board of health to be to obtain information upon all matters affecting the public health, to advise the several Departments of the Government, the executives of the several States, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia on all questions submitted by them, or whenever in the opinion of the board such advice would tend to the preservation and improvement of the public health—a kind of general advisory board.

The third section of the act of 1879 required the board to submit to Congress at its next session a full statement of its transactions, with a plan for a national public health organization, which plan was to be prepared after consultation with all the sanitary organizations and sanitarians of the several States, and in which plans special attention was to be given to the subject of quarantine, and so on, and the sum of $50,000 was appropriated to pay the salaries and expenses of the board. So you see, Mr. President, that the act of March 3, 1879, did nothing more than establish a national board of health, with general duties, giving them no specific powers; but they were directed to report a plan of organization of a national health board at the next session of Congress.

In June, 1879, a very important act was passed by Congress. It was to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States. The first section of the act varies somewhat from the section of the act of 1878, and it provides:

> That it shall be unlawful for any merchant ship or vessel from any foreign port where any contagious or infectious disease exists to enter any port of the United States except in accordance with the provisions of this act, and all rules and regulations of State boards of health and all rules and regulations made in pursuance of this act; and any such vessel which shall enter, or attempt to enter, a port of the United States in violation thereof shall forfeit to the United States a sum, to be awarded in the discretion of the court, not exceeding $1,000, which shall be a lien upon said vessel, to be recovered by proceedings in the proper district court of the United States.

So in the first section of the act we are met with the strange anomaly of the United States providing for the punishment not only of violations of certain rules which are authorized to be made under the provisions of the act, but of all rules and regulations of any State; and no man would know, if he were indicted for the violation of these rules, whether it was for the violation of rules made by the United States or rules made by the State. So that act right there contains a vicious provision, and, in my opinion, an absolutely illegal provision. The second section repeats the requirements of the act of 1878 in regard to the necessity of procuring consular bills of health and other provisions which are not pertinent to this inquiry.

The third section made the national board of health, created by the act I have just recited, cooperate with and aid all State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries or from one State to another, and so on.

The act of 1879 goes further, and contains a very important provision, to which I desire the attention of Senators who are doing me the honor to listen. I will quote it:

> And at such ports and places within the United States where quarantine regulations exist under the authority of the State, which, in the opinion of the National Board of Health, are not sufficient to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States, or into one State from another, the National Board of Health shall report the facts to the President of the United States, who shall, if, in his judgment, it is necessary and proper, order said Board of Health to make such additional rules and regulations as are necessary to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State from another, which, when so made and approved by the President, shall be promulgated by the National Board of Health and enforced by the sanitary authorities of the States, where the State authorities will undertake to execute and enforce them; but if the State authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations, the President may detail an officer or appoint a proper person for that purpose.

Wherever, in the opinion of the National Board of Health, the regulations of the States are not sufficient to prevent the introduction of these dangerous diseases from foreign ports or countries into the United States or from one State to another, then the board of health is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary, and the President is given full power and authority to execute them, both in regard to maritime quarantine and interstate quarantine.

Is this authority as extensive as the authority complained of in the pending bill? Here is a law, passed in 1879, which directly set aside State authority and gave to the national board the power, wherever they thought necessary, to adopt such rules and regulations as were sufficient to prevent the introduction of these contagious diseases from foreign countries into the United States or from one State to another. Where was the cry of State rights then? Who were the parties who voted for the act of 1879? The Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Harris, who then was in charge of the bill, was as great a stickler for State rights as any member of this body. The distinguished and powerful Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Lamar, devoted as he was to that construction of the Constitution which, while it gave the Federal Constitution its due proportion of power, always endeavored to restrain the Federal authority within the just limits of the Constitution, voted for this bill, and nearly every member in this body from the South, with few exceptions, voted for it.

I will draw the attention of Senators to a question propounded by Mr. Lamar to Mr. Edmunds, who opposed the bill, pending the discussion of this measure, which went to the roots of the whole controversy and signified the position of Mr. Lamar. He was not afraid of Federal authority at that day, nor was the Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Harris. They had witnessed the inefficiency of State quarantine. The Senator from Tennessee was fresh from the terrible experiences of the epidemic that devastated Memphis in 1878. He was a great stickler for State rights; he was a greater stickler for human life, when human life could be conserved by a just exercise of power conferred by the Constitution through laws having for their purpose not the underlying commercial purpose, to which the Senator from Georgia the other day alluded, but the primal purpose, the great purpose, the humane purpose, of saving the lives of our citizens from the terrible destruction of these scourges that visit our shores.

Mr. Lamar, in stating the jurisdiction of the States over the subject-matter reserved to them in answer to a question of Mr. Edmunds (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-sixth Congress, first session, page 1548), made this remark:

> Over many subjects of legislation the States have exclusive jurisdiction. In fact, on all matters in reference to which the States have not delegated their powers to the General Government their jurisdiction is exclusive. Of course Congress could not by its legislation enforce the laws of a State upon such subjects; but upon matters over which Congress has a concurring jurisdiction and paramount jurisdiction, I think then, and in such case, it has the constitutional power to recognize and adopt the laws of a State and to enforce them by penalties upon individuals.

The statement of Mr. Lamar was made in answer to the objection of Mr. Edmunds that the Congress of the United States could not enforce the execution of State laws by the sanction of a Federal statute; and here he says that in a matter where Congress has paramount jurisdiction, then, and in that case, the Congress of the United States can use the Federal arm to execute and enforce the State statute. Let us see the vote on this bill.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator's position to agree with the position taken by Mr. Edmunds, and to conflict with that taken by Mr. Lamar in what he says?

Mr. CAFFERY. I read this statement from Mr. Lamar in order to show that he acknowledged that this subject, then discussed, the quarantine bill, was a measure over which Congress had paramount jurisdiction. The question of difference between him and Mr. Edmunds was quite another point. I think upon that question Mr. Edmunds was right and Mr. Lamar wrong, if the Senator wants to know my opinion.

Mr. CHILTON. The Supreme Court has so decided.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not know what the decision of the Supreme Court has been, but it is manifest to my mind that Mr. Edmunds was right. But I direct the attention of the Senate to the brief speech of Mr. Lamar to show that the particular subject-matter of discussion at that period was one upon which he said Congress had paramount jurisdiction.

Mr. BACON. He used the words concurrent or paramount, either, without saying which one this fell under.

Mr. CAFFERY. Very well. We will see what that term means as we go further along in the discussion.

The yeas on the passage of the bill were as follows:

Bailey,	Farley,	Kellogg,	Slater,
Beck,	Garland,	Kirkwood,	Vance,
Blaine,	Gordon,	Lamar,	Vest,
Booth,	Hampton,	McMillan,	Voorhees,
Burnside,	Harris,	McPherson,	Walker,
Call,	Houston,	Maxey,	Williams,
Cameron, Pa.	Ingalls,	Paddock,	Withers.
Cameron, Wis.	Jonas,	Pendleton,
Coke,	Jones, Fla.	Saunders,

Those were the affirmative votes. I notice among those votes upon the act of 1879, that contains provisions similar to those in the pending bill, and pointed out in that debate as inimical to State authority, all these conspicuous Southern legislators and statesmen.

Mr. BACON. Will it interrupt the Senator from Louisiana if I ask him a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. It will not.

Mr. BACON. The Senator invokes the names of these eminent gentlemen in support of his proposition favoring the passage of the present bill. That vote was given in support of the act of June 2, 1879. That is the act, I presume, to which the Senator refers.

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. There were two acts in 1879—the act of March 3 and the act of June 2. The Senator refers to the act of June 2. That is the principal act.

Mr. CAFFERY. Let me see what that act was and at what time it was passed.

Mr. BACON. Here it is. As to either act, the suggestion which I wish to make to the Senator is this, that in each of these acts there is a clear recognition of the right and expectation that the States would have quarantine regulations with which it was prescribed the Federal regulations should be in harmony, and in the execution of which it was prescribed that the Federal officials should act in harmony with the State officials.

The question I wish to ask the Senator is this: There is in these several acts ample authority and power given to the Federal officials to do everything which is necessary to restrict the spread of disease or to prevent its introduction. In what manner does the present legislation, as found in these several acts, fall short of what is provided in the bill now proposed, except in the fact that there is nowhere found in any one of these acts any power in the Federal authorities to prevent the State or municipal authorities from protecting themselves?

In other words, the only difference between the power given in the act now proposed and the legislation as it exists is that in the one case—the legislation now existing—the authority is given fully to the Federal authorities to do everything which can contribute to the prevention of the spread of disease or of its introduction, but the present legislation does not enable the Federal authorities to lay their hands upon State authorities and say they shall not restrict in the same manner that the Federal authorities do. In what way does the proposed legislation, except in that respect, change the present law?

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator has made quite a speech in the form of a question, and there are so many different propositions or assertions that I am at a loss how distinctly to answer, but I will say this: The similarity between the acts of 1893 and of 1879 is that while in certain sections of both the acts of 1893 and 1879 the Federal authority is made supreme, it is made so on a contingency. If certain laws of States are not thought to be proper, then the discretion is left to the Secretary of the Treasury to set them aside and to enact sufficient laws and regulations. In other parts of both of these statutes which the Senator has mentioned the Federal authorities are required to cooperate with the State authorities in the execution of their laws. I admit that, and that is precisely the reason why I want it changed.

Mr. BACON. The Senator wants to take that out.

Mr. CAFFERY. That is precisely the reason, because it brings about an inharmonious action, because it brings about a discussion, an assertion on one side that the laws are insufficient, a denial on the other that they are insufficient, and here is a wrangle between the State authorities and the Federal authorities, with the power conceded to the Federal authorities in these acts to set aside the State authorities, but it goes without saying——

Mr. BACON. I do not think that is conceded.

Mr. CAFFERY. If the Senator will pardon me, I had not finished my sentence. It goes without saying that these provisions giving this contingent and conditional power to the United States are not calculated to be executed with that celerity, that certainty, that efficiency which is absolutely required in the presence of this fell destroyer. I do not know that there is a class of men in the world who are so fond of disputing as doctors. I do not believe the disputatious and contentious members of this body can rival a medical corps in their nice, fine-spun, metaphysical distinctions and differences, subtleties and refinements, on controverted questions.

Mr. PASCO. I understand the Senator desires to take out of the present legislation the cooperative principle between the National and State governments?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir. I desire emphatically to do it. I want a uniform rule. I want a certain rule. I want the whole power of the national quarantine, which I think unquestionably flows from the power to regulate commerce, where it belongs, where only it can be made effective, in the hands of the officers of the United States, and I am as much of a States-rights man as anybody.

Why, sir, year after year we are visited with yellow fever; year after year it creeps through cordons of shotguns; year after year our coasts are ravaged; year after year the pestilence walketh in darkness and destroyeth at noonday from Pensacola to the snow line. Is not that sufficient evidence of the inutility of these State quarantines?

Look at the epidemic of last year. How did it get in? Where is the responsibility? The State officers throw it upon the Federal quarantine officers at Ship Island. Criminations and recriminations are bandied about from one set of officials to another. We want a central authority to which responsibility can attach; we want a power able to cope with it, with means sufficient to cope with it, with a regularity of action and a uniformity of conduct and method of treating disease that insures confidence among the people and which, in my opinion, will effectually prevent the almost annual recurrences of these dreadful visitations.

Mr. PASCO. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the quarantine laws and regulations of Florida were successful during last summer in keeping the yellow fever out of the boundaries of that State. There has never been any explanation as to how the yellow fever came into the country, and if I am correct, the Supervising Surgeon-General has never yet made his annual report, so that we do not know from him whether his efforts were successful or not. Am I right in that?

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not know about your success in Florida last year, but I do know when the yellow fever visited Florida some time in 1879 or 1880, that you called in the United States Marine-Hospital Service, and the town of Pensacola was put under the treatment of the United States officials.

Mr. PASCO. That was before the establishment of our present system, which has been successful in keeping the disease out of our borders.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not dispute the Senator's statement in that regard. Does the Senator dispute the statement that yellow fever ravaged the coast from the eastern boundary of Mississippi or of Alabama almost to the Mexican line upon the Gulf coast last year?

Mr. PASCO. I do not; but it is charged that it came through the national quarantine lines there.

Mr. CAFFERY. I have referred to that assertion, and I say you must have a central authority upon which you can attach responsibility for negligence or inefficiency. Where there is one Federal quarantine station there are twenty State quarantine stations, and the Senator knows, therefore, the chances are as twenty to one that the fever got in through the State negligence as against the United States negligence.

Mr. BACON. If I do not intrude improperly upon the Senator——

Mr. CAFFERY. Not at all.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator's proposition to be this: That he not only desires that the Federal authority shall have the exclusive power to say that a quarantine shall be established, but that it shall also have power as to any locality to say that it shall not be established. That I understand to be the Senator's position.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not know how the Senator could have understood any such thing, for I certainly never said that.

Mr. BACON. I do not desire to misrepresent the Senator.

Mr. CAFFERY. I certainly never said any such thing, and it is very far from my thoughts to imagine any such thing.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator proposes that the exclusive power to establish a quarantine shall be in the Federal authorities, and therefore there shall be no other power qualified to establish a quarantine and no other quarantine can be lawful. So it will be exclusively for the national quarantine to say not only that there shall be a quarantine, but to determine that in a certain locality there shall not be any, because no other authority will have the power.

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator does not understand me to take any such position—no, sir. I am speaking with reference to the Federal quarantine; I am speaking with reference to the power of the United States to establish quarantine in aid of its commercial power.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator then——

Mr. CAFFERY. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I have made the broad statement that the quarantine power, which I say the Congress of the United States possesses, is derived from the power to regulate commerce, and, therefore, the Federal quarantine can only extend and only embrace subjects of maritime foreign commerce and matters of interstate commerce. I have said nothing in regard to the internal police regulations of a State. Why does the Senator from Georgia conclude from anything that I have said, or anything that can be inferred from what I have said, that the States are to be robbed of all power to establish their quarantines wherever and whenever they choose? By no means. But upon this matter of maritime trade, this matter of foreign commerce, and this matter of interstate commerce, I say that the Federal arm can take charge of it, and the Federal authority in regulating it can be and ought to be supreme.

Mr. BACON. Now may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I understand, then, under the Senator's contention, that if a carload of woolen goods was to be shipped from New Orleans at a time when the yellow fever was prevalent in New Orleans and consigned to a party in Montgomery, Ala.—which would certainly be a transaction under the interstate-commerce provision of the Constitution—that in such a case the citizens of Montgomery would be controlled in the question as to whether or not that carload of woolens consigned thus from New Orleans could be admitted exclusively by the decision of the national quarantine and that the city of Montgomery itself should not be allowed to say that it would not permit it to come in because it would endanger the health of the town. Am I correct?

Mr. CAFFERY. Are you propounding a question or making a statement of position?

Mr. BACON. I said I understood the Senator to take that position that in all cases which depend upon interstate commerce——

Mr. CAFFERY. You state a position, and you are now illustrating your position with a particular application of it.

Mr. BACON. I want to know if that is not the Senator's position.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will ask the Senator another question. I ask if the State authorities of Alabama in the case of goods shipped from New Orleans to Alabama, which you put, were to decide and declare through their health officers that it was perfectly safe for the people of Alabama to receive that shipment, would that entitle the goods to come in? Would that authorize the shipment to be made and the goods to be distributed among the people of Alabama?

Mr. BACON. Not if the Federal authorities should say it should not.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am speaking of the State authorities. I am not saying anything about the Federal authorities. I will ask you another question. In the case you suppose of woolen goods shipped from New Orleans and consigned to Montgomery, Ala., if the health officers of the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, say that those goods can come in, and those goods can be received and sold in the State of Alabama, can they be so received and sold?

Mr. BACON. They could be if there was no conflicting regulation on the part of the Federal authorities.

Mr. CAFFERY. Ah, exactly. Now, I will answer the Senator's question. I say, therefore, it depends upon the question of whichever power is paramount. Which power is paramount? In the absence of Federal legislation, the State law prevails. The State law would be valid in the exercise of a power that belongs to the State, the police power, and the Federal law would be valid in the exercise of a power that belongs to the Federal Government, the power to regulate commerce. When these two conflict, which is subordinated to the other and which, therefore, is to be looked to?

I say, Mr. President, that that state of affairs in the administration of a law under the complex system that we live under would rarely come about. I believe that in the execution of a law in the case put due regard would be paid to the wishes of the people of Alabama by the Federal authorities; and I believe if they had or were exercising jurisdiction in the premises that the Federal authorities having charge of the shipment of or control over the quarantine of goods in the case put—from New Orleans to Alabama—would be very loath to shove upon the people of Alabama goods which they thought ought not to be brought in on account of the danger of infection.

The Senator supposes an extreme case, but I will meet his case, and say that those goods, if permitted by the United States quarantine officials to be shipped from the city of New Orleans to the city of Montgomery, could be shipped there under the authority of the case of Brown vs. Maryland.

Mr. BACON. And the municipal and State authorities could not stop them?

Mr. CAFFERY. The municipal or State authorities could not stop them. That is not to say, Mr. President, that those goods could be scattered all over the State of Alabama. The Federal authority given in the case supposed would be limited to the shipment then and there; it would not give authority to let those goods go wherever the consignee wanted them to go; but so far as that particular shipment is concerned, if the United States have any power in the premises at all, then, under that condition of affairs, the United States authority being paramount, the goods would certainly have to be admitted for the purpose only of the immediate transaction and limited and controlled by it.

Mr. BACON. And it is that result the Senator seeks to secure by the passage of this bill?

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator can not charge me with desiring to thrust upon an unwilling people goods infected, for, if let in to a place by the order of a Federal quarantine officer, they would be disinfected——

Mr. BACON. The Senator certainly did not understand me in that way.

Mr. CAFFERY. That is the import of your language.

Mr. BACON. I beg to assure the Senator that I did not mean to say that he wished to distribute yellow fever, whether it originated in New Orleans or elsewhere.

Mr. CAFFERY. You said by the instrumentality of a bill which I favor.

Mr. BACON. I said the effect of the law which the Senator seeks to have enacted will result in giving to the Federal officials power by which they can do it; not that the Senator would desire that particular thing to be done.

Mr. CAFFERY. Oh, Mr. President, that is the old mediæval idea. With this terrible responsibility resting upon the executors of this law, the terrible loss of life, the destruction of property that might result from a careless or an ignorant administration of this law, does the Senator suppose that less care will be taken in the premises by United States officials than any State would exercise in its own behalf? Is your quarantine a perpetual embargo? Is there no period when you say that people and goods can be transmitted? Is your idea of a quarantine a complete isolation—nonintercourse?

Mr. BACON. If necessary, yes.

Mr. CAFFERY. The idea of quarantine is after certain detention and a certain application of scientific remedies to permit people and goods to travel and to circulate. Why, sir, you would paralyze the commerce of the United States. The authority somewhere must exist to say when and under what conditions it is safe for people and goods to travel. You say that it is the authority of Alabama, or Mississippi, or Louisiana, or Florida. I say it is the Federal authority. Some authority must say it; some power must have the final decision of this matter. You want to restrict it to each State acting separately; one State may have good quarantine and another none or an inefficient one. The evils and the dreadful results of these State quarantines I, perhaps, have felt a little more than the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me? I do not wish to be misunderstood.

Mr. CAFFERY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will not go further than I will in the effort to secure a law which shall give to the Federal Government all the power which it can possibly exercise in the way of restraint and in the way of an efficient quarantine. The only thing I object to is that, while I am willing for that, I am unwilling that the Federal authority shall have the right to prohibit a State or a municipality from also having its quarantine. It certainly will not impair the efficiency of the Federal quarantine to have it added to by the power of the State or of the municipality.

Mr. CAFFERY. I have said nothing, Mr. President, from which by the most strained construction anybody can deduce the conclusion that I want to bar any State from having as many police regulations in regard to health or other matters pertaining to the police jurisdiction of the State as the State in its discretion may see fit to adopt. The State can have just as many quarantines as it pleases; but anybody can see from the example put by the Senator from Georgia the very limited scope and extent of the Federal authority.

The Federal authority can not say to a State, "You have got to let the goods of Louisiana in ad libitum." It is not likely that the goods of Louisiana from an infected district would be ordered, in the first place, by the citizens of Alabama. The principle of self-preservation would come into play. But the Federal permission can only extend to a particular commercial transaction; and therefore this wide and extensive and comprehensive authority that you say the Federal Government wants to exercise does not exist and can not exist in the nature of things.

But somebody, says the Senator, can do it; some authority can say whether it is safe or not. Where the authorities of the city of Montgomery might want to introduce these woolen articles, the authorities of Selma would raise a shotgun quarantine and say, "You can not introduce them." So every little municipality is quarantining against every other, and the condition of affairs, when panic seizes the minds of the people in these epidemics, is a condition of war. The people seem to go into the elements of barbarity and savagery.

Science has discovered a method of making safe the transmission of goods and passengers. That principle seems to be ignored. In all this contention it is supposed that this commercial power of Congress is only invoked in order to shove the yellow fever or cholera or the plague upon an unwilling people. Because these diseases can be controlled, the infection destroyed, the contamination removed, is precisely the reason we want an efficient arm to perform that service and to render both life and property secure from the attacks of disease.

The idea that prevails in the mind of the Senator from Georgia appears to be that modern science is unable to cope with these formidable diseases. I can tell him that for the last nineteen years yellow fever has been isolated and eradicated in the city of New Orleans. The old plan used to be when it came in that everybody ran off. Now the plan is to isolate the disease, to put a cordon of guards around the house where it exists, to use bichloride of mercury and the fumes of sulphur and other compounds which are germ destroyers, and after a certain fumigation, after a certain application of these remedies, the premises are safe, the germ is destroyed, and both life and property are saved. That is precisely the means that I want to be invoked in this instance.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. Was that resorted to in New Orleans last fall?

Mr. CAFFERY. It was.

Mr. MALLORY. Did it check the epidemic?

Mr. CAFFERY. I will tell the Senator the conditions that then prevailed in the city of New Orleans. The town of Ocean Springs, on the Alabama coast, is a famous summer resort for the citizens of New Orleans. It borders the Gulf, or an arm of the Gulf; it is a very delightful resort; and a number of the citizens of New Orleans were there.

The first disease that broke out there was called the dengue. It soon spread with great rapidity, and everybody was down sick, as it was said, with the dengue. After investigation it was shown that some persons had died of the yellow fever. I believe the first case was a doctor of the city of New Orleans by the name of Bemis, and the autopsy upon his body showed that the disease of which he died was yellow fever. All the denizens of New Orleans who were then sojourning at Ocean Springs, after discovering that there was yellow fever there, from the autopsy on the body of Dr. Bemis, who had been at Ocean Springs, immediately returned thence to the city of New Orleans, and they located about in different portions of the city to the number of many hundreds, I am told, and the disease broke out here and there all over the city.

There was not the means to isolate, and when the disease got into the portion of the city inhabited by the Italians and some of the poorer orders of the population, they would not permit the doctors who visited them to report the cases of yellow fever, so that the system of disinfection could be resorted to. The consequence was that the disease spread all over the city. I can say to the Senator from Florida that it was not because of the failure of the principle of isolation and disinfection, but because of the inability of that city, on account of the peculiar circumstances, the enormous grasp which the disease had, the extent to which it had gone, and the failure to report the cases of yellow fever that I have mentioned, that the apparent failure of the principle of isolation occurred.

Mr. MALLORY. But it is a fact that efforts were made to check it in the city of New Orleans?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALLORY. By the methods that the Senator has mentioned?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALLORY. And nevertheless it did not check it to the extent of killing the disease.

Mr. CAFFERY. I know an example that occurred right in my little town, and I will narrate it. I will give proof positive of the superiority of the modern system of treating yellow fever over the old system. I live near a small city called Franklin, in the State of Louisiana. In 1854 the yellow fever visited that town. It was a town the population of which did not exceed a thousand inhabitants. As soon as the yellow fever made its appearance, some time in the latter part of October, everybody who could leave town left it.

The yellow fever decimated that population. It killed fully 50 per cent of the inhabitants who were left, and it died out from want of fuel. Everybody had it who could take it, and when the frost came the refugees returned. No yellow fever occurred in that town from that date until 1897. In 1897 a man died there three or four days before I left for Washington. He was an Italian tailor. There was a shotgun quarantine for 100 miles between New Orleans and Franklin. Nobody could tell how that yellow fever got in. It did get in; the tailor died.

Dr. Carter, a most efficient, able, conscientious physician belonging to the medical corps of the Marine-Hospital Service, was telegraphed for. He came. There was some doubt about the yellow fever. He is an expert in the diagnosis of yellow fever. He pronounced the case yellow fever. What did he do? He ordered the man's family to be removed from the house in which they lived and in which he died to a barge in the bayou. It was moored in the stream. He put a cordon of guards around it and on it. No intercourse with the barge was allowed except by immunes. The disease communicated itself to one member of the immediate family of the dead tailor and to other parties who had communication with the family of the stricken man. Three deaths occurred. He fumigated the premises. He disinfected every place where the yellow fever had found lodgment. Three deaths and 8 cases occurred, as against 200 in 1854. The population of that town now is over 3,000.

There is a complete demonstration, not only of the ease and facility and proficiency that this disinfecting process can be used, but it is an instance of the efficiency of the surgeons of the Marine-Hospital Service. I can say to the Senator from Georgia and to the Senators here that all through the part of Louisiana with which I am conversant the people have the most unbounded confidence in the medical corps of the Marine-Hospital Service. I can speak, not only of Dr. Carter, but of Dr. Geddings, another attaché of the medical service. Dr. Geddings, by an implication, not by a direct charge, in a statement from Dr. Porter quoted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], is charged with some sort of negligence or ignorance, I do not know which. Dr. Geddings was down there. He and Dr. Carter rendered invaluable service to that community, not only in the city of New Orleans, but to the whole agricultural interest.

While upon this branch I will mention another service that they performed. The yellow fever was flagrant in New Orleans in October. October is the period of the year when the sugar crop is about to be harvested. In the harvesting of the sugar crop about 75 per cent more hands are employed on the plantations than in cultivating the crop. Among those hands are a great many skilled artisans—sugar boilers, engineers, and handlers of machinery in various ways, for there is a great deal of machinery about a sugarhouse. Local quarantines were everywhere. It looked like a country in a condition of war. You were met at every 5 or 10 miles by a guard, armed to the teeth, challenging, questioning, examining into your every movement.

It was utterly impossible to get hands from abroad, from Mississippi and Alabama and other States from which the plantations in Louisiana draw their supply of hands. Dr. Carter established a detention camp about 15 miles out from the city of New Orleans. He and the State health authorities entered into an agreement to the effect that all workmen destined for sugar plantations, after remaining in this camp of detention for a certain period, should be released, after being subjected to the regimen required at this camp in order to free them from disease. A great many, I think, came right out of New Orleans, as most of the mechanics did, and after a certain period were allowed to go to the plantations and go to work.

A large portion of the sugar crop of Louisiana was to be taken off by these hands. They were given their certificates after the period of detention. They went to the plantations; they took off the crops, and not one single case of yellow fever was communicated to anybody from the camp of detention.

Mr. President, without an authority that can act with the celerity and the power and the certainty of the United States in case of such an epidemic as they had last year, that swept over the land like a besom of destruction, how is it possible for people either to be saved or to transact the ordinary and necessary concerns of life? It is human life, first, that is to be saved. It is the necessities of human life, second, that must be administered to.

Mr. BACON. Now, if the Senator will permit one final interruption, I will not trouble him any more. He has been very kind. I want to ask the Senator right in that line if he would be willing to agree to this amendment to the pending bill, letting all the provisions in it stand and then follow it with this:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the right of any State or municipality to protect its citizens from infectious, contagious, or epidemic diseases by such rules or regulations as the authorities of the said State or municipality may deem necessary.

Giving all the power to the Federal Government that the Senator proposes, would he be willing to add that to the bill? It would simply save to the States and municipalities the right to supplement the efforts of the Federal Government and endeavor to protect themselves by their own measures. Would the Senator be willing for that?

Mr. CAFFERY. There was a similar amendment to the one suggested by the Senator from Georgia proposed by a member of the other House from Mississippi, a distinguished man, an able man, General CATCHINGS. While not prepared to accept it, I can not now, from simply hearing it read, point out any defect in its scope. I have no idea of circumscribing the State power in any particular. I do not want to do it. If the State power were, in my opinion, competent to cope with the question of quarantine in its relation to interstate commerce and travel, I would not have a word to say. But I beg the Senator from Georgia to remember that here is a power given for another purpose, which in its beneficent operation can not only aid but can supplant the State health authorities, because of its greater efficiency, its greater service, its greater regularity, its greater power.

As an illustration of the question propounded by the Senator from Georgia, if the yellow fever were in the city of Atlanta, and if the city of Macon were to quarantine against the city of Atlanta, no authority would exist in the United States to break down that quarantine of the city of Macon against the city of Atlanta. That is your business; we can not interfere with it. But you have put a question that goes to the roots of this controversy and tests the doctrine to its extreme limit.

In my view no such case as you put will ever occur; but if it does occur, you come to a clash of paramount authority with an inferior one. The illustration of the quarantine of the city of Macon against the city of Atlanta shows the supremacy of internal police power of a State. The case of shipment of goods from New Orleans to Montgomery shows the supremacy of the power of Congress to regulate commerce. In the harmonious action that ought to obtain between Federal authorities and State authorities, and has always heretofore obtained, I do not believe that any of these extreme instances would ever occur.

The prevailing idea in my mind in advocating this bill and in urging it is to stretch out over the country the protective arm of an authority which can reach to every nook and corner of the Republic. If that arm can be stretched out in the execution of an authority and power different from that of the State police power, and it saves life and promotes the commercial interests of the country at the same time, why raise nice questions and put extreme cases of the exercise of the power, so as to throw discredit on a system imperatively needed?

Besides, Mr. President, the brief recapitulation of the statutes in the matter of Federal quarantine that I have given (and I have not referred to the statute of 1890, which is the last one prior to the act of 1893) shows the steady growth of the idea of Federal quarantine. At first it was naturally left to the State authorities exclusively, and why? The answer is perfectly plain. The seaboard in 1799 contained all of the population of the United States. The main population was settled there upon the seacoast line. The interior was but thinly settled, if at all.

No large cities like Memphis and Vicksburg, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and New Orleans, and other cities in the Mississippi Valley existed then. Then there was no use for a Federal quarantine. But now, with the rapidity of travel, with the enormous extent and volume of intercourse between the States, with cities and villages located everywhere in the interior, larger in population, with infinitely larger trade and travel, than existed on the Atlantic seaboard in 1799, it is clear that a system of quarantine competent to protect both the seaboard and the interior is imperatively needed. No move was made to adopt a control over epidemic diseases by the United States until the fearful epidemic of yellow fever of 1878 spread its ravages all over the South and as far up the Mississippi Valley as Memphis.

From that period to date every law that was passed upon the subject gives more and more power to the Federal Government, growing with the increase of commerce and of travel, growing with the ease and rapidity with which disease could be transported from one part of the country to the other.

Hence it is not only the right but the duty of the Federal Government to come in and bear the expense of maintaining the quarantines, which can not be borne and ought not to be borne by the individual States.

Look at my State. Look at the State of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] before me. There they are upon the Gulf. Vessels from the four quarters of the world can come there. We have to provide an extensive machinery for self-preservation. That expense and that preservation redound to the benefit of the whole of the country, as well as the Atlantic Seaboard and the Mississippi Valley.

Should we be called upon to bear this burden of expense? It has to be borne by somebody. I would ask the Senators who are stickling for the exercise of State authority in a direction where State authority can not be efficiently exercised to pause and consider the enormous burden that devolves upon the seacoast ports in keeping out these diseases that are brought from foreign countries.

None of these diseases are indigenous. They are all exotic. They are imported into our country from the foreign countries. The place now toward which the eye of the civilized world is directed, the harbor of Havana, the scene of the tragedy of the blowing up of the Maine and perhaps of a tragedy that will convulse this continent and involve the whole civilized world in its consequences, is the prolific breeding place of the germs of yellow fever that destroy our people. Ships from there can enter our ports at any place, and the States must bear that burden of expense in keeping the disease from the balance of the country——

Mr. PASCO. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PASCO. Is the question of expense an influential motive with the Senator in advocating the present legislation?

Mr. CAFFERY. It is not entirely, but I say it is a just consideration. It is not the sole motive with me.

Mr. MONEY. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator gave a very interesting description a moment ago of the efficiency by which houses infected were isolated and the disease stamped out by means of a camp of detention, and the army of workmen engaged in the sugar plantations were permitted to go to work without spreading the fever. I desire to ask the Senator whether that was done under Federal or State authority?

Mr. CAFFERY. By the Federal authority.

Mr. MONEY. It was done by the Federal authority?

Mr. CAFFERY. I am not sure but that the State or city health officers cooperated with the surgeons of the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. MONEY. Then by the cooperation of State and Federal authorities under the present law it was found amply sufficient to prevent the spread of the disease?

Mr. CAFFERY. The Federal authorities assisted in that emergency.

Mr. MONEY. They volunteered under some authority?

Mr. CAFFERY. They volunteered under the authority of the Surgeon-General.

Mr. MONEY. In other words, whatever may be the law existing permitting the cooperation of State and Federal authorities, it nearly stamped out the disease in the State and prevented its spread.

Mr. CAFFERY. The disease was never stamped out in New Orleans. It was stamped out in my little town of Franklin. I do not want to prejudice my city by any statement as to yellow fever, but I have been told that a case of very well-defined yellow fever was there last January.

Mr. MONEY. I am told twenty-five people were killed by it this winter. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not believe that. I think the very open winter that we are having is quite favorable to the development of any latent germs of yellow fever that have escaped the frost, which was not severe enough to kill the germs entirely.

Mr. WALTHALL. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. WALTHALL. I did not exactly understand the Senator's answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] in relation to his proposed amendment. Do I understand the Senator from Louisiana to say that he would vote for that amendment?

Mr. CAFFERY. No, sir.

Mr. WALTHALL. You will not vote for it?

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not say that I will. I want time to deliberate. I can not answer offhand. I said I was not opposed to the general scope of it as it struck me at first blush, but I will not commit myself to vote for it. I am in favor of any amendment——

Mr. WALTHALL. I wanted to know whether the Senator would vote for it.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am in favor of any amendment that would look toward conserving to the States their proper modicum of police power, and I do not want to set it aside at all in any contingency unless it would interfere with the comprehensive, constitutional, and beneficial working of a Federal law of quarantine.

Mr. President, after this rambling discussion, which has been largely provoked by the number of questions that have been asked of me, I want to go back in my review of the acts to the act of 1890. The act of 1890 ought to be sufficient to convince all doubting Senators as to the ideas that then prevailed in Congress upon the power of the Federal Government over quarantine. The act was passed on the 27th of March, 1890, and it enacted:

That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the President that cholera, yellow fever, smallpox, or plague exists in any State or Territory, or in the District of Columbia, and that there is danger of the spread of such disease into other States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, he is hereby authorized to cause the Secretary of the Treasury to promulgate such rules and regulations as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent the spread of such disease from one State or Territory into another, or from any State or Territory into the District of Columbia, or from the District of Columbia into any State or Territory, and to employ such inspectors and other persons as may be necessary to execute such regulations to prevent the spread of such disease.

The said rules and regulations shall be prepared by the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. And any person who shall willfully violate any rule or regulation so made and promulgated shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Will my friend, the Senator from Georgia, raise any question as to the operation of this law under the section quoted? Whenever these diseases appear anywhere in any State or Territory the President of the United States is authorized to prevent their spread by such rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury as are necessary.

Mr. BACON. That much I would favor.

Mr. CAFFERY. Under these rules and regulations he can stop every train; he can cordon any city in the State of Georgia; he can bottle your people up; he can tell them to go when he wants them to go and to stop when he does not want them to go; he can control every vehicle of transportation, he can control every movement of a train. His authority is supreme and plenary. Yet the Senator from Georgia objects because in the pending bill the application of the broad authority given in this act is again asserted.

Mr. BACON. What act is that?

Mr. CAFFERY. It is the act of 1890.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do you contend that the act of 1890 supersedes State authority and debars the State authorities from having quarantine regulations?

Mr. CAFFERY. Absolutely, so far as regulating interstate commerce is concerned.

Mr. TILLMAN. How or why?

Mr. CAFFERY. I have been trying to say why for about an hour.

Mr. TILLMAN. But what I mean is, where is there a single line in that act which supersedes State authority?

Mr. CAFFERY. I read about forty lines, I thought.

Mr. BACON. The whole act must be taken together, however, in examining that question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have read the whole act through. It simply gives concurrent jurisdiction. It certainly does not supersede State authority.

Mr. CAFFERY. There is a principle of law, I believe, that when a power is given to a body which is said to be supreme, the grant of authority confers the whole authority, and therefore the supreme body in the exercise of that authority can set aside any obstacles of an inferior authority. Here is the plenary authority. It can introduce just such measures as it pleases. Suppose that it is necessary to cordon a town? Suppose it is necessary to stop a train? Can a State say that the town can not be cordoned or that the train can not be stopped? These rules are paramount.

Mr. TILLMAN. What we are contending for is that if a State says it was necessary and the Federal authorities say it was not, the Federal authorities shall not supersede the State authorities to police against these diseases.

Mr. CAFFERY. I never heard anybody contend that but the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is what we are contending for. The whole of us are contending for the preservation of the State power of police regulation.

Mr. CAFFERY. I think the State power of police has been settled by about twenty-five decisions, if not more. The State power of police is one thing; the Federal power of regulating commerce is another thing.

As I have been diverted to that point, I might as well read some authority on it. The very first authority that was ever announced is conclusive, and the only confusion that has arisen has been from a departure from the plain, unambiguous, and comprehensive doctrine laid down in Gibbons vs. Ogden. For the benefit of the Senator from South Carolina, I will read that authority.

Mr. TILLMAN. From the amount of books you have got there——

Mr. CAFFERY. I am not going to read all these books to you; I am afraid you could not stand them.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I could not.

Mr. CAFFERY. In Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheaton, page 203, the chief justice, in rendering the decision, says:

That inspection laws may have a remote and considerable influence on commerce will not be denied, but that a power to regulate commerce is the source from which the right to pass them is derived can not be admitted. The object of inspection laws is to improve the quality of articles produced by the labor of a country; to fit them for exportation, or, it may be, for domestic use. They act upon the subject before it becomes an article of foreign commerce or of commerce among the States and prepare it for that purpose. They form a portion of that immense mass of legislation which embraces everything within the territory of a State not surrendered to the General Government, or which can be most advantageously exercised by the States themselves. Inspection laws, quarantine laws, health laws of every description, as well as laws for regulating the internal commerce of a State, and those which respect turnpike roads, ferries, etc., are component parts of this mass.

I do not think, Mr. President, that it is in the power of language to convey a clearer and more comprehensive meaning of what the police powers of the State are than in the language quoted by me from the opinion in 9 Wheaton. The Chief Justice proceeds:

No direct general power over these objects is granted to Congress, and consequently they remain subject to State legislation. If the legislative power of the Union can reach them, it must be for national purposes; it must be where the power is expressly given for a special purpose or is clearly incidental to some power which is expressly given. It is obvious that the Government of the Union in the exercise of its express powers—that, for example, of regulating commerce with foreign nations and among the States—may use means that may also be employed by a State in the exercise of its acknowledged powers—that, for example, of regulating commerce within the State.

If Congress license vessels to sail from one port to another in the same State, the act is supposed to be, necessarily, incidental to the power expressly granted to Congress and implies no claim of a direct power to regulate the purely internal commerce of a State or to act directly on its system of police. So if a State, in passing laws on subjects acknowledged to be within its control and with a view to those subjects, shall adopt a measure of the same character with one which Congress may adopt, it does not derive its authority from the particular power which has been granted, but from some other which remains with the State and may be executed by the same means. All experience shows that the same measures, or measures scarcely distinguishable from each other, may flow from distinct powers; but this does not prove that the powers themselves are identical. Although the means used in their execution may sometimes approach each other so nearly as to be confounded, there are other situations in which they are sufficiently distinct to establish their individuality.

In our complex system, presenting the rare and difficult scheme of one General Government, whose action extends over the whole, but which possesses only certain enumerated powers, and of numerous State governments, which retain and exercise all powers not delegated to the Union, contests respecting power must arise. Were it even otherwise, the measures taken by the respective governments to execute their acknowledged powers, would often be of the same description and might sometimes interfere. This, however, does not prove that the one is exercising, or has a right to exercise, the powers of the other.

I will come now to the concluding portion of the judgment on this particular point. In speaking of the laws of 1796 and 1799, directing the officers of the United States to comply with the quarantine laws of the States and to assist in their execution, the Chief Justice says:

It is undoubtedly true that they do proceed upon that idea—

That is, upon the idea that the State laws in regard to police were entirely constitutional and within the power of the States to enact—

It is undoubtedly true that they do proceed upon that idea; and the constitutionality of such laws has never, so far as we are informed, been denied. But they do not imply an acknowledgment that a State may rightfully regulate commerce with foreign nations or among the States; for they do not imply that such laws are an exercise of that power, or enacted with a view to it. On the contrary, they are treated as quarantine and health laws, are so denominated in the acts of Congress, and are considered as flowing from the acknowledged power of the State to provide for the health of its citizens.

But as it was apparent that some of the provisions made for this purpose, and in virtue of this power, might interfere with and be affected by the laws of the United States made for the regulation of commerce, Congress, in that spirit and conciliation which ought always to characterize the conduct of governments standing in the relation which that of the Union and those of the States bear to each other, has directed its officers to aid in the execution of these laws, and has, in some measure, adapted its own legislation to this object, by making provisions in aid of those of the States. But in making these provisions the opinion is unequivocally manifested that Congress may control the State laws, so far as it may be necessary to control them, for the regulation of commerce.

Now, there has never been anything said that so clearly stated the difference between the power to regulate commerce, which is a Federal power, and the power of a State over its police affairs, which is a State power; and Chief Justice Marshall goes on to say that while these two powers coming from different sources may pursue their legitimate course and legitimate function and each operate in its sphere beneficially, yet—and I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to this language—whenever it is necessary in the opinion of Congress to control the State law, so far as it acts in opposition or is contradictory to or inconsistent with the power of Congress to regulate commerce, then the Congressional power is paramount and the State law is subordinate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Congress, however, never has done that yet in the hundred and twenty-odd years of our national existence.

Mr. CAFFERY. Congress has in every way, shape, and form, wherever it was necessary for uniformity of action, controlled the State power of police not only in this instance, but in every other instance. From 1878 down, as I have stated, there has been a slow but steady and sure advance made in the matter of taking control of quarantine in the exercise of this undisputed and indisputable authority to regulate commerce not only in that branch, but I refer the Senator from South Carolina to the plenary, exclusive, and complete jurisdiction that the Congress of the United States has over the immigration of persons into this country.

From the very commencement of the Government there have been persistent and constant efforts made by the different States to exercise police power over the subject of immigration. In various ways, under various pretexts, and always under color of the exercise of the police power of the States, they have attempted to legislate in regard to immigration. The very first case on that point was the matter of trying to impose a tax upon immigrants arriving in New York in order to keep up a fund for paupers and immigrants who had to be supported.

The decision in the case of New York vs. Miln was that the police power exhausted itself in the matter of requiring from the master of a vessel a statement of the age, residence, and occupation of the immigrant; and from that period down to the time when Congress assumed complete jurisdiction over immigration the States through different enactments have attempted, under color of the police power, under color of the power of keeping out convicts, diseased people, and paupers, under color of that power which is as clearly a police power as any power exercised by them as a health law, they have attempted to regulate that large branch of commerce, and they have always failed.

Whenever there has been a decision on the point, it has been that the Congressional power was supreme and the State authority could not be exercised. So this decision of Chief Justice Marshall is a guide to-day for legislation on this very important matter of the public health. The powers come from different sources.

In language as broad and clear as the English language can afford the Chief Justice admits and concedes the police powers of the State. I admit and concede them.

I would be the last man to invade the sacred precincts of State sovereignty, but gentlemen must remember that the Constitution is supreme; that in the enactment of laws under the Constitution the question is as to the ascendency of the Congressional law over the State law when the latter conflicts with the former, although the State law, as the Chief Justice says in this decision, may be enacted in pursuance of a clear constitutional and undisputed right on its part.

It has been heretofore a question of policy. I have tried to tell the Senate and the Senator from South Carolina why it is necessary now for the Federal power to come in and take charge of the matter of public health.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CAFFERY. I will.

Mr. TILLMAN. Without disputing the dictum of the Chief Justice which the Senator has read or the decision as to the paramount law, and acknowledging that the centralizing tendencies of this Government have rapidly absorbed not only the reserved rights of the States, but all rights almost, the question of policy is the one we are discussing rather than the question of legality; and those of us who are in the South and represent States more particularly subject to the inroads of yellow fever, including the Senator's own State, disagree with him, I believe, almost to a man, as to the desirability of obliterating State police regulation.

You want to supersede and destroy, so to speak, the State boards of health and their control over quarantine of any description and kind, and put it absolutely in the power of some bureau in Washington to govern the whole thing and regulate the whole thing and annul all the regulations and do away with the State control; and to that extent we disagree with you.

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator from South Carolina asked me a question which indicated his idea that the State police power was exclusive and paramount. I attempted to answer that question by a citation from Gibbons vs. Ogden.

Mr. TILLMAN. The only trouble about it is that the courts have always the right to decide what is the police power, and while acknowledging that the police power is paramount in the States, they will say, "This is not the police power, and that is not the police power, and therefore you must get out of the way and give way to commerce."

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to know who else is going to decide it but the courts.

Mr. TILLMAN. Nobody but the courts; but they always decide in favor of the Federal contention.

Mr. CAFFERY. Now the Senator is upon the line of desirability. Upon that point, of course, people can differ in opinion. I think the State of Louisiana, on account of her position and climate, her large commercial city so easily invaded by yellow fever, her terrible experiences with yellow fever, is as much entitled to an opinion of the desirability of this law as any other State upon the Gulf or on the Atlantic coast. I thought the Senator was leveling his first inquiry at a question of constitutionality, and I can not discover whether or not the opponents of the bill are really of mind that the police powers of a State are subordinate to the power of the Government in their exercise in any direction or not. The paramount police powers of a State are constantly paraded here and the undesirability of setting them aside is now held before us.

Mr. TILLMAN. Please give me the decision you read from just a moment ago. There is some language there to which I wish to call your attention.

Mr. CAFFERY. It is page 206.

Mr. President, we are told, I will not say with a sneer, but certainly in language implying some contempt, that a little bureau at Washington wants to dictate to some great bureau somewhere in some State. I know something about little bureaus.

I know something about the barbarities and inefficiency of State quarantines. I have heard of brutal and savage acts performed. I have heard of all sorts of inconsistencies, all sorts of caprices, and the idea of a little bureau having authority to keep out and suppress infectious or contagious diseases is not appalling to me. I am not enamored of shotgun quarantines. With that exercise of State police power which brings one portion of the population out in martial array to keep another portion of the population housed up, without anything but powder and lead to kill disease, I am not in sympathy.

In my State every municipality has the power of quarantine. Every town has a different set of regulations. The towns quarantine against the country and the country against the towns, and one town against another, and it is a succession of quarantines. I suppose it is alike in other States in the South. The system is perfectly inefficient. It is arbitrary, tyrannical, cruel, and useless.

Mr. PASCO. If the Senator will allow me, I hope he will not pronounce it inefficient in the State of Florida after acknowledging, as he has done, that there was a successful effort under our State laws to keep yellow fever out of the State during the past summer.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am particularizing no district. Taking the system of State quarantines altogether, from my own standpoint and my own observation, I pronounce them utterly inefficient, utterly unable to cope with disease, utterly powerless in the face of this great enemy, yellow fever or cholera, and the prolific source of panic and fright. They paralyze industry and keep the people walled up in a cordon of shotguns, while death revels in the midst of the palisade of arms. Sir, it is science we want; it is skill we want: it is an authority and power able to cope with the enemy; and if we can get it under the Constitution, if the beneficence of the Constitution can extend to a suffering people a protecting arm in the hour of their misfortune, when funeral cortege after funeral cortege wends to the cemeteries with the victims of disease, then, sir, I say give us this arm, give us this protection.

I do not ask for this bill to infringe any right conserved to the States, and Senators, when pressed, after propounding the most astute and ingenious conundrums in regard to the extent of the application of the Federal power, confess that it is a matter of expediency after all; it is a matter of proficiency of this branch of the service over another branch of the service; it is simply a question whether these separate and distinct and irregular executions of law in forty-five States are better than one uniform, regular, consistent plan of action proposed by the Federal authority and executed by the Federal authority.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Disclaiming any intention to sneer at or ridicule or belittle or in any manner criticise the Federal Marine-Hospital Service, for I certainly have no such purpose, I desire to read out of this very decision which you have read something which presents our side of this question very clearly.

Mr. CAFFERY. Which is your side?

Mr. TILLMAN. If you will wait——

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to know what side of the question you are on.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am against you absolutely, if you want to know it——

Mr. CAFFERY. I want to know what you are against.

Mr. TILLMAN. And your proposition.

Mr. CAFFERY. What is the precise question as to which you are on the other side from me? That is what I want to know.

Mr. TILLMAN. I contend that there is a State power of police which the Federal Government can not destroy.

Mr. CAFFERY. All right; that is it. What particular power of police is it which it can not destroy?

Mr. TILLMAN. Just wait. Here is an extract from the same decision, in Gibbons vs. Ogden, from which you just quoted:

In our complex system—presenting the rare and difficult scheme of one General Government whose action extends over the whole, but which possesses only certain enumerated powers, and of numerous State governments which retain and exercise all powers not delegated to the Union—contests respecting power must arise. Were it even otherwise, the measures taken by the respective governments to execute their acknowledged powers would often be of the same description and might sometimes interfere. This, however, does not prove that the one is exercising, or has a right to exercise, the powers of the other.

Repeating what you have just read:

Congress, in that spirit of harmony and conciliation which ought always to characterize the conduct of governments standing in the relation which that of the Union and those of the States bear to each other, has directed its officers to aid in the execution of these laws.

Mr. CAFFERY. Where is the great point in that?

Mr. TILLMAN. The point is that it is never expedient for the Federal authority to intervene and suppress and destroy the police power of the State.

Mr. CAFFERY. Is that a point of law? Do you state that as a proposition of law?

Mr. TILLMAN. I state it as a point of law, because your judge states that there are different powers which can not be ignored.

Mr. CAFFERY. I did not know before that the question of expediency was ever a question of law. I thought law was a rule of conduct, but I am always willing to learn. I do not know now what side of the question the Senator from South Carolina is on, whether he is on the side of the question of the police power being supreme over the Government of the United States or the Government power over the State police power. I am at a loss to know.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me ask you, then, this question, and perhaps we will get at an understanding after a while. You contend that the Federal authority regulates commerce. That I do not deny. Now, let us suppose that a man with yellow fever, known to have it, starts out of one State and enters the boundaries of another, enters on a ticket, we will say, bought at Charlotte, N. C., for Columbia, in the center of my State. Can we stop him at the boundary of the State, or must he go to the destination, the point to which his ticket reads, which it is within the power of Congress to regulate?

Mr. CAFFERY. Without any Federal quarantine law in the premises?

Mr. TILLMAN. Just simply say with the Federal right to regulate commerce, which you say destroys the police power of the State.

Mr. CAFFERY. With his ticket——

Mr. TILLMAN. The ticket is evidence that it is a case of interstate commerce or of the right which Congress has to regulate interstate commerce as protection against the quarantine powers of the State. I want to know where you would stop him?

Mr. CAFFERY. You can stop him anywhere under that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why?

Mr. CAFFERY. Because the United States has not made any quarantine law in the premises.

Mr. TILLMAN. We want to stop you from making such a one here now, if you want to know where we are.

Mr. CAFFERY. You are not going to stop me if the Senate does not.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course not. The Senate is going to do as it pleases. The question with the Senate is what is expedient and proper and constitutional.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am at a loss to know what the Senator from South Carolina stands on. He commences to state a proposition of law and then goes on and illustrates it by statements of fact——

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask you to define the difference between the national power of commerce to let this man go to Columbia and the State power of police to stop him at the boundary; or can it only do that at the termination of his journey, the place to which his interstate ticket permits him to go?

Mr. CAFFERY. I will attempt to do that, if the Senator will just be quiet and not put any more illustrations.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the Senator from Louisiana desire to conclude to-night?

Mr. CAFFERY. I will answer the question, and then I will yield. The State police power is exercised from an independent authority. It is exercised from an authority inherent in the States to take care of and preserve the health, the life, the property, the comfort of its citizens. The Federal power to regulate commerce comes from another source. It comes from the direct language of the Constitution, as the Federal power is derived from grants of enumerated power. Now, so long as Congress does not act in a regulation of commerce which affects the police power, then the police power of the State is paramount. In the case you supposed the ticket would not give the man the privileges of going into a State when the police power of the State prevented him. That is all. That is the answer to the question. Now I am ready to yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 22, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WARREN C. BEACH.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask on behalf of the minority of the Committee on Military Affairs leave to file the minority report in the case of Warren C. Beach for ten days after the majority report is filed.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the nature of the case?

Mr. GRIFFIN. The bill, which was authorized to be reported by the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs, proposes to restore an officer to the retired list of the Army who is not now in the Army, and we ask for time to file the minority report.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to make an objection, but I do not see Mr. SULZER in his seat——

A MEMBER. Mr. SULZER is in the House.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. I merely ask for ten days after the majority report is filed in the case of William C. Beach to file a minority report.

Mr. SULZER. That is satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRIFFIN]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report a Senate resolution for the return of a bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the resolution agreeing to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 924) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and accordingly the resolution will be returned.

STATE TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. SAUERHERING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4584) to create State trade-marks and to protect foreign and interstate commerce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to prevent the false branding or other marking of goods, wares, or merchandise, the product of any State or Territory of the United States or of the District of Columbia, which are or are intended to become articles of foreign or interstate commerce or commerce with the Indian tribes, the governor of any such State or Territory and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to adopt a public trade-mark each for his or their respective State, Territory, or the District aforesaid, and file a description and illustration of the same in the Patent Office of the United States; but no such trade-mark or label shall be entitled to such registration which consists of or simulates the arms, seals, or other insignia of the United States, or of any State or municipality, or of any foreign nation, or which is offensive to public sentiment or morals.

SEC. 2. That upon the receipt of any description and illustration of a trade-mark as provided in the preceding section, and upon payment of a fee of $25, the Commissioner of Patents shall register the same, and a certificate of such registration, fully describing such trade-mark, shall be issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the Department of the Interior, and signed by the Commissioner of Patents, and a full record thereof be made and kept in books for that purpose. Copies of any such trade-marks, and of the descriptions accompanying the same, and of the certificate of registry, when duly authenticated by the Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner of Patents, shall be received in evidence in all courts and by all officers of the United States, and shall be conclusive proof of the adoption and registration of such trade-marks.

SEC. 3. That every such trade-mark shall be used only under and in accordance with such rules, regulations, and restrictions as may be provided by or according to the laws of the State, Territory, or District adopting and filing the same, and upon goods, wares, and merchandise produced, grown, or manufactured therein, and upon packages and wrappers containing the same.

SEC. 4 That every person who, contrary to the provisions of this act or to the laws, rules, regulations, and restrictions of any State or Territory or the District aforesaid, affixes the registered trade-mark of such State, Territory, or District, or causes or procures the same to be affixed, or any colorable imitation thereof calculated to deceive the public, to any goods, wares, or merchandise which are or are intended for sale, shipment, consumption, or use without and beyond the boundaries of such State, Territory, or District, or to any package or wrapper containing the same, shall be liable to an action on the case for damages for the wrongful use of said trade-mark at the suit of the owner thereof; and the party aggrieved shall also have his remedy according to the course of equity to enjoin the wrongful use of such trade-mark used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with the Indian tribes, as aforesaid, and to recover compensation therefor in any court having jurisdiction over the person guilty of such wrongful act; and courts of the United States shall have original and appellate jurisdiction in such cases without regard to the amount in controversy.

SEC. 5. That every person who shall knowingly deal in, or sell, or keep, or offer for sale, or cause or procure the sale of any goods, wares, or merchandise, in order that the same may become, or after they have become, subjects of foreign or interstate commerce, to which, or to the package or wrapper containing the same, there is fraudulently affixed any public trade-mark, as provided in this act, or any colorable imitation thereof calculated to deceive the public, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 4 of this act.

SEC. 6. That every person who fraudulently fills, or causes or procures to be fraudulently filled, any package, or fraudulently uses, or causes or procures to be used, any wrapper to which is affixed any public trade-mark registered pursuant to the provisions of this act, or any colorable imitation thereof calculated to deceive the public, with any goods, wares, or merchandise, with intent to deceive or mislead any purchaser or user of the same as to their true character, origin, or source, shall, if said goods, wares, or merchandise have become or are intended to become subjects of foreign or interstate commerce or commerce with the Indian tribes, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 4 of this act.

SEC. 7. That if any person shall brand, mark, stamp, stencil, label, name, or describe any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any package or wrapper containing the same, which have or may become subjects of foreign or interstate commerce, in such manner as may be calculated to deceive or mislead any purchaser or user of the same as to the true character of such goods, wares, or merchandise, or as to the place where they were grown, produced, or manufactured, or shall cause or procure the same to be done by others; or if any person for himself, or as the agent or factor for another, or as a member of any copartnership, or as a manager, superintendent, agent, or representative of any corporation, shall have in his possession or under his control any goods, wares, or merchandise which he knows or has good reason to believe bear any public trade-mark, or any brand, mark, stamp, stencil, label, name, or description, in contravention of the provisions of this act, he is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 4 of this act.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I object. This is too important a bill to be considered in this way.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 1595) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Naval Affairs have directed me to report the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, with accompanying report, and I ask that the bill and report be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, it will be understood that all points of order are reserved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, reports the naval appropriation bill; and without objection, it will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with all points of order reserved.

There was no objection.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—THORP VS. EPES.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up the election case from the Fourth Virginia district—Thorp against Epes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves to take up the election case of Thorp against Epes. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Sydney P. Epes was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Fourth district of Virginia, and is not entitled to his seat.

Resolved, That R. T. Thorp was duly elected as a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia to the Fifty-fifth Congress, and is entitled to the seat.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will ask that debate on this case be limited to four hours on a side. I believe that is the usual time.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I will also ask that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS] shall control the debate for the minority.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the contestant be allowed to address the House in his own behalf.

The SPEAKER. As a part of the four hours?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire that the contestant shall now address the House?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. No; but that he shall be allowed to during the debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the contestant be allowed to address the House as a part of the four hours' debate on that side. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. It is understood that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER] shall control the time upon that side.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia was recognized.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana and Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. There is too much confusion on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken. Gentlemen will cease conversation or retire to the cloakrooms.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Virginia will allow me, I will ask to have the resolution of the minority read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That R. T. Thorp was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Fourth district of Virginia, and is not entitled to his seat.

Resolved, That Sydney P. Epes was duly elected as a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia to the Fifty-fifth Congress, and is entitled to the seat.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will state it.

Mr. BRUCKER. I would like to know whether or not it would be in order at this time to make a motion that either of the resolutions reported by the majority or the minority be laid on the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not after the consent of the House for four hours' debate upon a side and after the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER] has been recognized to address the House.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the minority report, signed by only three members of the committee, contains a bill of indictment against the other six members, consisting of several counts, to which I desire, in the names of these honorable gentlemen, to demur, and plead not guilty.

To the charge of undue haste in filing the majority report, I will rest upon the demurrer, since it appears that one-half the term of the Fifty-fifth Congress has already expired, and the contestee is still the sitting member. It has been nearly three months since the present session commenced. It has been over six weeks since the case was argued and submitted to the committee for consideration. It has been two weeks since the committee reported to the House. And yet the minority say, "Such haste is unusual, not to say unfair." Admitting these facts to be true, the demurrer to the indictment should be sustained.

The three lawyers who sign the minority report, with becoming modesty, characterize the majority report, signed by six lawyers, as "disregarding the plainest principles of law" and of "misstating and garbling the evidence." It seems never to have occurred to these learned, able, and wholly nonpartisan gentlemen that peradventure it is their report which "violates the plainest principles of law and garbles the evidence."

If I thought as they do, Mr. Speaker, I would endeavor to point out the errors into which my associates upon the committee had fallen, without hurling epithets and impugning the motives of a majority so respectable in point of numbers, at least, if they are not in point of ability and honesty the equals of the members who sign the minority report.

The Fourth Congressional district of Virginia is an old acquaintance to some of the members of this House. It has figured on this floor in four contested elections in ten years.

It is located in the heart of the black belt, and was carved out by a Democratic legislature in 1870, so as to embrace as large a Republican majority as possible, and it has not been changed since.

It embraces eleven counties and one city, each of which has a majority of negro votes.

The colored male inhabitants in the whole district over 21 exceed the white males over 21 by 4,563, and the Republican majority in a fair election ranges from five to nine thousand. For eighteen years after Virginia was admitted to representation in this House under the reconstruction acts the Fourth district was represented by a Republican without a single contest.

Up to this time the Virginia election laws and methods were tolerably fair, but after 1886 the methods introduced by the infamous Anderson-McCormick law came in vogue, and from that day we have had fraud, corruption, and outrage in the elections in Virginia, and especially and particularly in the Fourth Congressional district. Since the war only four Democrats have been returned from that district, and only once has a Democrat been returned from the district whose seat was not contested; and two of the Republican contestants were seated, while one contest was never decided. With this record it is clear that the returns, which give the contestee a majority of 2,621 votes, bear on their face prima facie evidence of fraud.

The proof shows that the Republican vote was solid and enthusiastic in support of the contestant, who received 724 votes more than the Republican candidate for President, leaving out the 491 votes counted for the bogus candidate, J. L. Thorp.

It is further shown that the Democrats were divided into silver and gold Democrats, many of the latter voting for contestant.

There was a contested election from the same district in the Fifty-fourth Congress, between the same gentleman who is contestant here to-day and one McKenney, known as Thorp vs. McKenney. In that case the Committee on Elections No. 3 reported unanimously in favor of seating the contestant, and he was seated by a unanimous vote of the House.

In this Congress we have the same contestant from the same district, the record furnishing conclusive evidence of the same irregularities, the same frauds, the same outrages, the same disregard of the plainest provisions of law, the same disgraceful methods which were practiced in 1894, and by the same identical men and the same election officers.

In 1894 there appeared on the official ballot the name of a bogus candidate for Congress—an unknown and illiterate negro named Thorton—placed there for the purpose of confusing and deceiving the illiterate voters.

In 1896 we find on the official ballot the name of an illiterate white man, a citizen of Greenesville County, named J. L. Thorp, who could not write the notice of his candidacy and did not know whether such notice had to be sent to Richmond or to Washington. He did not know the name of a county in the district, except the one in which he lived. He is a Democrat; voted for the contestee, received but one vote at his home precinct, and his name was placed upon the ballot by the procurement of Democratic election officers. The record shows that one Lashley, a Democratic member of the electoral board for Greenesville County, and one Powell, counsel for the contestee in this contest, sought out this unknown and illiterate voter, whose name is the same as that of contestant, and induced him to allow his name to be sent in as a candidate for Congress from the Fourth district.

Although no voter has ever been found, or can be found, who will say he voted for him, yet this decoy duck received 491 votes to which the contestant was justly entitled. The object of Lashley in having this man's name placed on the ticket is stated by him in his testimony. When asked why he wanted J. L. Thorp to become a candidate, he answers:

I wanted to see how many votes he could get, and have a little fun out of it. Because I thought he would draw from the vote of R. T. Thorp and assist in electing Epes. I expected them to vote for J. L. Thorp ignorantly.

The official ballot in Virginia is kept secret, and no voter is permitted to know the size, shape, or contents of the same, and when an illiterate voter desired to cast his ballot for Thorp he was asked, "Which Thorp?" and not knowing there were two, or the initials of his candidate, the Democratic judge would say, "Do you want to vote for J. L. Thorp?" If the voter would say, "I want to vote for the Republican candidate," he would be told that the marker did not know which was the Republican, or that they were both Republicans.

This fraud committed by election officers affected every precinct in the whole district. And when added to other frauds at various precincts in the district, renders them wholly unreliable.

The majority returned for the contestant is	2,621
The contestee admits an error of	133
Leaving contestee a plurality of	2,488
The contestant claims excluded votes at seven precincts amounting to	623

By excluded votes is meant voters who were in line at the polls on the day of election for the purpose of voting, but on account of delays, insufficient voting facilities, or other causes beyond their control, were prevented from exercising their privileges as electors. There were over 1,000 excluded, but only 623 are counted. These 623 were each and every one put upon the witness stand and proved the facts which entitled them to vote and have their ballots counted for the contestant.

No voter has been counted in this case upon tally lists or upon certificates given to tally keepers at the polls.

Time will only allow me to refer to the evidence of two or three of these excluded voters as specimens of all.

Richard Smith says:

Got to polls at 8 o'clock; got in line; tried to vote and was shoved back by a policeman. I went away at 11 o'clock; came back at 4, and remained in line until polls closed.

Edward Holmes:

In line from 9 o'clock until polls closed; would not give me a ballot; Michael Beck every time he would get a sign from a policeman would shove me back.

Hampton King:

I could not get a chance to get in; so many there I could not vote; some one would always be ahead of me. Got at polls to sunrise and stayed until polls closed.

Cato Davis:

Got to the polls at 10 o'clock and remained until the polls closed. I tried to get in and others would get in all the time ahead of me.

Benjamin Alexander:

Was in line five hours and in line when the polls closed. White men came after I was in line, and the policeman who was stationed inside the rope with his club told me to stand back and let those white men pass.

And so we might go on through the entire regiment of 623 excluded voters, calling the roll of these helpless citizens of the United States deprived of the elective franchise, guaranteed to them by the Federal Constitution, by the fraudulent conduct of partisan election officers and infamous election laws corruptly administered.

These 623 Republican voters were, with few exceptions, all colored voters, and they prove: (1) That they were legally qualified voters; (2) that they were at the polls and used every effort to vote; (3) that they were not allowed to vote; (4) that they would have voted for contestant.

Mr. HOPKINS. How many votes of that kind were excluded?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Over a thousand, but we only count 623. We count only those who were actually examined as witnesses in the case and upon their oath state the facts.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The gentleman says that there were over a thousand who were excluded from voting, and that only 623 were examined. Why, then, does he say that there were over a thousand?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Because there were over a thousand of them at the polls that day who were counted by men capable of counting, and who gave certificates that they wanted to vote and were not allowed to do so.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Does the gentleman claim that those certificates were competent evidence in this case?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Certainly the gentleman has not been listening to my argument. I have twice stated expressly that we have not counted a single one upon the evidence merely of certificates; that we have only counted the votes of 623 men who were put upon the stand as witnesses and examined.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Then you do not claim that those certificates are competent evidence?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I do not contend for them in this case. This is the third time I have said so. But those certificates are here, and there are over 1,000 persons who are thus certified—about 1,050.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Was any declaration made by any of these parties at the time of the election that they intended to vote and were not allowed to do so?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes, sir. When the polls were closed a list was taken of their names and certificates given that they wanted to vote, but had been rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman to say he did not rely on those certificates as competent evidence.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Not at all in this case.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Then, is there any other evidence as to how those persons would have voted—evidence taken at the time?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. The gentleman means any evidence besides their own?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes; there is other evidence—evidence that they were Republicans.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The mere fact that they were Republicans would not be sufficient evidence.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. We do not ask that mere declarations be accepted. We only ask you to count the evidence of witnesses sworn, examined, and cross-examined.

It is further proved that practically all the excluded voters were Republicans, and that few, if any, Democrats were excluded. Add to this startling result the fact that at every precinct in the district the election machinery was in the hands of the Democrats; that at two of these seven precincts all the election officers were Democrats and Democratic officeholders; that at one the so-called Republican was an illiterate negro who could not read and write; that Republicans were not allowed to witness the count, and you have warrant sufficient to believe that these voters were not honestly excluded.

Take the further fact that at precincts where there was a large Democratic majority, with no greater voting facilities, there were as many as 700 and 800 votes polled, while at the precincts where there were large Republican majorities only 350 and 400 votes were polled, while large numbers of Republican voters were left in line.

It abundantly appears that these voters were excluded from no fault of theirs, but by the fraudulent tactics designedly resorted to by Democratic election officers.

These fraudulent practices in Virginia elections by which voters are excluded from voting are well known and have been practiced in that State for twenty-five years. They have been exposed time and again, but, like Banquo's ghost, they will not down. They "bob up serenely" at every election, and receive the plaudits of the successful candidates and their friends, while the guilty election officers are crowned with laurel and rewarded with fat offices.

They bobbed up in this House in the contested election cases of Waddill vs. Wise, Thorp vs. McKenney, and in Tucker vs. Yost, and they have bobbed up in nearly every contested election case in Virginia for fifteen years. They are legion, and are shown to exist in every known variety in this case:

1. By illegally forming lines of white and colored voters where the colored voters are in the majority and voting them alternately, so that all the Democratic votes would be polled early in the day and the Republicans delayed.
2. By not opening polls at sunrise.
3. Adjourning an hour for meals.
4. Judges and clerks absenting themselves from the polls while voting was suspended.
5. Wasting time in unnecessary and frivolous challenges.
6. Delays in squabbling over law questions.
7. Pretending not to be able to find name of voter on registration book.
8. Asking frivolous and vexatious questions.
9. Arresting tally keepers.
10. Delay in calling up voters.
11. Calling up a voter and then sending him back to the line without voting.
12. In calling up voters out of order.

It is not contended that all these methods of delay were resorted to at each precinct where there were excluded voters; but it is asserted that some of them occurred at every such precinct.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The gentleman represents a Virginia district, I believe?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Did what the gentleman just described ever occur in his district?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Did it occur in the election to the Fifty-fifth Congress?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. If the gentleman wants to ask a question, he will please rise.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky (rising). I will rise. Did that occur at the election to the Fifty-fifth Congress?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Why, my friend, let me tell you. You ask me about what occurred in Virginia.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. No, I confine my question to the gentleman's district.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. What has my district to do with the question? My seat is not contested. I will tell the gentleman, though, what was done in my district: They cheated me out of hundreds of votes; and the electoral board in Richmond tried to keep me out because some of the votes were cast for "James A. Walker" and others for "J. A. Walker." They said those votes were intended for two different men; and they threw one batch of them out. That is what they did in my district.

We can not in the limited time allowed for this debate refer in detail to all these seven precincts, but will ask the indulgence of the House while I refer to some of them.

FIRST WARD, PETERSBURG.

The election officers here were all Democrats. It is largely Republican, and only 394 votes were polled, while at the Fifth Ward in the same city, where there is a Democratic majority returned for contestee of 269 votes, 733 votes were polled. There were three voting booths at each of these precincts, so that the voting facilities were equal. The polls at this precinct were closed for an hour each time while the judges were eating their breakfasts and dinners.

Discriminations were made against Republican voters. The judges were men of bad character, and they have been judges at the same precinct for years, and have been proved in former election cases to have been guilty of frauds in excluding voters.

One of the clerks is a rowdy, and another a tin-horn gambler. This notorious tin-horn gambler, named Friend, proposed that when a ticket had the name of one Thorp scratched off, they should scratch off the other Thorp and count the ballot for Epes. And when the judges refused, Friend said he did not know "What they were there for, as they could not afford to let those d——d Republicans carry this ward."

The minority report resorts to arithmetic to prove that there were no unnecessary delays. They calculate that allowing two and one-half minutes to each voter not more than 250 votes could have been polled. This is allowing to each voter the maximum time allowed by the law. Experience proves that on an average not more than one minute is consumed by voters in preparing and depositing their ballots, else how could 733 votes have been polled at another precinct?

But the minority forget, or do not know, that there were three booths at Ward No. 1 in Petersburg, and, allowing the maximum time to each voter, there could have been cast 750 votes at this precinct in ten hours. The minority are as far wrong in their arithmetic as they are in their law and facts; and yet I will not say that these honorable gentlemen "misstate the law and garble the facts." They have only been led into unintentional errors and innocently overlooked the facts established by the record, while following blindly the brief of contestee's counsel.

SIXTH WARD, PETERSBURG.

At this precinct all the election officers were Democrats, and two of them city officeholders.

There were many unnecessary delays, and only 382 votes were polled.

Witnesses prove that the delays at this precinct consisted of (1) delay of fifteen minutes in opening the polls, (2) thirty minutes for breakfast, (3) thirty minutes for dinner, (4) judges and clerks separately were out for ten minutes at a time, aggregating about one hour, during which time no votes were cast—making in all over two hours wasted by these officers.

Discriminations were made against Republican voters, and some voters were allowed to consume from fifteen to twenty minutes in voting. Akers, one of the judges at this precinct, after the election, feeling proud and boastful over the new laurels he had won as a manipulator of votes and a ballot-box stuffer, said to a witness, Dewell: "Tom, you know as well as I do, if the election had been acted properly, that the Republicans would have carried Petersburg by a large majority. The tickets were fixed for that purpose, to keep the people from understanding how to vote." This same judge was detected in the act of mismarking the ballots of Republican voters.

A sample of the ballots used in Virginia is found on pages 642 and 643 of the record, and it bears on its face evidence of an intention to throw every obstacle in the way of an honest voter.

BOYLTON AND CLARKSVILLE.

At both these precincts the judges discriminated by forming the white and colored voters in two lines and voting alternately one white and then one colored voter. The colored voters being largely in the majority, the effect of the arrangement was to allow all the Democrats to vote at an early hour and delay and hinder the Republican voters. The contestant was present at Bodyton precinct and protested against this arrangement as unjust to him, but his protest was disregarded.

PROSPECT.

There were only 394 votes cast at this precinct, and 60 or 70 were left in line when the polls closed.

The delays at this precinct were clearly proved.

Witnesses who timed the voting by the watch prove that it took forty-nine minutes to poll 5 voters, or nearly ten minutes to each voter.

Another witness timed another voter whom it took nine minutes to vote.

There is more evidence of delay at this precinct which we have not time to refer to here.

LAWRENCEVILLE.

The evidence of delays at this precinct are the same as at the others.

Eighty-seven Republicans were excluded and not a single Democrat.

BLAND PRECINCT.

Only 263 votes were polled, and 23 Republican voters were excluded.

The polls were not opened until the sun was an hour high, and the voting was suspended several times during the day.

Discrimination was made in favor of Democratic voters, and the judge refused to assist illiterate voters.

THE LAW AS TO EXCLUDED VOTES.

That such votes will be counted in this House is well-settled law. It has been the law in contested-election cases heard and decided by this body for more than twenty years, and by those decisions we must be guided in this case or overturn established precedents.

It was so held by this House in Ball vs. Snyder, Forty-fifth Congress (1875-76); in Wallace vs. McKinley; Wise vs. Waddill; Mudd vs. Compton; Yost vs. Tucker, Fifty-fourth Congress; Sessingham vs. Frost, Forty-seventh Congress.

Extracts from those decisions will be found on pages 46 and 47 of the report of the committee, to which the attention of members is called.

Mr. Paine, in his well-known work on Elections, page 517, says:

It is now an established rule of the House of Representatives that a vote duly offered and unlawfully rejected at the polls will be counted in a contest.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I yield for any proper question, sir.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I will ask if there was not a Federal statute, section 2007, in force at that time, which provided that where the elector went forth to cast his vote and was prevented, it should be taken as having been cast, and if all the precedents you have quoted were not made under that authority?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. No, sir. That statute had nothing to do with and did not affect the case. That will be answered by another gentleman upon this floor. I will not attempt to answer it now, except in a word. In the case of Yost vs. Tucker, decided since section 2007 was repealed, in the Fifty-fourth Congress, 16 votes excluded at Jackson River precinct were counted and so stated by the committee, and that part of the report was agreed to by all the committee and by every member of the House.

It is contended that under the Virginia statute excluded voters can not be counted because an official ballot is provided for, and the law says "none but an official ballot shall be counted," and because the statute prescribes the manner in which the official ballot shall be prepared by the voter.

It is admitted that when a voter places a ballot in the box it can not be counted unless it is an official ballot properly prepared; but the question here is not whether a ballot shall be counted, but whether a voter who was entitled to vote and who was, by fraudulent methods, prevented from procuring an official ballot and from voting, shall be counted. We do not ask to count an illegal ballot. We ask to count legal voters who, without their own fault, were prevented from complying with the law.

It is contended, too, that, in proving excluded voters, we can only prove that the excluded are registered voters by the production of the registration books themselves; that these books are official records and primary evidence, and that parol evidence of the voter himself is only secondary. Who are registered voters? A registered voter is a citizen who, possessing all the requisites for a legal voter, goes before the registrar at the proper time and place and satisfies the registration officer of his right to register and vote at that precinct.

It does not matter that his name is by the registrar not put upon the list of registered voters.

Recording his name on the book is not registering a voter; it is a subsequent memorandum of the fact, which may or may not be correct.

If by accident, mistake, or design the registrar fails to place the name on his book, the voter is nevertheless a duly registered voter. If he admits John Jones to registration, and by mistake records his name as John Smith on the book, John Jones is a registered voter, although his name is not on the list, while John Smith is not a registered voter, although his name appears on the book.

A deed required by the registry law to be recorded in order to have the effect of notice is a recorded instrument when delivered to the clerk or other register of deeds for registration and the fact indorsed thereon. Recordation is not spreading the deed in extenso on the deed book. That is only a subsequent and independent duty required of the register.

None can vote in Virginia but male citizens over 21 years of age. Would the fact that a woman's name appeared on the registration books be primary evidence—the best evidence—that she was a male citizen and entitled to vote?

The entries on the registration books are mere subsequent memoranda of the fact that a voter is registered and not the fact itself. These books in Virginia are not public records which import verity in themselves. They are primary evidence only of the fact that the name of a person is actually on them, or not; but they are only prima facie evidence that a citizen is a registered voter at that precinct. The primary evidence of that fact is the parol evidence of the voter himself and of other witnesses who can testify to the facts which prove him to be a duly qualified voter.

The law as to this kind of public record is thus stated in Mudd vs. Compton and in McCrary on Elections, and 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, section 86:

> Where, however, the record or document appointed by law to be kept is not part of the fact to be proved, but is merely a collateral or subsequent memorial of the fact, such as the register of births and marriages and the like, it has not this exclusive character, but any other legal proof is admitted.
> A census of population taken under authority of the United States by sworn officers is admissible as prima facie evidence. But of course this is not the most reliable sort of evidence, as there is always great room for mistakes and inaccuracies. The census returns are by no means conclusive. (McCrary on Elections, section 428.)

In Virginia, where only freeholders could vote, and books were made out annually intended to contain a list of all the separate tracts of land and the owners' names, it was held that these books were admissible in evidence; and McCrary on Elections, section 430, says:

> These books were undoubtedly admissible upon the same principle that census returns are admissible in evidence, but they are only prima facie and approximately correct. Books and records of this character are necessarily more or less inaccurate and erroneous, and do not have the conclusive character which attaches to some other public records.

In section 435, McCrary on Elections, it is said:

> The fact that a voter has been registered under a statute providing for the registration of voters and authorizing a board of registration to inquire and decide as to the qualifications of persons applying for registration is by no means conclusive as to his right. It is competent to introduce evidence on the trial of an election contest to show that persons registered as voters under such a statute were nevertheless not legal voters.
> The Houses of Congress in election contests are not bound by the technical rules of evidence which govern proceedings in courts of justice. (McCrary, section 388.)
> It is undoubtedly the policy of the law not to throw too many obstacles in the way of investigating the correctness and bona fides of election returns. On this point the court, in Reed vs. Kneass, very justly observe:
> "The true policy, to maintain and perpetuate the vote by ballot, is found in jealously guarding its purity, in placing no fine-drawn metaphysical obstructions in the way of testing election returns charged as false and fraudulent, and in assuring to the people by a jealous, vigilant, and determined investigation of election frauds that there is a saving spirit in the public tribunals charged with such investigations, ready to do them justice if their suffrages have been tampered with by fraud or misapprehended through error."
> It is in the spirit of this rule that questions respecting evidence in contested-election cases should be solved. (McCrary on Elections, section 407.)

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Do you take the position that the law authorizes this House to count the vote of a man who never got to the polls?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes, I do; and it has so been held for twenty years in this House.

We will now consider nineteen precincts returns from which are rejected by the committee.

At each of these precincts the county and city electoral boards, in violation of the mandatory provisions of the Virginia election law requiring that, "whenever possible to do so, the judges shall be chosen for each voting place from persons known to belong to different political parties, each of whom shall be able to read and write," refused to appoint any but Democratic judges. It is proved that there were Republicans at each of these precincts qualified and willing to serve as judges; that their names were furnished to the electoral boards and their appointment urged by Republicans and by Gold Democrats, but they refused to do so.

The clerks, constables, and policemen at these places were, with one or two exceptions, also Democrats.

It is true the statute says that—

> No election shall be invalid when the judges do not belong to different political parties, or who do not possess the above qualifications.

This clause was never intended as a cover for fraud. Fraud vitiates all transactions.

Where it is shown that the failure to comply with this law is so general and universal in a county or a city as to convince fair-minded persons that it was willfully and corruptly done with the design of defeating the will of the electors and aiding in the return of their own party candidates, the returns must be rejected. No statute, no legislative enactment, can legalize fraud or place it beyond the reach of this House when called upon to exercise its constitutional prerogative of "judging of the election, qualifications, and returns of its own members."

In the six wards of the city of Petersburg there was not a single election officer who was not a Silver Democrat—a supporter of Bryan, Sewall, and Epes. There were hundreds of educated, intelligent white Republicans at each of these wards, and the names of a number of them were laid before the electoral board and their appointments urged, but these humble petitions were met by a flat denial. Here was a willful and deliberate violation of the law and a contemptuous disregard of the rights of other political parties. This is itself prima facie evidence of conspiracy and fraud on the part of these election officers sufficient to discredit the returns from every ward in this city.

That this was a willful and deliberate fraud is made more apparent when we turn to the record in the contested-election case of Thorp vs. McKenney, in the Fifty-fourth Congress, where the judges at these same six wards were all Democrats except one. This fact was then commented on, and the report of the committee in that case, on page 21, says:

> Your committee is of the opinion that the entire vote of the Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth wards of the city of Petersburg, where all the election officers were Democrats and other fraudulent and illegal acts are shown, should be rejected.

The same men composed the electoral board, and in almost every case the same judges were appointed by them in the city of Petersburg in 1896 as in 1894, and they were therefore not ignorant either of the law or of the ruling of this House in the Thorp-McKenney case. The explanation of their oft-repeated frauds is found in the fact that they have no fear that their crimes will be punished by Democratic State officials, and there is perhaps no other law to reach them. The only remedy for this evil lies in the correcting hand of the House of Representatives by rejecting all such returns. But we have not read the half of this chapter of frauds committed in the city of Petersburg.

Most of the election officers in that city have been acting as such for many years. The electoral boards have civil-service rules for judges and clerks of election, and every applicant must by examination prove that he is an adept in fraud. They are trained experts at the business, and some of them have figured in every contested-election case from the Fourth district and have most unsavory reputations as election officers and as citizens. A number of them were Democratic officeholders in the city. Their bread and meat depended on keeping the city in Democratic hands. Others were officers and workers in the Democratic organization of the city.

Lewis Sheffield, judge in the First Ward, is a disreputable character and a rowdy.

The reputation of John W. Friend, jr., a clerk of the election at this ward, is very bad. He is called by the witnesses "a tin-horn gambler."

At this ward the judges positively refused to permit Republicans to witness the count of the vote.

At the Fifth Ward, Vaughan and Kilmartin, two of the judges in 1896, have been judges ever since the city has been Democratic.

Their reputation as election officers is very bad. "They will do anything they are told to carry an election."

Akers, another judge at the Fifth Ward, is a regular, standing, trained, expert fraud and ballot-box stuffer. He has been a judge of election at this ward for many years and figured in the contested election cases of Langston vs. Venable, Thorp vs. McKenney, and now again in this.

Mr. HAY. In that precinct to which the gentleman has referred, did not everybody who wanted to vote do so?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I do not recollect as to that with certainty.

Mr. HAY. I do recollect.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Nevertheless, whether everybody voted or not, that was one of the methods they used; and they went a quarter of a mile to arrest a poor innocent man, and tried him and sent him to jail, contrary to law and without law.

Mr. HAY. Did they send him to jail?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes, sir; one man was sent to jail and kept there all night.

Mr. HAY. I defy the gentleman to point out in the record the proof that any man was sent to jail from that precinct.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Not from that precinct.

Mr. HAY. Ah, well!

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. "Ah, well!" I say that the judges improperly and illegally went a quarter of a mile and arrested a man simply because he was keeping tally. "Ah, well!"

Mr. HAY. They did not send him to jail.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I say that that man was sent to jail and kept there over night.

Mr. HAY. I say the record does not show it. The gentleman can not show it by the record.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I can.

Mr. HAY. And you can not show a great many other things by the record that you have said.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia I am sorry my friend is losing his temper; but I am used to that. Whenever you scratch the back of a Virginia Democrat you scratch a fellow who gets fearfully mad about fraud. If you want to make them mad, just talk about frauds, and immediately they are in arms. They plead guilty by showing their temper.

Mr. HAY. Perhaps the gentleman speaks from experience, because he was for a very long time a Virginia Democrat.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes, I was a Virginia Democrat, and I was one for a long time; but I am not one now.

Mr. HAY. Yes; we know that.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. And I never expect to be one again until you Democrats become honest in elections. [Applause on the Republican side.] When I was a Democrat the party was honest; there was no cheating at elections.

Mr. BURKE. The frauds of which the gentleman complains have been perpetrated, then, by Democrats of Virginia since he withdrew from that party?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I can not have my speech cut up in this way. I am willing to yield to any proper interruption.

I invite the attention of the House to the testimony of C. W. Epps, on pages 625–626 of the record, to show that I am correct and that a citizen was illegally imprisoned by Democratic judges:

1. Q. What is your name, age, occupation, and place of residence?
A. Charles W. Epps; age, 40; stone mason; West street, near Farmer street.
2. Q. How long have you been a voter in the Fifth Ward of this city?
A. About fourteen years.
3. Q. On last election day, November 3, 1896, did you vote?
A. No, sir.
4. Q. At that time were you at the polls to vote?
A. Yes, sir.
5. Q. Please state why you did not vote.
A. It is because I was arrested, sir, and could not vote.
6. Q. Please state by whom you were arrested and on what charge.
A. By Mr. Mulcaha. He said that I was seen carrying men across the street to get certificates, which I had not carried a solid man there at all, which the officers know; which the officers at that house knows.
7. Q. When Officer Mulcaha approached you, what did he say to you, and what, if anything, did you say to him?
A. I was standing up outside of the lot on the street talking with Sam Scott, and in about two or three minutes after we was talking he walked off. Mr. Mulcaha walked up to me and taken me by the arm and says, "Come on here, sir, and go with me." I ses, "Sir, what have I done?" I had not done anything. I ses, "Sir, have you a warrant?" He ses, "Damn the warrant; come and go with me, sir." Then he takes me and carries me inside the yard and up through the rope to the office; then stands me there at the door until he then gets the paper; then brought me down to the jail and put me in the cell and kept me there about the course of an hour or two; then takes me out of there and puts me in another room; then takes me out of that room and puts me in another room, which was the third room, and they kept me there until the next day after 10 o'clock; then calls me up in the office of the jail and said to me, "We will turn you out of here now of our own authorities until next month, and if we need you to have you up before trial we have got your address and will send you a written notice. You can go on home now."
8. Q. Were you ever carried before the mayor as to your arrest on that day?
A. No, sir.
9. Q. Were you ever tried as to that arrest?
A. No, sir; I was not.
10. Q. Were you ever shown any warrant in the matter?
A. No, sir.
11. Q. If you had not been arrested, and thus prevented from voting, for whom would you have voted for Congressman from this the Fourth Congressional district?
A. R. T. Thorp. I can read and write a little.

Andrew Meade, one of the Democratic judges at Sutherland, is a notorious ballot-box stuffer and manipulator.

Williams, another judge, is a guard at the State penitentiary at Richmond, and his services at elections in the capacity of judge are so indispensable that he quits his post of duty to commit crimes against the elective franchise more heinous than those committed by the convicts he guards.

Trent Dalton, another judge at this ward, is thus described by a witness:

Judge Trent Dalton would not only stuff a ballot box or steal ballots, but would steal the cents off a dead man's eyes, in my opinion.

If this is not enough to discredit the returns from these wards we can give other evidences of fraud.

They refused to allow witnesses to the count of ballots, as the law requires, saying:

We do not intend to be watched.

Judges refused to assist illiterate voters, delayed and hindered Republican voters, and discriminated in favor of Democratic voters.

Tally keepers were driven off and threatened with arrest.

But one more chapter is all we can take time to add to this volume of fraud.

In every one of the six wards there is a discrepancy between the vote polled, as shown by the poll books, and the vote returned, which is unaccounted for. The certificates given by voters in the city stating that they had voted for contestant exceeds the vote returned for him by 500 votes.

In five wards in Petersburg 337 votes are not accounted for, and in one there are 19 votes more returned than were cast.

These discrepancies are alone sufficient to discredit the returns from the precincts where they occur.

The discrepancy proves either fraud or mistake on the part of the election officers, and either vitiates the return.

The law as to failure to appoint judges belonging to different political parties is thus laid down in English vs. Peele, Forty-eighth Congress:

The credit which is due to the returns is greatly impaired when it is shown that 54 of the 56 voting places in the city were controlled by partisan officers who were more or less parties to the general fraudulent intent which pervaded the managers.

In Threat vs. Clark, Fifty-first Congress, the committee said:

The committee is of the opinion, when the course is systematically pursued of appointing on the electoral boards to represent the minority or opposition party persons not indorsed by that party, and about whose loyalty to the party whose interest they are expected to guard there is a question, or of appointing persons who are unable to read or write when there would be no difficulty in finding men well qualified in these respects, ought of itself to be considered evidence of a conspiracy to defraud on the part of the election officers. This was clearly a violation of the law on the part of the board.

In McDuffie vs. Turpin (Fifty-first Congress) the committee said:

When the law provides that each of the two political parties shall have a representation on the election board of inspectors, it is a provision to prevent dishonest persons from making false returns, and in such case the appointment of men incompetent to determine whether the return is honest or not to represent the party opposed to the appointing power tends to prove an intent to prevent that watchfulness intended to be secured by the statute and raises a strong suspicion of—if it does not wholly prove—a conspiracy to falsify the returns.

In Lunenburg County all the judges were Democrats—seven precincts in all. It is not necessary to go over all these precincts, as Petersburg is a fair sample of all.

We now come to the returns from six precincts, at each of which the electoral boards, under the pretext of appointing a Republican judge, appointed either pretended Republicans who were not accepted as such by that party, or who were corrupt bribe-takers, or who were educationally, morally, or intellectually unfit for the position, and where, in addition, frauds were proved sufficient to reject the returns.

At Lawrenceville the Republican judge could not read or write. This illiterate man is examined as a witness, and his testimony is too entertaining to be passed by in silence. Here it is:

3. Q. Are you one of the judges who conducted that election, and were you appointed by the electoral board as a representative of the Republican party?
A. Yes, sir.
4. Q. Can you read and write?
A. No, sir; that was my objection to being a judge.
5. Q. Then, you could not prepare the official ballot, could you?
A. No, sir; not by my own knowledge.
6. Q. Did you in fact prepare, or attempt to prepare, any ballots for illiterate voters?
A. Yes, sir; I did.
7. Q. For what kind of voters, white or colored, and at what time of the day did you prepare the ballots for them?
A. Colored voters altogether; and I started when the sun was about two hours high in the afternoon.
8. Q. Why did you attempt to assist any illiterate elector in preparing his ballot?
A. Because Mr. Vaughan, one of the other judges, said he had tramped until his feet were blistered, and he wanted me to mark, and I told him I couldn't do it. And he said, "Yes, you can; what is to hinder you from doing it?" I told him I didn't know how to read; that I didn't know the Presidents on there. He said, "Yes, you do; you can mark that ticket good as I can."

I told him I could try it. Then I did try it, and I marked three tickets wrong right away, and they were voted as I marked them, and we found them in the box that night and they were not counted. They were properly prepared for Mr. R. T. Thorp, but my recollection is they were not counted for him either. In attempting to mark the name of the Vice-Presidents off I marked off the words "For Vice-President" instead of the name. I would have continued to mark that way if it had not been for Edward Green, who could read, calling my attention to it. I only knew Mr. Thorp by "R. T." and McKinley by "M.," and by their position on the ballots. After that I did not mark any more wrong; I marked them all right.

9. Q. Can you spell "boy"?
A. Yes, sir; I reckon I can.
10. Q. Let me hear you.
A. B-o-y—boy.
10½. Q. Can you spell "butter"?
A. No, sir; I think you have got me now; I can't spell "buttor."
11. Q. Have you ever written a letter to anybody in your life?
A. No, sir; dat I don't. I have to get somebody to write for me. I wish I could write, but I can't get there. I wish to God I hadn't been judge. I didn't want to be judge, no way.
12. Q. Mr. Vaughan, one of the other judges that you have mentioned, got his feet blistered after all the Democrats had voted, didn't he?
A. Yes, sir; you know it all. You don't need to ask me nothing.
13. Q. Were Mr. O'Connor's feet blistered at that time?
A. If they were he didn't say so. They ought not to have blistered as long as he stayed in the booth. He sat down in there and rested himself.
14. Q. Why didn't he help the illiterate colored voters in the afternoon in preparing their ballots?
A. I don't know, sir. He looked like he didn't want to help some of them. One came in to vote and asked who was to help him. I pointed to Mr. O'Connor and said: "There is a gentleman who will help you." Mr. O'Connor didn't notice the voter when he asked him to prepare his ballot for him. I then told him: "Mr. O'Connor, there is a man who wants to vote; you ought to help him; his time is going away; he can't vote presently, and why don't you go on and help him?" He then turned back to Mr. Vaughan and whispered to him. I then said:

"Mr. O'Connor, why don't you go and help the man? He can't prepare his ticket without your help." Mr. O'Connor went past the door and came back to me again and said: "Look here, you 'tend to over there and I will attend to this side." I told him I thought as a judge I had the privilege of speaking to him, and all I had done was to tell him politely that a voter needed his help. Mr. Sledge and Mr. Hicks, the clerks of election, said: "Ben, you had better mind; that man is a stranger here, and he will get on you if you don't look out." I told them I didn't mind his getting on me; he couldn't stay on me.

15. Q. Now, Mr. Vaughan and Mr. O'Connor, the other two judges of election, were Democrats, weren't they?
A. Yes, sir; or Popocrats one; I don't know which.

16. Q. Now, as I understand, the task of assisting illiterate voters was delegated to you after all the illiterate Democrats had voted, and illiterate Republicans only remained to vote?

A. Yes; sir. If any Democrats at all came in they were mighty few, and they marked their own ballots.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I will be very brief.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman's time is extended, I ask that the same courtesy may be extended to the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that this enlarges the time for that side.

Mr. HAY. Very well, then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER] be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That is to come out of the four hours' time on that side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I will not use a great deal more time. I am much obliged to the gentleman and to the House.

Mr. SETTLE. How many did he mark wrong?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I could not tell that. We did not take account of that. They were pretty much all marked wrong, though.

At this precinct the Democratic judge marked the ballots for illiterate Democrats, but refused to mark them for illiterate Republicans.

Gross discrimination was practiced by the judges at this precinct against Republican voters. One hundred and seventy-seven voters gave certificates on the day of election that they voted for contestant, while only 157 were returned for him. There were 87 excluded voters at this place.

POARCH AND ROSS.

At this precinct the pretended Republican judge was a Democrat and voted for contestee. He was examined as a witness, and when asked who represented the contestant as judge at the polls, answered: "I represented him, but did not vote for him." He is proven to have been corrupt. He demanded $10 as the price of helping contestant at the polls, and when it was not forthcoming said: "The precinct will surely go Democratic;" and it surely did. The returns from this precinct bear evidences of fraud upon their face.

Forty-two ballots were burned contrary to law. This is a favorite method of disposing of telltale rejected tickets, in obedience to the piratee' maxim that "dead men tell no tales." The judges certify that the number of electors at this precinct is 199, while the poll books contain the names of 263 electors.

Here is a discrepancy between the ballots actually cast and the number of names on the poll books which is wholly unaccounted for and is sufficient in itself to justify the rejection of the precinct.

The contestant was allowed 89 votes, but 151 electors give certificates that they voted for contestant. If all the burned ballots are added to the vote returned for contestant, it makes 131, or 20 less than the certificates give him.

SUTHERLANDS.

At this precinct the so-called Republican judge was a negro, who could not read or write, and who was used during the day as a menial servant about the polls, carrying water, etc.

There is a discrepancy at this precinct between the votes cast and the vote counted of 10 votes.

No tally sheet was kept at this precinct, because the judges threatened to arrest anyone who attempted to do so within half a mile of the polls.

This is the precinct where Meade and Dalton were judges, the notorious ballot-box stuffers, who, it was testified, would "do anything in elections; would steal ballots; would steal the cents off a dead man's eyes."

The Democratic judges at this precinct refused to assist illiterate voters.

POWHATAN.

At this precinct the Republican judge was so illiterate that he could barely read and write, and the Democratic judges refused to assist illiterate voters. He would commence at the top of the ticket and read it through, but would not point out the names to or mark the ballot for the voter.

Republicans were threatened with arrest if they attempted to keep tally lists.

There is a discrepancy at this precinct between the votes polled and the votes returned of 66 votes, which is not explained or accounted for, which vitiate the returns.

LEES MILL.

At this precinct the Democratic electoral board refused to allow the Republicans a judge, although requested to do so. The man they claimed was a Republican judge is shown to have been a hired Democratic canvasser, who had not voted the Republican ticket for fifteen years.

He has been a judge at this precinct for many years, and although the Republicans have several times asked his removal it has been refused. He is too good a card to be dispensed with in this game of universal fraud. He voted for the Democratic candidate for Congress in 1894 against the contestant. He voted for the entire Silver Democratic ticket in 1896, and still we are told he is a Republican and a representative of the Republican party as a judge.

The judges refused to assist illiterate Republican voters, and discriminations were made in favor of Democratic voters at the polls. There is a variance between the number of votes cast and the number accounted for, and there is no mention of illegal ballots.

One hundred and thirty-seven voters certified that they voted for the contestant, being 66 more than were returned for him.

WAKEFIELD.

The Republican judge at this precinct, J. R. Boding, could not read or write. His testimony is taken, and he admits he could not prepare his own ballot, but had to call on one of the Democratic judges to prepare it for him.

He testifies:

I can read and write very little, sir. I never went to school any; not a minute. We had leading men there. I was not the foreman in the election. I term all them white men foremen. I was put there as a man. I was there at their call. I did not have any books or papers of any sort placed in my hands to conduct the election with. I was not any leader there; bound to tell you that.

The Democratic judge admits that he refused to mark ballots, though requested to do so by 50 voters or more, and only marked for 4, who were physically disabled. All but 6 voters marked their ballots in his presence, and yet 92 ballots were rejected at this precinct because improperly marked. This proves conclusively that there was fraud on the part of this Democratic judge. In fact, he admits that the assistance rendered by him did not have the effect of enabling the voter to prepare his ballot properly.

This concludes the 6 precincts at which the so-called Republican judges were unfit to represent that party.

Rejecting these 6 precincts and the 19 at which there were no Republican judges, and counting the 623 excluded votes, gives the contestant a plurality of 812 over the contestee.

But there are 6 other precincts which should be rejected on account of frauds and irregularities proved sufficient to discredit the returns.

These six precincts are Hicksford, Rylands, Lewiston, Spring Creek, Blackwater, and Stony Creek.

(1) HICKSFORD.

The returns from this precinct are wholly unreliable.

Three hundred and sixty-nine voters appear on the poll book as having voted. There were returned for Congress 219, rejected 74, making total accounted for 293 out of 369, leaving 76 unaccounted for.

The two Democratic judges at this precinct are examined and give no explanation of this variance between the returns and the poll books. Republican tally keepers prove that 141 voters gave their names as having voted for contestant.

The bogus candidate, J. L. Thorp, received one more vote than contestant at this precinct by reason of the deceit and fraud practiced on them by Neblett, the marker of ballots.

(2) RYLANDS.

Total vote	277
Returned for Congress	250
Unaccounted for	27

There were no rejected ballots proved at this precinct. This discrepancy alone discredits the return.

Tally keepers were arrested, but the Republican judge heard voters tell the marker how to mark their tickets and kept a memorandum thereof, which showed 150 for contestant, and yet he was only returned 106, and J. L. Thorp 6.

(3) LEWISTON.

One hundred and eleven electors give certificates on the day of election that they voted for contestant, and 103 are examined as witnesses, and yet only 52 are returned for him. Add to this the 17 rejected votes, and it leaves 42 unaccounted for; and if you charge to him the 23 returned for J. L. Thorp, it leaves 20 unaccounted for. Or, if you take only the voters who testified, it leaves a discrepancy of 12.

This discrepancy discredits this precinct.

(4) SPRING CREEK.

There were polled here 220 votes.

There were returned for Congress	165
Void ballots rejected	50
Leaving unaccounted for 5 ballots	5

The Democratic judge assisted Democratic illiterate voters, but refused to assist illiterate Republicans.

(5) BLACKWATER.

There were cast here 201, returned for Congress 99, or less than half the votes actually cast. There is no mention of any void ballots at this precinct. The judge refused to mark the ballots for illiterate voters.

It was agreed between the Democratic judges in the morning before the voting began that the judges had no right to mark the ballots for illiterate voters, but only to point out names and let the voters do their own scratching. The Democratic judge who pretended to assist voters is examined as a witness and testifies:

Q. If a voter told you that he desired to vote for McKinley, Hobart, and R. T. Thorp, please state what instruction you gave him.
A. I would just point out them to him.
Q. You have testified you allowed some of the electors to vote for two Congressmen. Did you know that this ticket would be thrown out?
A. Why, of course it would be, if they left two candidates on there. Some of them left all three; they never asked me, and I never told them, either, if I was put there again.
Q. Is it not a fact that some of the Democrats you assisted were perfectly able to prepare their own ballots?
A. Some of them might have done so.

Two hundred and one ballots were cast; 56 were left in line and excluded; and out of this total of 257 voters who voted and tried to vote, only 99 were counted. Eighty of those returned were counted for contestee, leaving only 19 for contestant. Yet 105 of the 201 votes polled were cast by colored voters.

Each of the 56 excluded colored voters swore they would have voted for contestant if they had been permitted to vote.

Still further, of the 201 whose names appear on the poll books, 105 are colored Republican voters and 96 are whites. Only 80 were returned for contestee, showing that at least 16 whites voted for contestant. Taking these 16 white votes from the 19 returned for contestant, it gives him only 3 colored votes out of the 105 who actually voted. Take the 102 votes unaccounted for and add them to the 19 returned for contestant and you have 121, which is just equal to the 105 colored votes and the 16 whites. It is thus shown that every one of the 105 votes cast, except 3 who marked their own ballots, were rejected.

(6) STONY CREEK.

Total vote polled	211
Total vote returned for Congress	176
Total vote rejected	18
	194

Here, again, we have a discrepancy of 17 votes.

The judge of election admits that he refused to assist "a heap" of the voters.

The contestant was returned only 59 votes, and 96 give certificates on day of election that they voted for contestant and 70 gave certificates that they were excluded.

Rejecting the returns from the last six precincts increases the contestant's majority by 291.

Giving him his vote proved at Lewiston (104) and the 291 makes contestant's plurality over contestee 1,207.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude what I have to say about this case. In half a day I could not point out all the frauds and irregularities in it. The record contains twenty-three hundred or twenty-four hundred pages. To go over it and point out all the irregularities and frauds perpetrated would take a day. I have only had time to run over them very hastily and to give you the conclusion arrived at by the six Republican members of the committee. That conclusion is beyond doubt the law in this case, and I think that the contestant ought to be seated, as he was seated two years ago in a contest from this district. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am quite sorry there are so many vacant seats on the Republican side of the Chamber. The duty that we perform under the Constitution when judging of the election and return of a member is, in my judgment, one of the highest duties that a member of this House is called on to perform.

In this Republic the individual elector who corrupts the ballot commits a crime against the Government. The election officers, if they follow in that corruption, commit a higher crime, by reason of the fact of the higher place they hold in our form of government. And the member of this House, occupying the conspicuous place of a seat in the great American Congress, the observed of all electors, who casts a vote which gives to a contestant or a contestee a seat to which he is not entitled—pardon me, gentlemen, for saying it—commits a much higher crime.

In this Republic of ours there is no place where might makes right. This institution of ours is founded on honest ballots. Yes, gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, I will agree with you that it is founded on a fair election, an honest count, and a faithful certificate; and, gentlemen of this House, I will agree with you, if the facts stated in the majority report of this case are true, there is but one duty to perform, and that is to adopt the resolution offered by the majority of the committee and give the seat to the contestant. If the facts stated are not true, then I assert, under the Constitution and under your oaths, you have no right to give it to him.

I do not claim more patriotism for myself or the gentlemen on this side of the Chamber than I concede to the other side. I know there are on both sides of this Chamber distinguished jurists—men who, if presiding over a court of justice, would not know Democrat or Republican in determining the law or finding the facts of a case, and would deem it as an insult for anyone to expect it. How is it here? Do reason and patriotism always control?

This is the highest court in the land, the most conspicuous tribunal in the entire Government. A few days ago, in an election contest, I heard four most eloquent speeches upon this side of the Chamber. They were able, earnest, patriotic, all delivered by Democrats, in favor of seating the contestee, who was a Democrat. On the other side of the Chamber I heard four more speeches, equally able, earnest, and patriotic, delivered with quite as much zeal, all in favor of the contestant, who was a Republican.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. My point of order is this: That the order with regard to this case is that it is to be discussed before the House for eight hours. There are but sixteen Republicans in the House. It is not being discussed before the House, and the House ought to be brought here, so that the order can be carried out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS] will proceed.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to suggest a suspension of the proceedings until the jury can get back into the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS] is entitled to the floor, and he will proceed.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have no question about the conscience of the member who shall finally vote. He must be his own keeper. But I was proceeding to say that a little further along, when the roll was called in the case, where there was a record of over 2,000 printed pages and no less than half a dozen intricate law questions, every Republican resolved the law questions and the facts in such a way in his mind as to permit him to vote for the contestant. Every Democrat so found the law and the facts as to be able to vote for the contestee.

I put it to you as liberty-loving patriots, not as Democrats or Republicans, whether it does not look a little bad for the high character of this Republic of ours, where everything depends on an honest ballot, where, if perchance the old ship of state is steered toward the breakers, there is no power save that of an honest ballot to change its course, or, if it is on the highroad to prosperity, there is no way to keep it there save by an honest ballot. That ballot, gentlemen, when you come to determine to whom you will give the seat, ought to be determined by reason and your best judgment; it ought to be determined on a high order of patriotism; and yet I would suggest, gentlemen, in the consideration of the case about two weeks ago it was not the highest order of reason, but possibly it was disposed of as a political question.

The case at bar was submitted to the Committee on Elections No. 3, with a record of two volumes of that size [indicating], 2,600 pages. When submitted to the Committee on Elections No. 3 it was argued by able and learned counsel on either side for two days, and an elaborate and labored brief was presented on either side. The question was then referred to a subcommittee. That subcommittee consisted of two Republicans and one Democrat. When that subcommittee came to make its report the two Republicans signed the majority report, and the Democrat signed the views of the minority.

It came along a little further, gentlemen of the House; it came back to the entire committee with a record of 2,600 pages, involving law questions and questions of fact, and the committee divided along party lines. Do you suspect, gentlemen, that a Democrat is so constituted that he does not know it is a political question, or that the Republicans do not know it is a party question, when we have found substantially all the Democrats on one side and all the Republicans together on the other side? Or has the time come, gentlemen, in this great House, representing the most patriotic, the most learned, and most loved of any country, where there is more justice than in any other, when a gentleman who has made the race on either side stops, not to see whether fraud has actually been committed, but waits for the returns, to see whether it is to be a Democratic or Republican House?

If a Democratic House, then the Democrat contests; if a Republican House, then the Republicans enter a contest; until to-day, gentlemen—and I am not charging you, my Republican friends, with it more than I apply to this side of the Chamber. I simply want you to answer this question: To-day you have a Republican House; at the beginning of this session you had twenty contests. No contestant was a Democrat. Why? Because a Democrat knew he need not come to a Republican House with a contest. They were all Republicans. Why? Because I suspect, to say the least of it, they thought all they needed to do was to come and cry "fraud" to a Republican House.

Ah, gentlemen, without reasoning further from a patriotic standpoint, I would call your attention, from a financial standpoint, to the fact that there is already filed as costs in these contests over $260,000. Your statute provides for an allowance of not more than $2,000 to each side. Twenty times 4 is 80, making $80,000 that will actually be allowed, and nobody knows how much more. Since the statute has been in force I find there has been $680,000 paid as expenses of election contests. Why is it? Is it, gentlemen, to subserve the honest purpose of seeing that a man has an honest ballot and a fair count, or is it because Democrats may seat their friends who are Democrats and Republicans seat their friends who are Republicans?

If it is, then it is time, gentlemen, we were resolving this question into a question of fact and laying aside partisanship. I said a moment ago I claim no more for myself than I allow to you. I have studied this case, and if as lawyers, if as judges, if as Representatives, but not as partisans, you will give me your attention for the forty minutes' time I have left, I will undertake to show you that you can not seat the contestant by reason of the facts stated in the majority report. If the chairman of the committee, the gentleman who labored long, for an hour and twenty minutes, just preceding me—if he is present, I would like to put a question or two to him, that will resolve this to a fact where there is no getting away from it.

If not here, I will put it to my colleague, Mr. CRUMPACKER, of Indiana, who is a member of the same committee, and I will undertake, gentlemen of the House, to put this case so that each member may understand how he is voting. And perhaps it is well that I should put it to the gentleman from Indiana; for, when I put the question to the gentleman from Virginia awhile ago, he said, "I do not know; another gentleman will answer it." I will ask the gentleman if the case does not hinge on three propositions. The majority report states that this is a Republican district.

There may be some question about that, but I will not take your time to discuss it. They say, being a Republican district, proposition No. 1 is that the Republicans voted for the contestant, Mr. Thorp. Then proposition No. 2 is, they propose to count 692 ballots that were not cast. Proposition No. 3 is, they propose to throw out 25 precincts, and thereby reduce the majority of the contestee. If I am not right in these three propositions, if there is any other proposition involved in it, I will be glad to give any gentleman an opportunity in my time to state any other proposition involved in this case.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The third proposition, you say, is to throw out 25 precincts?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The third proposition in this majority report is to throw out 25 Democratic precincts.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will you discuss the grounds on which they propose to do that?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I will, later on. These three propositions cover the case. The first proposition in order is whether or not there is a rational presumption that the Republicans of that district voted for Mr. Thorp. I say to you gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, as well as gentlemen on this side, if you will go with me through the record a little, at the risk of being tedious, I will undertake to show from the record, from the sworn evidence, from undisputed facts, that no such presumption arises and none exists in fact.

Aye, more. I will risk my judgment on the statement that if you will unloosen your party harness and take the evidence in this case as you would outside of politics, I will convince you from the record not only that there is no such presumption, but I will convince you by their own sworn testimony that they actually did not.

Now, does any such presumption exist? Where would you start? You would start at the convention and see what kind of a convention was held. I say to you, gentlemen of this House, that that convention broke up in a row. There were two chairmen; there were three, four, and five gentlemen on the floor trying to speak at once, and none of them could be heard.

Even the secretary of the convention left the house in disgust; and not only is that true, but two gentlemen were nominated for Congress; two sets of State delegates and two sets of delegates all around were nominated in that convention. The other gentleman who was nominated for Congress in that convention was Mr. Gee, who was elected a delegate to the St. Louis convention. He accepted the nomination and made the race through until nearly election day before he was withdrawn. And in making that race I will not only show you that it was a vigorous race, but he most unmercifully attacked the contestant, Thorpe, in this case.

To establish that proposition, I will read to you first a clipping from the Index-Appeal, one of the strongest papers published in the South:

TWO MEETINGS IN ONE.

Thorp and Brady factions were divided into two squads, the one on the right, the other on the left of the building; and when it became apparent to Brady that he was supported by a minority delegation, some one of his lieutenants moved that W. M. Flanagan, of Powhatan, be made chairman, and before the vote on this motion could be taken another of Brady's followers nominated Hon. Charles Gee, of Prince George, for Congress. In the meantime, on the opposite side of the house, the Thorp faction had placed in the chair one of their affiliators, and the vote was taken and carried on the renomination of Hon. R. T. Thorp for Congress.

During all of this time Mr. Thorp was without the building—no one but delegates, their alternates, and newspaper reporters having been admitted. Mr. Gee, who seemed much surprised at being nominated, went upon the rostrum and hastily thanked the convention for naming him as its choice for so exalted a position as Congressman. He pledged his untiring efforts for the success of the party, and emphasized the assertion that he would under no circumstances give up the fight. During the remarks of Mr. Gee three or four others were speaking on the other side, neither of whom was a half dozen yards away, hence not much of Gee's speech could be heard.

Before the doors were thrown open to the public, and even before Thorp had been apprised of what his side of the convention had done, Brady's forces elected the following members of the State committee: Col. James D. Brady, Hon. W. M. Flanagan, and A. W. Harris.

After this they assisted John M. Langston to the stage and requested him to make a speech, but the tumult was too great, and Langston withdrew in disgust without uttering a word. At this juncture Capt. J. A. C. Stevens, who was acting secretary, threw down his pencil and made his exit from the building, saying he had enough of such rowdy proceedings. The Brady faction elected Capt. B. S. Hooper chairman of the Congressional district.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. What is the gentleman reading his extracts from?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. They were taken from the Index-Appeal and copied into the record in this case. It is an independent newspaper, and I will yield the time if there is any gentleman on this floor that wishes to deny the fact. The gentleman who preceded me has not dealt with the record but in assertions, in abuse of his neighbors and friends, with whom he trained for many years. This same article says a little further on——

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. This man Brady who is mentioned—is that the same man that was appointed collector of internal revenue over in that vicinity?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes, sir; the same. Now, Mr. Thorp, according to his own statement, not only vilified that gentleman who has thus been honored, but he attacked him, and it was done time and again during the campaign, and I suppose that is the proposition on which they presume this contestant received all the Republican votes, and that is the purpose of this part of the discussion.

If the gentleman from New Jersey will listen further, I will give him some facts that are still more convincing. I will give him facts signed by a gentleman high in the councils of his party. I will give him statements, or a portion of it, for I can not read it all, from Hon. Charles Gee, who received the nomination on that occasion. Let me read from a circular letter issued by his own hand and sent out to various voters of the State, and then say whether or not you presume the contestant received all the Republican votes. He says, "To the Republican voters of the Fourth district of Virginia." It is not issued to Democrats or Populists, but it is issued to the Republicans:

DISPUTANTA, VA., June 3, 1896.

To the Republicans of the Fourth District of Virginia:

As the regular nominee for Congress, before commencing the canvass of the district, I deem it my duty to make the following statement to you:

The Farmville convention, which assembled and adjourned on yesterday, was composed of 83 delegates from the city of Petersburg and the 11 counties of the district. A large majority of the Republicans of the district were opposed to the nomination of Mr. Thorp, mainly because of his action in raising the race issue at the Petersburg convention that nominated delegates to the St. Louis national convention.

Mr. Thorp was determined and persistent in his efforts to defeat Gen. Stith Bolling as a delegate to St. Louis. The record of General Bolling as a Republican and his high character and standing as a citizen is too well known to the people of Virginia to be herein dwelt upon. He is, perhaps, the most influential representative in the State of the thousands of ex-Confederates who have identified themselves with the Republican party. Mr. Thorp, in order to defeat General Bolling, put forward a colored man named Green, who was said to be a resident of Brunswick County, and he was unrelenting and unreasonable in his bitter opposition to General Bolling, and made at that convention a race-issue contest in which Thorp failed.

This conduct on the part of Mr. Thorp naturally arrayed against him the strongest and most influential white Republicans of the district; and the leading and intelligent colored Republicans of the district, realizing the injury to the party and to their race which would surely follow Mr. Thorp's course, united with the white Republicans in the city of Petersburg and every county of the district, outside of Mecklenburg and Brunswick counties, in opposing Mr. Thorp's nomination.

Mr. Thorp says that this was a matter of conscience with him; in other words, he admits that his conscience and his God led him to oppose Gen. Stith Bolling, a gallant ex-Confederate soldier and accomplished gentleman, and to support the colored man Green; and this against the appeal and protest of nearly every leading white Republican and of 17 of the 30 colored delegates who were present at the Petersburg convention.

Three days after Mr. Thorp was seated in Congress he returned to the district and commenced his campaign for the renomination. He personally appeared in Farmville and stated to the Hon. B. S. Hooper that his pile of money was bigger than that of the entire combination against him, and that he was determined to be nominated. He made open warfare upon the Hon. B. S. Hooper at his own home, and the sinews of war were furnished to the negro Pompey Bland, who Mr. Thorp installed as his leader in the county to defeat Mr. Hooper. The sentiment of that county was so overwhelming against Mr. Thorp, notwithstanding the large expenditure of money, that Mr. Hooper carried his county with a delegation instructed as a unit to vote for his nomination.

Next Mr. Thorp appears, by his agents, in Lunenburg County, and war was made upon Mr. M. C. Cardozo, member of the district committee, sheriff of the county, and chairman of the party in said county. This was a most disreputable fight, made clearly on the color line. Mr. Cardozo was too strong with Republicans of the county and could not be beaten by fair means, but Mr. Thorp's aspirations demanded that he should be defeated at all hazards; and the result was that his colored supporters bolted. These colored bolters elected a colored man chairman and a solid colored delegation to the Farmville convention.

Mr. Gee says that a large part of the delegates opposed Mr. Thorp's nomination. Why? Do you want to know the reason? You men who have not had an opportunity to investigate the record in this case for yourselves, you men who are going to vote to give this contestant or contestee a seat, let me give you the reason. He says a large majority was opposed because of his action in raising the race issue in the Petersburg convention.

This convention where delegates were to be sent to nominate a candidate for Congress, there he raised the race question. The question of race, personal interest, could not rise above saving a vote for himself. To save himself a single vote, he was willing that he might strike down the whole Republican party if he could only get a few votes for himself. This letter further says:

In the city of Petersburg, the home of Gen. Stith Bolling and Colonel Brady, the agents of Mr. Thorp were on hand supplied with money, and were profuse in their abuse of Republicans who simply claimed the right to support some other candidate than Mr. Thorp for Congress. Money and whisky in abundance were furnished a number of the meanest negroes in Petersburg to abuse both General Bolling and Colonel Brady.

Even after the election of the delegates Mr. Thorp's agents were in Petersburg, and sent for the delegates who had been elected to the Farmville convention, and offered them inducements to vote for Mr. Thorp's nomination. Railroad tickets were purchased and furnished to a number of worthless negroes, and they appeared drunk on the streets of Farmville hallooing for Thorp, and offered personal indignity to Colonel Brady when he appeared on the streets of Farmville. The same tactics were adopted by Mr. Thorp's hirelings in Amelia, Nottoway, and other counties of the district.

At Farmville the agents of Mr. Thorp openly boasted of their determination to nominate him regardless of the will of the majority, and a number of the delegates who were opposed to him stated that they had been offered $125 each if they would vote for his nomination. His nearest friends openly stated that no nomination made by the Farmville convention other than Mr. Thorp's could be elected, and while Mr. Thorp himself boasted that he could carry his own county by 2,000 majority, his delegates from that county stated that no other nominee would be allowed to carry the county.

Notwithstanding this condition of affairs, the boasting of Mr. Thorp, and the profuse use of his pile of money, the sentiment among the Republicans of the district was so strong against his renomination that the following delegates were elected in opposition to him, viz: Petersburg, 11; Prince George, 6; Dinwiddie, 7; Prince Edward, 8; Powhatan, 4; Nottoway, 2; Amelia, 2; Sussex, 4—43.

It will thus be seen that a majority of the uncontested delegates elected were opposed to Mr. Thorp, and this without taking into consideration the four contested delegates from Lunenburg County. Under the plan of organization for the government of the party the roll of delegates is made up by the district committee. There were five members of the district committee, viz: J. R. Rawlings, S. Y. Gilliam, E. D. Bland, M. C. Cardozo, W. H. Hayes.

Messrs. Hayes, of Mecklenburg County, and Rawlings, of Brunswick County, a minority of this committee, both active partisans of Mr. Thorp and delegates to the convention, being in constant consultation with Mr. Thorp himself, arbitrarily made up the roll of delegates to the convention.

The convention was called to order by Mr. Rawlings, and it was soon made manifest that Mr. Thorp had put forward Ross Hamilton, the colored leader of Mecklenburg County, to browbeat every white delegate opposed to his nomination. Rawlings, the chairman, did Ross Hamilton's bidding in every instance with amazing subserviency; every point of order and every suggestion of Ross Hamilton was literally put in force by Chairman Rawlings.

Another important matter of interest to the people of this district, the State, and nation is the settlement of the money question. Mr. Thorp is an advocate of free silver, and has so declared himself. I am for sound money—an advocate of Republican doctrine upon the financial question. I happen to know that Mr. Thorp's election to Congress, because of his unsound views upon this important issue, is not desired by the national Republican leaders.

Mr. Thorp, I am reliably informed, has promised offices without number under the next Republican Administration in order to secure the support of delegates at the Farmville convention, knowing well that he would be unable to carry out these promises. I do not intend to make any canvass for Congress under any such false pretenses.

Finally, fellow-Republicans of the district, I have accepted the nomination for Congress, which I did not in any manner solicit or desire, with the firm purpose to remain in the field as the party's regular nominee to the end. I expect to visit every county in the district, to make a thorough canvass, to meet the people face to face, to discuss Republican issues, to do my utmost to carry Virginia for the Republican nominees at the St. Louis national convention, which I will attend on the 16th of June as your alternate from this district, and I expect to have your support and to be elected as your Representative in the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Very truly, yours,

CHARLES GEE.

Here is a gentleman who held the confidence of his people—so much so that he was sent to the St. Louis convention. He tells you, and I speak from the record, and you gentlemen who are to take the report of the majority and say Mr. Thorp is entitled to his seat because there is a presumption that the Republicans all voted for him, will understand that Mr. Gee says the members of the Republican national committee did not want Mr. Thorp elected.

The poor colored man did not want him. Mr. Bolling did not want him. General Brady did not want him, and the majority of the delegates in his convention did not want him. The majority of the delegates of the Republican committee did not want him; and yet they ask you to come here and strike down the record and take from the sitting member the right to a seat, and put it on the ground that the presumption is that he got all of the Republican votes. Let us go further and see what Mr. Gee says:

And I expect to have your support and be elected as your Representative in Congress.

Here is another man who did not expect the majority of the Republicans would vote for him—not only that, but he expected to get such a number as the party nominee that he would be entitled to the seat himself. Yet, gentlemen, you who sit in this high court, you whose reason ought to be brought into play, you whose patriotism ought to be rekindled, you are asked to presume upon this state of facts that he received all the Republican votes.

But, gentlemen, we will not split hairs; we will not draw an imaginary line. I will refer to the record further, at the risk of being a little tedious, and I will not only undertake to show, as I have done, that no such presumption arose, but I will show you, from the witnesses who were produced and sworn—many of them upon a subpœna issued at the behest of Mr. Thorp and his counsel—that the Republican party was not united.

I will show you that in one district as many as 15 persons, in another more than 60, in another more than 70, in others 30, 40, and 50, tell you under the solemnity of an oath that they are Republicans and that they did not vote for Mr. Thorp. If I do that, gentlemen, then I think I shall have driven the first peg at least to shake your confidence in this report upon which the majority of the committee expect to carry you through and on to a vote.

I want to be fair. I will quote from the record, and if there is any gentleman present, whether he be a member of the committee or not, and without regard to the side of the Chamber on which he may sit, who wants to refer to the record, I have it here. And I will take time to read it. You would not try a lawsuit on a lawyer's statement, nor as you would try a question at a town meeting.

If you would not take from your neighbor his cow or his liberty on such methods as you are asked to adopt in his case, then, in God's name, gentlemen, in this year 1898 and in this Hall, where but a few days ago the American Representatives showed themselves able to rise above party—to put patriotism and love of country and the honor of the nation above everything—will you take this case, which involves to the Republic itself quite as important an issue, that of an honest ballot and a fair count and an honest certificate, and put all reason behind you and be controlled only by politics?

I say to you, gentlemen, that Mr. Thorp two years ago waged a contest against a man who was sick and unable to produce any testimony. He won; and that is one of the strongest arguments offered by my friend from Virginia why he should win again. I say no.

The gentleman from Virginia, the head of this committee, says to this House that there have been frauds in that State for fifteen years. He says all that you have to do is to puncture, and you will find frauds. I say to you men who have been accustomed to preside over courts, you men who are ready and willing to bring into play your reason, what has that to do with this case, if it were true? The question is, What are the issues in this case?

As I see the gentleman from Virginia now back again in his seat, I will restate this case. He bases his argument, first, on the proposition that the presumption is that the Republicans all voted for Mr. Thorp; second, he says that you ought to count 698 votes that were never cast; third, he says that there ought to be 25 precincts thrown out. I have already, I think, shown you there is no such presumption. Now I will show you, and from the record, if you desire it, not only that there is no such presumption, but that no such fact existed. I refer to the testimony of J. C. Smith, on page 1806 of the record.

3. Q. Are you familiar with the people of this county and with their political sentiments?

A. I am as far as it is possible for the county chairman to become familiar with the politics of the county.

The minority states in its report that the Democrats were divided. I want to read from the testimony of this witness on that proposition:

4. Q. Please state what was the sentiment of the people of this county during the last campaign, up to and including the election held on November 3, 1896, in regard to the currency question.

Mr. McINTIRE. I should like to ask the gentleman who Mr. Smith is?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Smith, who was produced and sworn as a witness, lives in the State of Virginia. The record from which I have read shows that he is a farmer. He is a member of the board of supervisors. He is a gentleman of standing, against whom no man has ever said a word so far as this record is concerned.

Mr. McINTIRE. He lives in the district in which he testified?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes, sir. And I would ask the gentleman—no, I would not make it personal—I would ask men who are keepers of their own consciences, is a man who has lived in a community for a lifetime, maintaining an irreproachable character—a man against whom, in a partisan contest of this kind, no man will say a word—is his evidence to be stricken down simply because he happens to swear one way or the other?

No, gentlemen, you would not do such a thing when acting according to the true instincts of yourselves. And I am glad to see the Republican members on this floor beginning to fill the seats on this side of the House; for I say to you this Republic is not top-heavy, is not tottering; but when the time comes that men will neither read 2,000 pages of a record nor the brief in the case nor listen to the argument, but will hie themselves off to the cloakroom and then vote with the majority or the minority, according to the report which may have been made by their party friends, such an exhibition, in my judgment, will not display a very high order of patriotism.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman know that this record does not contain 2,000 pages?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. How many?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Two thousand three hundred. One other question. Does not the gentleman know that a few days after the convention Mr. Gee withdrew his name and admitted that Mr. Thorp was the proper nominee?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I do not know any such thing; and the gentleman does not know it from the record. I saw the contestant in this case sitting by the gentleman's side, and I have no doubt he so informed him.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Gee's card was published in all the papers of his district.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Ah, if the gentleman will allow me, I do not permit any man in the trial of a lawsuit, or in the trial of this case, to be fairer than I. I did not say he continued in the race to the end. I said almost to the end.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Until the 16th of August.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The gentleman asked whether he did not withdraw in a few days. I say to you, no. The record shows that he waged this fight until the 16th day of August. After floating the free-silver flag for nearly ninety days, after holding up to the colored man that his salvation was the expanding of the currency, to wit, free silver, he expected that he could turn about, and in about forty days before the election turn his party friends all into line. He expects you to believe that simply because he says it is so.

I invite you to the record, and if it is 2,300 pages instead of 2,000 pages, I am willing to give you that advantage. But my time is going and I must hurry along. On page 1800 A. Q. Meade, farmer, testifies:

12. Q. Were the Republicans of that precinct united in the support of Mr. R. T. Thorp, the Republican candidate for Congress?
A. They were not.
14. Q. Give your reason for stating that they were not.
A. Well, because a good many of them told me that they were for free silver, and that they intended to vote the free-silver ticket, which they did. There were four or five negroes who came up and said they wanted to vote the free-silver ticket, but that they were afraid to do it, and then asked if it could be ever found out, and I told them that it was a secret ballot. Of course, there were a good many of them who didn't care whether it became known or not.

Here this witness says a great many did not care whether it was known how they voted, and they voted against him openly and aboveboard. He says that in this precinct there were at least four or five others who did not want it known that they were voting against Mr. Thorp.

Gentlemen, I will hurry along and go to the record, page 2220. I read from the testimony of George D. Grizzard, who was the sheriff of Sussex County for the last fourteen years:

Q. To what political party do you belong?
A. To the Republican organization.

Will you waive that aside before you even know what it is? Here was a gentleman who had had the confidence of the people, who had been elected sheriff for fourteen years. What did he say?

Q. Will you please state, if you have no objection, why you lost political respect for R. T. Thorp?
A. Because he first advocated the silver standard and subsequently espoused the cause of the goldbug.

The chairman of the Republican county organization, the sheriff for fourteen years, not simply voted against the contestant, but he had lost his respect. Yet they say every presumption is that every Republican voted for him. What did he say?

Because he first advocated the silver standard and subsequently espoused the cause of being a goldbug.

Mr. Speaker, the worthy chairman of this Committee on Elections sought and obtained the opportunity for the contestee to close this argument, and I will put it to him—as he comes last; and this is the only say I shall have—I ask him to say whether he was not, as stated by his comrade and fellow-Republican, a free-silver advocate; whether he did not accept the nomination in 1896 on that basis, and if he did not about face after the St. Louis convention in order to ride into a seat in Congress, either by the votes of the people or by an election contest?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am appealing to reason; I am talking to stout hearts. I am talking to men who have to be the keepers of their own consciences. I am talking to men who want to know whether the contestant or the contestee is entitled to this seat. I am talking to men who are ready and willing to rise above the question of being Democrats or Republicans, and enforcing the Constitution of our beloved Republic. This witness says:

Q. In your opinion, did not the facts stated in your last answer have great weight, not only with yourself, but with many other Republicans in the county of Sussex?
A. To my certain knowledge, those facts as enumerated entirely influenced myself, without question and without doubt; and, to my certain knowledge, it had great weight and directly influenced nearly all of the intelligent Republicans of my acquaintance.

Here is what the Republican sheriff says:

Q. Basing this question upon the fact that you are the sheriff of Sussex County and come in direct contact with many voters during any campaign, will you please state whether or not you had a good opportunity to know and hear the voters in the several precincts express themselves upon the paramount issue—the money question—and did actually hear and know the sentiment of a great many of them in the several voting precincts in the county of Sussex in the campaign preceding the election held November 3, 1896?
A. I not only had a good opportunity, but felt an interest in the matter and interested myself to ascertain the political status of my friends and political supporters in my county, and was thoroughly convinced that it was absolutely and utterly impossible for any man, be he Democrat or Republican, to poll the vote of my Republican friends in the county of Sussex for the gold standard, be they white or black, and I know very nearly them all.

Yet you are asked to indulge in the presumption that he received the entire Republican vote, when this witness tells you he knows he did not.

Then, again, I want to read you from the record the testimony of T. Y. Allen:

17. Q. Were you a member of the Hanford Silver Club in this county during the campaign of 1896? If so, what office did you hold?
A. I was, and held the office of secretary.
18. Q. How many colored Republicans were members of said club, and did they vote for Sydney P. Epes for Congress in November, 1896?
A. I think there were 25 colored voters who were members of the club, and about 20 of these had always voted the Republican ticket. I think all of them voted for Sydney P. Epes in the last election.

That is the judgment of a gentleman who was there on the ground.

19. Q. How many Republicans at your precinct, both white and colored, voted for Bryan, Sewall, and Epes at the last election, giving your reasons therefor?
A. By careful estimate made on the day of election and from what I heard as clerk of the election—the electors instructing the judge who marked the ballots, a great many of them speaking so loud that I could hear their instructions to the judge who prepared the ballots—I think there were as many as fifty.

Gentlemen say the presumption is that they all voted for Mr. Thorp. Here is a gentleman who was upon the election board. He heard them make the answers. He says he thinks there were at least 50 former Republicans who voted for Mr. Epes.

Now I read from page 1897. G. R. Graves testifies:

2. Q. Were you a member of the Hanford Silver Club in this county during the Congressional campaign of 1896; and if so, what office did you hold in the same?
A. I was, and was its president.
4. Q. How many Republicans, both members of the club and nonmembers of the club, voted for Sydney P. Epes for Congress at the election November 3, 1896, at your precinct in this county?
A. From what I could see and was told by the voters themselves, I suppose there were between 50 and 60 Republicans who voted for him, and I was about the polls all day. There was quite a contention between the Republican gold leaders and the Republican silver leaders.
5. Q. W. A. Jamieson, the Republican county chairman, has testified in this contest that in the Congressional campaign of 1896 the Republican party in this county was practically a unit in favor of Mr. R. T. Thorp. From what you know of your own precinct, was the Republican party united there in their support of Mr. Thorp, or were they much divided between him and Sydney P. Epes?
A. They were considerably divided; in my end of the county there were more Epes Republicans than Thorp Republicans; the negroes around me wanted free silver.

Now, gentlemen, if you want the facts, go to the record, page 1897, and see if the Republican chairman did not say there were more Republicans voted for Mr. Epes than voted for Mr. Thorp. And yet these gentlemen would criticise us because we say that their majority report is not a fair statement when they say that everything was happiness in the Republican party and that the presumption is they so voted.

But I find, gentlemen, that I am taking too much time. I want to read from the testimony of William Mulchi, on page 1895:

2. Q. To what party have you belonged for the past several years?
A. Republican and then Populist.
3. Q. Have you voted for Mr. R. T. Thorp in all elections held in this county in which he was a candidate up to the election of November 3, 1896?
A. Yes, sir.

4. Q. Did you vote for him in said election of November 3, 1896; and if not, for whom did you vote in said election, giving your reasons therefor?
A. No, sir; I voted for Sydney P. Epes. I voted for Mr. Thorp before because he was a free-silver man, and then he changed and was a gold man, and I refused to vote for him.
5. Q. Was Mr. R. T. Thorp believed to be a Free-Silver Republican at the time he was nominated for Congress at the Farmville convention in June, 1896?
A. Yes, sir.

Jesse Wren, a colored farmer, 47 years old, had always heretofore voted the Republican ticket, testifies, record, page 1872:

1. Q. State your age, occupation, and voting precinct.
A. I will be 47 in May; farmer; Rehoboth is my voting precinct.
2. Q. If you have no objection, please state for whom you voted for Congress at the election November 3, 1896.
A. I voted for Mr. Epes.
* * * * * * *
34. Q. How many colored people in your own county expressed these views?
A. From the best information I can get and from what I know personally, about seventy-five.

PRINCE GEORGE COUNTY.

Maj. Mann Page, president of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, farmer, and a man of national reputation, testifies, record, page 1735:

18. Q. You have stated that the chief cause of opposition to Mr. R. T. Thorp in the late campaign was his abandonment of the silver cause. Do you happen to know whether it caused him to lose votes among the white and colored Republicans of this district whom he had taught advocacy of the silver cause?
A. I can not speak positively on that subject, but I do know that prior to my taking the stump for the electoral ticket and in advocacy of Mr. Epes that very many of the colored Republicans in my section were open advocates of the free coinage of silver, and I know but one or two white Republicans that did not do the same thing.
19. Q. What is the chief industry or pursuit of the people of this district?
A. Tobacco, cotton, wheat, corn, hay, oats, and peanuts.
20. Q. Then they are agricultural people, are they not?
A. Strictly so, except in the city.

PETERSBURG.

George W. Pegram, a well-known gentleman of intelligence and unimpeachable character:

6. Q. State whether or not you are familiar with the work done with a view to organizing said district in behalf of the Democratic candidates at that election; and if you are, describe said organization as fully as possible.
A. Yes; I am familiar with the organization. It was the most thorough I ever saw. We had a canvass of every precinct in the district. We had every county and every precinct thoroughly organized. We had literature sent from these headquarters, State headquarters, and national headquarters throughout the district.
11. Q. From your knowledge of the situation as developed by your connection with the Democratic committee, were there not evidences of the destruction of party lines upon the questions of free silver as against the gold standard?
A. Yes; we had information from number of places that the Republican voters, in a large measure, would vote the Democratic ticket.
(Contestant, by counsel, excepts to the foregoing answer as being a statement of pure hearsay.)
12. Did your foregoing answer apply to the white or the colored Republican votes, or to both?
A. I don't recollect that a distinction was made.

The leading and most influential Republican in the county testifies, record, page 2220:

2. Q. To what political party do you belong?
A. To the Republican organization.
3. Q. How long have you been a Republican?
A. I have always voted the Republican ticket, except the first ballot of my majority, which was cast for Tilden, Hendricks, Hinton, and reform.
7. Q. In the campaign preceding the last election, held November 3, 1896, and on that day, were you an advocate of the free and unlimited coinage of silver and opposed to the gold standard?
A. Being largely engaged in agriculture and having been thoroughly convinced, after having heard the matter fully and thoroughly discussed by R. T. Thorp and others, and having read able papers which emanated from the Hon. William McKinley and others, that it was to the interest of agriculturists generally, and to myself and friends especially, I was induced to believe by such that it was incumbent upon every tiller of the soil, be he a Democrat or a Republican, that it was my duty as such to vote for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1.
I was, however, deterred by my allegiance to the Republican party, and simply saw fit, under all the circumstances, which were carefully considered by myself, to vote simply for Sydney P. Epes, because I had lost touch or accord with Mr. Thorp, and it was entirely out of the question for me at any time, in any way, in any manner, shape, form, or fashion, to vote for what I conceived to be the greatest calamity that could befall upon myself and my friends and the agricultural interest—the gold standard.
8. Q. Will you please state, if you have no objection, why you lost political respect for R. T. Thorp?
A. Because he first advocated the silver standard and subsequently espoused the cause of the goldbug.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Are these witnesses whose testimony you have been reading introduced by the contestant or the contestee?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Most of these were witnesses introduced by Mr. Thorp and by his counsel. There are at least 200 more from whose testimony I could read, but it would take all my time. With the exception of possibly three or four, in the mouths of these witnesses, who are Republicans, who are Democrats, who are Populists, who are free-silver men, who are brought from every corner of the district, they tell you that no such presumption arose.

But I must hurry on or I will not get to the second proposition. I leave the first proposition, that there was no such presumption. The record shows no such fact, and shows conclusively that he did not get the entire Republican vote.

Now I want to give a little attention to the claim that the 623 votes which were not cast should be counted for the contestee.

I would remind you first that Virginia has an election law. That election law provides that no ballot shall be counted save an official ballot. They ask you to count a vote that was never placed in the form of a ballot. They ask you to count a vote that never saw its way to the ballot box, one that never had an existence. Yet if they will be fair in discussing this case, they will concede that if one of these electors had had a ticket printed with the names on it for whom he intended to vote, and had gone and placed that ballot in the box, it could not have been counted under the Virginia election law. Why? Because it had not the form prescribed by the statutes.

It did all that you gentlemen claim here. It contained the purpose of the voter. It showed his will; it showed his honesty of purpose; and yet you will confess and agree with me that it could not be counted. Yet these gentlemen go further and say that if a voter comes to the polls, and if for some reason—I will show you, in nine cases out of ten, through his own fault—he did not vote, they would strike down the Virginia statute, they would strike down the ballot as prepared by law, and they would allow him to come here after the election is over and say how he intended to vote.

I will give you the answer of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER]. He says the precedents are that they can be counted. I say no. There is no such precedent to be found. Prior to the enactment of section 2207 of the Revised Statutes, which provided that where the elector was prevented by fraud or violence, without any fault of his own, and he was present declaring for whom he intended to vote, thereby making his purpose manifest, so that he could not afterwards change it, his intent might be established by parole and his vote counted; but up to that time there is no precedent where a vote has ever been counted under such circumstances.

There are cases where the election has been set aside, but there are no precedents where the vote has been counted for the party for whom he claimed he intended to vote. Now that section 2207 is repealed, all will agree that we revert to the precedents established before its enactment. And is not that the law?

I will concede, for the purpose of this case, and this only, and I do that by reason of one statement made by Mr. Payne on Elections, after the repeal of that statute, where inadvertently he said, "Where an elector was prevented by fraud, by violence, or by intimidation and then proved all other qualifications, the vote ought to be counted." I challenged the counsel, and I challenge the gentlemen who present this case to find any record outside of section 2207 that goes any further than this. You go to the State of New York in 19 Howard, page 252, and it is decided:

It would be improper now to allow either party the votes offered, but not received, merely because the person offering to vote proves that he intended to vote for plaintiffs or defendants. (In matter of L. I. R. R. Co., 19 Wend., 37). The result of the election must be determined by the votes cast. If illegal votes can be ascertained, they may be rejected, but votes not received can never be made available in favor of either party.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HILL). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I ask that my time may be extended fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks that his time be extended fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The supreme court of California (in 34 California Reports, page 276) said:

The court below erred in counting for the contestant the supposed votes of Gonsalves, Larkins, and Hass, under the pretense that they would have voted for him if they had been allowed to vote. In all contests of this kind, the question is, Which candidate received the highest number of legal votes? The idea that the supposed vote of persons who did not vote, but could have voted had they taken the necessary legal steps to entitle them to do so, should be counted for the candidate for whom they would have voted, is simply preposterous.

The supreme court of the State of Alabama, in the case of The State ex rel. Spencer vs. The Judge of the Ninth Judicial Circuit (13 Ala., 812), distinctly decides that under no circumstances can votes not cast be counted.

The supreme court of the State of Ohio, in the case of Renner vs. Bennett (21 Ohio St. Repts., 450), and also in the case of the State et al. vs. McDaniel et al. (23 Ohio St., 369), has clearly and positively decided that votes not cast can under no circumstances be counted.

In Kentucky it was held, when persons were prevented from voting because polls were closed at an hour earlier than the time prescribed by law, the votes could not be counted. (Newcum vs. Kirkley, 13 B. M. Ky., 515.)

"In a contested-election case" in North Carolina the supreme court of that State holds:

Evidence as to how a voter would have voted, or offered to vote who was challenged, and who by reason of the great number of voters failed to have his challenge heard so that he could in fact vote, is inadmissible.

And in the same case the report says:

The law as stated by Cooley seems to be in accord with the decisions of the American courts. Some of our legislative bodies, possibly in the heat of partisan excitement, have acted upon a different principle. (People ex rel. Boyer vs. Teague, 106 N. C., 627; 11 S. E. Reporter, 665, decided 1890.)

So I lay the proposition down under the Virginia election law, which provides that no ballot other than an official ballot can be counted, there is no set of circumstances where any one of the ballots in question can be counted. And I take it that no gentleman in this Chamber will say that a vote of that kind can be counted unless a voter was prevented by fraud, violence, or intimidation from depositing his ballot; and I undertake to say that gentlemen on the other side of the House will agree with me, if even an elector had been prevented by fraud, violence, or intimidation from depositing his ballot he would have to prove all the facts that would be required if he presented himself at the election polls.

He must prove that he was a resident of the district; and I call the attention of the House, as there are 623 of this kind of votes which they ask to have counted, to the fact that they are required to prove on election day that they were members of that voting precinct. The question put is, "Are you a resident of the precinct?" at the time the deposition is taken. He said he was. Then the man is asked, "Are you a registered voter?"

Objection is made by the counsel of the contestee—to prove that he is a registered voter he must produce the book of registration. That brings the question, Must these gentlemen, before they can count this ballot, first show that he was a registered voter? They all agree they must. Then the question arises, If they must show that, with what kind of evidence must they show it? Every lawyer will concede they must show it by the best of evidence. I contend the book of registration is the best evidence, and they must produce the book itself; they can not count the ballot if they have not done so.

They must prove its loss, its destruction, or something of that kind, or they must have a subpœna duces tecum issued and have the book brought before them to show; but nothing of that kind is proposed in this record. This is a simple question, and I submit as a proposition of law under the Virginia election law and under the statute that provides for registration, that provides an officer to keep the book, that provides a book to be kept, that provides where it shall be kept, that provides what it shall contain, and then provides that when it is presented to the election board, if his name does appear on the book, the election board shall strike it off, and he cast his vote—I say this is a public record provided for by statute and kept at a public office and at public expense.

Mr. MESICK. I would like to ask the gentleman if he contends that the evidence of the voter himself is not the best evidence in the case?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I do most emphatically so contend. You might as well tell me that a man who has had or caused his mortgage to be recorded in the recorder's office, provided for by statute, should state the contents of the record. You might as well say to me that a man against whom a judgment is recorded in the clerk's office by order of court can state in court what appears in the record.

I take it there is no lawyer on the floor of this House who will so contend. Will any gentleman say that a public record kept by reason of a public statute, kept by a public officer, kept in a public way like this, and its contents to be proven as the statutes here provide—will he say that Tom, Dick, and Harry may say it contains my name, or will he say that the record is the only evidence? Why, gentlemen, it seems to me that that principle is elementary. But I do not want to stop at my own judgment. I have some authorities on that subject.

The Massachusetts supreme court has held that where the statute provides—will the gentleman from New York [Mr. MESICK] give me his attention? He asked me a question, and I want to quote him as respectable authority as the supreme court of Massachusetts. That court says:

It is not therefore competent for a party to show by parole evidence that his name is on such a voting list without giving notice to produce the list.

And McCrary on Elections, page 431, decides the same thing. Gray, Massachusetts Reports, page 433, decides the same question. Payne on Elections, page 756, also decides that the record is the best evidence and that you can not give parole evidence; and yet, gentlemen, you who are supposed to sit in this court with impartiality, are asked to say that because this is a political question you will strike down these authorities, so laid down by all the elementary writers, and which must be confirmed by your own judgment.

Again the court, in Gray, page 433, says:

The voting list used at the election was the official document. Taking this view, we think that the voting list is the primary and regular evidence that anyone's name is or is not on the list and essential to the proof that a party is rejected by the selectmen as judges of the qualifications of electors. Then, according to the general rule on the subject, before using secondary evidence, notice to produce or a subpœna duces tecum must have been returned and a failure.

If the original document is produced and authenticated as the voting list, we think it conclusive evidence upon the question whether the person was admitted as a qualified voter at such meetings or not, and that parole proof or other secondary evidence would not be permissible to control it. As parole evidence was permitted in the present case, without notice to produce the voting list, against the objection of the defendant, we think there must be a new trial.

So it is all through this record. They ask to have these votes counted of men who have not brought themselves within the statute, who have not offered an official ballot, who have not proved their registration. Aye, more! I will not take the time, but some other gentleman will have time, I hope, to call your attention to the effort they made to vote. Many were there not five minutes, many of them never got in line, and many never tried to vote.

Now, to these members who are going to vote because the majority report says so, I want to say to you that my time is about exhausted, and this case will not get to a vote until a later time than this to-morrow. I will take pleasure, my friends, in referring you to the record of more than 300 of these 623 claimed voters who never made an honest effort to vote. Here were men who are not versed in the law, who could not prepare their tickets, and who never made an honest effort to vote, and yet you are asked to say that those votes shall be counted.

I have nothing personal against my friend from Virginia [Mr. WALKER]. I have thought him to be a partisan. But I want to say to you that there are some things in this record that I wish were not in it. Well, gentlemen of the House, it is very well for the gentleman when he has the floor to turn on one of his colleagues and say, "I quit the Democratic party because I was honest, and you stayed in it because you were dishonest."

It is easy for you to say, "I am a friend of the poor colored man who has been cheated out of his vote; you are the dishonest rascal who would not let him vote." I would say to him, "Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed, that he has grown so fat?" [Laughter]. Why so much patriotism? Was it because of his early training? Was it because he was a gold-standard advocate? I am informed that he never was until 1894. Was it because he was a friend of the poor colored man in his youth? No, he trained, as he says on the floor of the House, with these wicked Democrats. They were all right up to 1861.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I would like to correct the gentleman. He is as wrong about my record as he is about the record in this case. [Laughter.] I was a Republican a good while ago. I voted for Harrison. I have been a Republican twelve years.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. How long ago was that? Which time did the gentleman vote for Harrison?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. The last time.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Ah, the gentleman says the last time. It is only a matter of calculation. When he says he has had the training of his youth, I would respond simply by saying that he trained with the Democrats between 1861 and 1865. In order not to free the poor colored man he endured the hardship of battle for four years, and he did it so well, as a friend of the colored man, that when Stonewall Jackson was stricken, he, above all others, was selected to take the standard and carry it on.

Ah, gentlemen, he not only did that, but he stayed along with these wicked Democrats, in opposition to the friends of the poor colored man, until the fourteenth amendment was adopted, and until the fifteenth amendment was adopted. He continued with the Democratic party until after the reconstruction period. And I am informed he was a pretty enthusiastic Democrat until probably 1885, when possibly he was turned down for the Democratic nomination. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I quit the Democratic party when it quit Mr. Cleveland. I quit the Democratic party when Cleveland quit it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Ah, but Mr. Cleveland quit the Democratic party, and he and you became advocates of the gold standard at the same time. [Applause.]

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the record in this case is somewhat voluminous and in a measure complicated. After a very searching and painstaking examination of the record the committee found the facts to be substantially as stated in the majority report. It is true, the committee divided upon political lines; the six Republican members united in the majority report, while the three Democratic members presented their views to the House in a separate and opposing report.

My colleague from Indiana [Mr. MIERS] in a very exhaustive and eloquent speech, to which I listened with much care and attention, admitted practically every question of fact found in the report of the committee. He did not assume to dispute or contradict a single ultimate finding of fact made by the committee. Of the hour and twenty minutes that were given to him for the discussion of the case he devoted more than an hour to questions relating to the nomination of contestant away back in June, 1896. He attempted to create the impression that there was a division in the Republican ranks; that there was dissatisfaction and defection growing out of the nomination at the regular Republican convention. This he did for the purpose, I presume, of showing that contestant did not have the united support of his party and accounting for the 2,621 plurality returned for contestee.

The record does show that there were some differences among the Republicans of the Fourth district of Virginia early in the campaign of 1896; that a portion of the convention nominated Mr. Thorp, the contestant, and another portion withdrew and nominated Mr. Charles Gee. That this division engendered some bitterness is true, but before the middle of August all differences had been patched up and harmony was fully restored. Mr. Gee withdrew from the contest, and in a card to the Republicans of the district he advocated the election of contestant, whose nomination had been recognized as regular by the constituted political authorities—the Republican committee of the State of Virginia and the national Republican committee—and from that time on Mr. Gee and his friends were earnest and enthusiastic followers of the leadership of contestant.

Mr. LACEY. At what time did the speaking campaign actually begin?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think about the 1st of September. But I may say with perfect safety that before actual campaign warfare opened up those differences had been entirely settled, and Mr. Gee canvassed the district throughout, advocating the election of the entire Republican ticket.

In the Fourth Virginia district, as was characteristic of the contest of 1896 generally, the issues were of such paramount importance that they overshadowed the personality of the candidates. Every man who believed in protection and honest money was aligned with the Republican party and marched with the Republican columns under the leadership of its chosen standard bearers.

There is—perhaps not indisputable, but convincing—evidence from every county in the district that the party was never more harmonious than it was in support of contestant for Congress in 1896. Evidence was taken upon both sides of the question. It was claimed by some Democrats and some Republicans that the Democrats were not united in their support of contestee; and the record shows more defection and dissatisfaction among the Democrats against the candidacy of contestee than there were among the Republicans against the candidacy of contestant, after the campaign had fully opened.

My distinguished friend from Indiana, for want of something better to talk about, gave over an hour of his time to the discussion of that preliminary matter, which was collateral and incidental at most and can have but little bearing upon the question for decision. But he did not deny the fact that 623 legally qualified voters in the Fourth district of Virginia went to the polls on election day and stood there, many of them from sunrise till sunset, waiting for an opportunity to vote the Republican ticket—an opportunity which never came. Neither does he controvert the fact that the deposition of every one of those men was taken and is contained in the record, and that every man of them testified that if he could have voted his vote would have been cast for contestant for Congress.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is of little consequence upon that issue whether the nomination of contestant was regular or otherwise in view of the fact that it is admitted that those 623 qualified voters—all American citizens—stood at the polls all day long clamoring for the right to vote, and would have voted for contestant had the right to vote been accorded them.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman says "it is admitted." By whom? Certainly not by our side.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is admitted by everyone who knows anything about the record.

Mr. HAY. It is not admitted by any Democratic member of the committee, so far as I know.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is admitted, because there is not a syllable in the record nor a syllable in the contestee's brief to the contrary, nor has a word in dispute of that fact escaped the lips of the gentleman who has just spoken for the contestee—not a word.

Mr. HAY. When my time comes I will show that it is disputed in the contestee's case—that the gentleman's statement is incorrect.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is possible the gentleman may find something of that sort in the record; but if he does it has entirely escaped the notice of the 6 Republicans and the 3 Democrats on the committee, as well as of the able corps of attorneys who prepared the case for the contestee, who argued it before the committee, and submitted exhaustive briefs which are a part of the record. He will be able to find something that none of these gentlemen, with all their ability, care, and research, could discover.

I assert now that it is irrefutably true that 623 legally qualified voters were denied the right to vote at the November election in 1896 in this Congressional district, and that every one of them would have voted for contestant if he had had the privilege of voting. The testimony of every one of these witnesses is in the record, and every one swears that he was a resident of the district; that he was a registered voter in his precinct; that he stood at the polls—many of them all day—endeavoring to vote.

Mr. BURKE. Will my colleague on the committee state to this House, or is this House to understand that he asserts, that 623 colored men, under the testimony in this case, stood at the polls all day clamoring for the privilege of voting in this case?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; I do not say they all stood at the polls all day.

Mr. BURKE. That is what I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I said many of them did, and all of them stayed more than a reasonable time. Some of them came, perhaps, at 10 o'clock and stayed until dark. Some came at noon.

Mr. BURKE. And some stayed five minutes?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. None stayed so short a time as five minutes—none that the committee ask to have counted. There are over 700 depositions in the record on the part of that class of voters, and the committee went carefully through the record and examined the testimony of every witness and eliminated every vote that there was any doubt about. A number were eliminated from whose testimony the minority quote in their report in the case. The committee examined that subject with especial care, and were careful to count no vote that the evidence did not bring clearly within the law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a few words about the election law of the State of Virginia. The election machinery in 1896 was absolutely and entirely in the hands of the Democratic party. Under the law of that State the legislature elects three men in each county and in each incorporated city, who constitute what is known as the county and city electoral boards. In the Fourth Congressional district every single member of every one of those boards was a partisan Democrat, many of them being taken from the Democratic party organizations.

These electoral boards have absolute and complete control of the elections. A registrar is required in each voting precinct, and the electoral board appoints them. Every registrar in the Fourth Congressional district was a Democrat. The electoral boards provide for the printing of the official ballots. They arrange the order of the names on the ballot, and in every single instance the tickets were printed by Democratic printers. And, by the way, under the law of Virginia the printer is a quasi-public officer.

Every man who has a thing to do with the official ballot from the time the nominations are made and the certificates are filed until the votes are finally counted is under a solemn oath of secrecy. The board compiles the ballots. They do not edit the ballots, as they did prior to the amendment of the law in 1896. The arrangement of candidates is made and the character of the ticket is agreed upon by the electoral board, and no one under the shining sun of heaven except the electoral board and the printers who are officially selected knows a thing about the official ballot, about its appearance, its arrangement, or its contents until it is handed out at the voting place to the elector when he goes to cast his ballot on election day.

The provisions for nominations are decidedly peculiar under that law. Political parties certify to the secretary of the Commonwealth the nominations for general officers and Congressional candidates; but, as was explained by the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. WALKER of Virginia], who is thoroughly familiar with the law and the inscrutable methods by which it is administered, is such that any individual in the State may have his name put upon the official ballot, and it can not be known until election day. Every man who touches the ballot is sworn to secrecy, so that it can not be known who are candidates until the voter is confronted with the list at the ballot box.

Now, the chairman of the committee has called your attention to an abuse of that power in this case. The name of one J. L. Thorp, an unlettered, obscure denizen of Greenesville County—a Democrat, because he was born that way, for he said in his deposition he did not know why—was put upon the official ballot at the suggestion of E. L. Lashley, who was a member of the Democratic electoral board in Greenesville County, and of a man named Howell, for the acknowledged purpose of deceiving the voters of the district.

Those men in their testimony confess to these damning facts. Mr. Howell said he had no idea that anybody would vote for J. L. Thorp who knew anything about him, but his name was put upon the ballot for the purpose of deceiving the voters; "that Republicans might vote for him through ignorance." He so testified without qualification.

Think of it, Mr. Speaker, a member of the electoral board in Greenesville County, charged with the solemn duty of protecting the purity and integrity of the ballot and of securing to every voter in his county the right to cast an independent and an honest ballot and to have it counted, entering into a foul conspiracy, resorting to a contemptible trick to put the name of a man on the official ballot with the avowed object of deceiving the credulous voters of the district! Who can have any confidence in elections conducted by such men?

Mr. MORRIS. May I ask the gentleman a question? Do they not require a convention to put these names on the ballot?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. No petition?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. They can just absolutely put any name on the ballot that they please?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The requirement of the statute is that any elector of a Congressional district may, by a request in writing, the signature to which shall be attested by two witnesses and sent to the secretary of the State, have his name placed upon the official ballot as a candidate for Congress.

Mr. MORRIS. Without anybody else asking for it?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Without anybody else asking for it.

Mr. MORRIS. No sample ballots before the election?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No sample ballots published in the newspapers or anywhere else, and none about the polls.

Mr. MORRIS. No ballots issued until the morning of the election?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No ballots are issued at all until they are given to the voters at the polls—one to each voter when he applies to exercise the high privilege of casting his ballot. It is a crime to give out any information respecting the ballot. It is an offense even, after one has voted, to go out on the street or elsewhere and instruct an elector in respect to the position of a name on the ballot or to give any information about the ballot whatever. They have what they call the Australian system of voting in Virginia. They have an official ballot and election booths, and the voter is required to prepare his ballot in secret.

The judges of election are all chosen by the partisan electoral boards, and the law provides that there shall be minority representation on the board of election officers; but it provides further that if this requirement is not observed it shall not invalidate an election. I presume that is merely declaratory of the common law, because if there should be an occasional violation of that safeguard, admitted as it is by people all over this country to be an indispensable one, it would not necessarily vitiate the poll in the absence of other incriminating facts.

I have now stated briefly the chief features of the Virginia election law as far as they are necessary for the purposes of this case. Every board of election officers in the Fourth Congressional district was Democratic in its composition; that is, a majority of each board were Democrats, and at nineteen precincts in that district every member of the board of judges and every clerk was a Democrat. That is conceded by contestee. I say that with perfect assurance, because I have his brief here, in which his counsel expressly admit the fact to be true.

Now, when an elector desires to vote he enters the polling place and is supplied with a ballot and sent into a booth to prepare it. One judge presides at the ballot box, one judge is in charge of the registration books, and one judge selected by the board is required to assist the illiterate and physically disabled voters in preparing their ballots. It has been demonstrated that the ballots are so prepared and guarded as to make it almost impossible for an illiterate to vote independently. He must have assistance, and in this lies one of the most pernicious features of the law because of the kind of assistance the law compels him to accept.

It is impossible for him to know the location of the names on the ballot, so he can not discharge that high function of citizenship alone with any degree of safety. In the Fourth district of Virginia, at the election in November, 1896, at every precinct, barring one, to which the distinguished chairman of the committee has referred, the marking judge—the judge who went into the booth with the voter—was a Democrat, and in many instances a disreputable one at that. In no instance did they permit a Republican judge to go into the booth with an illiterate or blind or physically disabled voter to assist him in preparing his ballot.

Mr. COLSON. Does the law of Virginia allow a judge of election to go into the booth with the voter?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It requires him to do so with an illiterate voter.

Mr. MORRIS. Will the gentleman repeat that?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Where an illiterate or physically disabled voter applies to vote, the law requires the judge who has been selected for that duty by a majority of the board to go into the booth with him to assist him in preparing his ballot, so that it will express his choice of candidates. Every one of these marking judges was a Democrat—almost every one was a partisan Democrat.

Mr. HAY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that every single judge who marked the ballots in the Fourth Congressional district in 1896 was a Democrat?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Every single one was a Democrat, except the colored man referred to by the chairman of the committee, so far as the record discloses.

Mr. HAY. I say the record discloses just the opposite.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then the gentleman has been able to discover that which nobody else has found.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I found it.

Mr. MORRIS. Has the voter any choice as to the marker?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. None whatever. The voter has nothing in the world to say about it. The election board selects the marking judge, and the voter has no voice in the matter whatever. A majority of all the election boards is Democratic, and usually the most expert member in that line is chosen to prepare ballots for the illiterate voters. The record does not disclose a single instance where the voter was allowed to select the judge to assist him.

Mr. MUDD. And you say the voter has no choice as to these?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No choice whatever, and the law surrounds the act of voting with so many obstacles that it compels all the illiterates and many others to depend upon the marking judge for assistance. It is lamentably true that a large percentage of the colored voters in the State of Virginia are illiterate. They possess intelligence enough to know for whom to vote, but not education enough to know how to vote. They can not run the gauntlet of the Virginia system because of its vicious complexities, and every illiterate, when he attempts to vote, is absolutely at the mercy of a Democratic partisan judge. That judge may mark the ballot right or wrong at his pleasure. He may perpetrate fraud with impunity, for the poor, unlettered victim has no capacity to detect it!

That is the situation in the State of Virginia. It is the boast of representatives of contestee in this case that the Democratic party of the State of Virginia is the white man's party. At the argument before the committee counsel for contestee declared that no colored man was ever allowed to participate in any primary, party caucus, or convention of the Democratic party in Virginia. Their doors are shut against men of color, yet gentlemen insist that colored men vote the Democratic ticket in that State. No colored man with any self-respect would identify himself with a party that gave him such treatment.

Wise legislation has placed the ballot in the hands of the colored man as his sword and his shield, that he might make himself felt as a factor in society and politics and in the affairs of the country generally. It was done to compensate to some extent for his disadvantages and for the superiority of his white brother over him. But by the Virginia system he is shorn of his power and is absolutely at the mercy of the one who is his inveterate social and political enemy, one whose cardinal faith in politics is "white supremacy." The Virginia voting system is subversive of free institutions.

It is extremely dangerous to put such enormous power in the hands of a single man as is vested in the marking election judge in Virginia. The temptation to shamefully abuse it will not be resisted. Why, even in the State of Indiana, where the political atmosphere is proverbially pure, there would be very little confidence in any election under such an infamous law. The State of Indiana would not tolerate that law twenty-four hours. It would create revolution and bloodshed in any State where equality and fair play have been controlling sentiments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have demonstrated the abundant opportunities afforded by the Virginia law for the perpetration of fraud. There are men who will resort to methods in politics that they would despise in all other relations in life, and particularly is that true where the dominant sentiment is that a higher law of civilization justifies the accomplishment of an end condemned by positive law. If elections can be conducted fairly in the State of Virginia under this system, human nature is better there than it is in Indiana or in Illinois or in the Northern States generally, where all the safeguards practicable are found necessary.

It is historical in the State of Virginia that wherever there has been an opportunity to abuse the election law that opportunity has been made serviceable. The present election system was established in 1894, and it originally gave the electoral boards complete power over the elections. They had all the powers now given electoral boards, and, in addition, the discretion as to the character of type to be used in printing the ballots. That discretion was vested in them, doubtless, upon the assumption that it would be exercised justly and honestly.

But gentlemen of this House know that in 1894, at the first election held under this law, in many of the Congressional districts in the State they shamelessly abused that discretion. In the case of Yost against Tucker, the type used in printing the ballots was a mixture of script, italics, German, and old English, so that the official ballot had more resemblance to a Chinese laundry bill than it had to a ballot designed to express the will of an American citizen.

The State legislature took note of that abuse and corrected the law in that particular. We have seen in this case an instance of a contemptible conspiracy set on foot by an election officer to abuse the power of placing candidates on the official ballot. It was done to confuse and entrap innocent voters. But the power in a single partisan judge to mark ballots for illiterate voters is infinitely worse than all the others combined. It is more dangerous because its consequences are worse and the danger of detection is infinitely less. There is absolutely no safeguard for pure elections except the integrity of the election judge who goes into the polls with the helpless, illiterate colored man to mark his ballot.

For J. L. Thorp, the bogus candidate, 491 votes were cast by unsuspecting, innocent voters of the district through inadvertence and mistake. In honesty and good conscience every single one of those votes ought to be counted for contestant, because it is manifest that they were intended for him, but were stolen by a cheap trick. The committee do not ask that they be so counted, but I refer to the facts to show you something about the character of the election law and the methods of election officers in the State of Virginia. But I do insist that the 623 voters who went to the polls on election day and used due diligence to cast their ballots and were denied the right shall be counted.

I deny that section 2007 of the recent Federal election statute conferred the right to count votes not cast. That right existed independent of that statute; it existed as a matter of sound morals and of public policy; it existed as a matter of self-respect and self-preservation in this body. That right is constitutional and is above that statute or any other statute that has been or ever can be enacted. It is true that in some States the courts have denied the right of parties to contested-election cases to count the ballots of voters who were illegally and improperly refused the right to vote; but that rule has not obtained in this House for more than twenty years. The right to count votes not cast is based on a principle of vital importance.

The rule is laid down by the report of the committee, prepared by Mr. LACEY in the case of Waddell against Wise, as follows:

> If the fraudulent exclusion of votes would, if successful, secure to the party of the wrongdoer a temporary seat in Congress, and the only penalty for detection in the wrong would be merely a new election, giving another chance for the exercise of similar tactics, such a practice would be a great premium on fraud and indefinitely prevent an election; but if, where such acts are done, the votes are counted upon clear proof aliunde, the wrong is at once corrected in this House and no encouragement is given to such dangerous and disgraceful methods.

That is the philosophy of the rule, Mr. Speaker, and this House has exercised that power once since the repeal of section 2007 in the case of Yost against Tucker. The report of the committee in that case, adopted by the House, recommended the counting of votes excluded, under precisely the same circumstances. It has become a rule of jurisprudence in this House, and a wise and judicious rule it is.

Under the Virginia election law the judges of the county courts establish the precincts, and it is within the power of those judges to change the lines of the precincts and create others when conditions seem to justify it. In some of the precincts where votes were excluded there were over 1,000 registered voters. For instance, in the Sixth Ward of the city of Petersburg there were 1,000 voters who registered—750 colored and 250 white. It was shown by men who testified from the registration list and who were personally acquainted with every voter in the ward.

There were 750 colored and 250 white voters, and yet the "white man's party," that treats the colored man in politics with no more respect than if he were a dog, emerged from that ward with a majority of 94 votes. Of the 750 colored voters, perhaps two-thirds of them required assistance in marking their ballots; and I submit that however honest the election judges may have been, it was an impossibility to cast all those votes at that precinct, and yet there is evidence of dilatory tactics, of discrimination, and other irregularities impeaching the integrity and the good faith of every member of that board.

Counsel for contestee say in their brief—and I believe my distinguished colleague contended on the floor—that excluded votes could not be counted unless it be shown that they were excluded by the fraud of election officers. On that subject I submit a quotation from McCrary on Elections, relating to the question of the size of election precincts and the conduct of officers in failing to provide reasonable facilities to accommodate all the voters of the district. Frauds can be perpetrated in the arrangement of precincts as well as in matters more directly involving election methods.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman does not want to misstate the law of Virginia, I suppose?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, sir.

Mr. HAY. Is it not true that under the law of Virginia fifteen qualified voters of a precinct may petition the county judge to erect a new precinct?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true.

Mr. HAY. Is it shown that qualified voters did in any precinct of this district make any such petition?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They did in the city of Petersburg, and the county court continued the case term after term, and finally refused to grant the request on the ground of expense. Yes, sir; in the city of Petersburg a petition by fifteen voters of the Sixth Ward was filed making such a request, and the prayer of the petitioners was denied by the county court.

Mr. HAY. Was that done anywhere else in the district?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not remember whether it was or not. I know it was done in that instance.

But at any rate, it is the duty of the county court in the first instance, without petition, to construct precincts of such a character as to afford reasonable facilities for the accommodation of all the voters, having in view their character, capacity, their habits of life and thought.

Mr. HAY. How can the judge construct a new precinct without being informed of the facts? He is not supposed to know what is taking place in every precinct.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. To that suggestion, my answer is that the power which created the precincts in the first place had no right to act except upon satisfactory information; and those precincts were too large when created. There were 750 colored and 250 white voters in the Sixth Ward of Petersburg, all in one precinct. There were probably 500 illiterate voters, men who required the assistance of an election judge, in that precinct. The law allows each voter two minutes and a half in the booth; and during an election day of ten hours only 240 voters could be accommodated if each occupied all the time allowed. While the election judge was in the booth preparing the ballot for one illiterate voter, all other such voters would be compelled to wait until the judge was ready to assist them.

At the closing of the polls in that ward on that election day 307 men—American citizens—stood in line unable to vote. Many of them had been there all day clamoring for an opportunity to vote—driven almost to the point of desperation because of their disappointment. When the polls closed at the going down of the sun, 307 qualified voters had been denied the right so highly prized by every American citizen. Three hundred and seven! An army larger than the army that stood with Leonidas at Thermopylæ. This occurred in the Sixth Ward in Petersburg under the very nose of the court that created the precinct.

According to the sound doctrine declared by McCrary, it is immaterial how the votes are excluded. The question is, Does the poll express the voice of the majority of the legal voters? If by accident or design it does not, it is discredited. I read from section 251 of McCrary on Elections:

> But the question may arise whether, even in the absence of proof of a fraudulent purpose, the fixing of the voting places in such a manner as to prevent a full and free election must not render the election void? As, for example, if all the voters of a county or city are required to vote at a single polling place, and if it should appear that the voters were so numerous that it was impossible for them all to vote, and that a part were, in fact, for this reason prevented from voting—in such a case, we think, the election should be held void without further proof.

Under the conditions described, the poll is discredited; but according to a well-settled, universally recognized rule of law, votes proved aliunde may be counted where the poll is rejected.

This author further says:

> Perhaps from these facts a fraudulent purpose on the part of the board or officers whose duty it was to fix suitable and convenient voting places would be presumed; but if not, then the election should be held void upon the ground that whatever in point of fact prevents a fair and free election, whether so intended or not, must render the election null and void.

Does any gentleman on this floor dispute the wisdom of those words, the soundness of that rule of law? In paragraph 492 the author says substantially the same thing—that anything operating to defeat the expression of the will of the majority of voters at a precinct renders the return unreliable, and unless there be evidence showing the vote aliunde, the poll must be rejected.

At six or seven precincts of this district 623 votes were excluded under circumstances that bring them within the rule laid down by McCrary. The distinguished chairman of the committee said that the minority report was made up in the main of extracts from the contestee's brief.

I have no doubt of the truth of that statement. Twenty-eight of the thirty-three pages were quoted verbatim from the brief. If my colleague from Indiana had gone to the record instead of to the contestee's brief for his information, he probably would have left unsaid some things that he uttered in his speech. The minority, on page 16 of their report, quote, among other things, an extract from the evidence of John Harrison. The quotation, as they give it, reads thus:

> Q. You were not prevented from voting, were you?
> A. No, sir.

This extract from the evidence would convey to the minds of members the impression that this man did not try to vote. I want to show you what he did testify to. This one instance will serve as an illustration for all. I read from the testimony of John Harrison, on page 340 of the record:

> Cross-examination by COUNSEL FOR CONTESTEE:
> 1. Q. Did you get in line when you first went to the polls?
> A. Yes, sir.

2. Q. Did you leave the line?
A. No, sir.
3. Q. In answer to question 5 you said you were at the polls from 6 o'clock till they closed. How long was that?
A. Was there from 6 in the morning until 6 at night. I did not leave at all.
4. Q. Did you eat dinner that day?
A. I carried some bread in my pocket.
5. Q. How many men in front of you when you got to the polls?
A. I could not tell; there was lots of them.
6. Q. Were there 25?
A. More.
7. Q. About how many?
A. About 50.
8. Q. Did you see them vote?
A. A few of them.
9. Q. Did you change your place at all that day?
A. No, sir.
10. Q. Were you standing up or sitting down?
A. Standing up.
11. Q. Do I understand you to say that you stood up in line for twelve hours without changing your place or leaving at all?
A. Yes, sir.
12. Q. Did you urinate at all that day?
A. Yes, sir.
13. Q. Where?
A. The men were standing so thick around me that I put it up side the fence.

That is what John Harrison stated—that he was in attendance at the polls all day, and was prevented from voting because the crowd was so great he could not get within 40 feet of the polls.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a fair sample of the garbled extracts of the testimony quoted in the minority report.

Those 623 votes were every one honest, legal votes; they would all have been cast for contestant; and they ought to be counted for him now under the settled decisions of this House and by every principle of morals and public policy.

Now, there were nineteen precincts where there was not a Republican judge nor a Republican clerk, and I desire your attention for a short time to those precincts. In the city of Petersburg, at every single precinct, there was a solid silver Democratic board. At every solitary precinct in that city a Democratic election board had control. What does that mean? Why, under a rule of law recognized universally, where there is a general violation of one of the important safeguards of an election law at all the precincts, it is prima facie evidence of conspiracy, and without further proof it will discredit the entire returns. No further proof is required.

In Lunenburg County there were 8 precincts, and at 7 of them every election officer was a Democrat. There were 5 election officers at a precinct, 40 altogether in that county, and the Republicans had 1 and the Democrats 39.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when the case of Thorp against McKenney was before this House two years ago the Committee on Elections unanimously reported in favor of unseating Mr. McKenney and giving the seat to Mr. Thorp.

There were two reports in that case, both reaching the same conclusion, but on different grounds. The Democratic members of the committee recommended the unseating of McKenney because the electoral boards in a number of instances refused to appoint any Republican election judges. They apologized for the action of the election officers on the ground that the law was only enacted in 1894, and its provisions were not understood; but they held that the result was wrong nevertheless, and they reported in favor of unseating the Democratic sitting member for that reason.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. Is it not fair to state to this House that that committee predicated that report on the fact that Mr. McKenney never introduced an iota of testimony before the House?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, that was suggested in the report.

Mr. BURKE. Does not the record show that Mr. McKenney never offered an iota of proof?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman for a moment? I was on that committee. There was a contest made. There was a very exhaustive brief filed and a gentleman appeared before the committee and argued the case, and it was argued in this House.

Mr. BURKE. I ask if the report of that minority, to which Judge CRUMPACKER has just referred, does not expressly declare that they put it on the ground that Mr. McKenney introduced no testimony?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. They do not put it on any such ground.

Mr. BURKE. I challenge a reference to that report in support of my statement.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They suggested that fact in the report, but concluded that McKenney should be unseated because the Republicans had no representation on some of the election boards. Now, in the case under consideration it is admitted by the other side that at nineteen precincts giving contestee a plurality of about 2,200, the Republicans had absolutely no representation on the election board. According to the Democratic view two years ago, that fact alone was sufficient to reject the returns at all such precincts.

The election officers sinned against light this time, because they had before them the judgment of the House in Thorp against McKenney in the last Congress. They set at naught and defiantly trampled in the dust the only safeguard given in the election law of Virginia tending to secure an honest election. And I desire to say further that in the present case the minority do not even reprove the misconduct of the electoral boards. They admit now that at least 623 voters were kept from the polls for want of facilities to accommodate them, and that at 19 precincts, giving contestee about 2,200 plurality, there was no Republican representative on the boards; but they still insist that the election was regular and the methods above criticism.

Mr. CAPRON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. With pleasure.

Mr. CAPRON. I should like to ask the gentleman if one of these official ballots was presented before the committee?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAPRON. I should like to ask if this one which I hold in my hand is a copy?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a copy of the official ballot that was used in Petersburg.

Mr. CAPRON. For the information of the House, I ask that the gentleman permit this ballot to go into the RECORD as a part of his speech.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will do so. I should like to have that ballot inspected by the members. I will append it to my remarks.

Now, there was evidence of fraud and irregularity at every one of those nineteen precincts in addition to the refusal to appoint a Republican judge or clerk on the election board; evidence that the Democratic marking judges mismarked ballots, and in some instances they refused to mark them at all.

They had different views in relation to the duty of election judges to assist illiterate voters in preparing their ballots. The law provides that a judge shall go into the booth to assist an illiterate or physically disabled voter in preparing his ballot, and he shall read the ballot over and furnish the voter such assistance as he may require; and in case of one physically incapacitated to perform the manual act of scratching the ballot the judge must do that also.

The supreme court of appeals of the State, in the case of Pearson vs. Board of Supervisors (91 Va., 323), decided that where a voter is unable on account of lack of education to safely mark his own ballot, as well as where he is physically incapable of doing so, it is the duty of the judge to perform the manual act of marking, as well as to give him instructions. But in many instances in the Fourth Congressional district the judge refused to furnish that assistance. He would read the ballot over to the voter and point out the names of the candidates; then refuse further assistance.

The poor unlettered voter would be compelled to blunder and stumble over the ballot in attempting to make it express his will while the judge stood by with folded arms and looked on, and frequently ballots would be defaced and mutilated in the presence of the judge in such a manner that they could not be counted, and he would suffer them to be voted in that condition. Several judges admitted those facts in their testimony and justified themselves on the ground that the voter had eyes and hands and the manual act of marking was his own affair.

Republicans at numerous polling places attempted to keep a tally of those voting the Republican ticket with the view of circumventing fraud. The judges refused this innocent privilege and threatened to put those who persisted in it in jail. The law provides that when the polls are closed, the doors shall be locked and the election board shall then count the ballots to ascertain whether the number of ballots in the box corresponds to the number of names on the poll list. No witness is permitted to be present at this proceeding; no one but the election board is allowed to witness the performance. If there should be more ballots in the box than there are names on the poll list, one of the election officers is blindfolded and draws out a sufficient number of ballots to make them correspond.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I yield ten minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. After that is done, witnesses are permitted by the law to be present at the canvass, but in a number of instances that right was denied, though it is expressly given by the law. In the city of Petersburg a Gold Democrat, a reputable citizen, applied to the chairman of the city electoral board for representation upon the board of election officers, and asked to have witnesses at the canvass of the votes. Both requests were peremptorily refused.

The chairman of the board assured him that he need not be alarmed, for they proposed to count all the votes cast for Palmer and Buckner, but, to use his own language, he said, "As for the Republicans, what we will do for them will be a plenty." [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRIS. Who testified to that?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. A reputable witness. I do not remember his name.

Mr. YOST. Alexander Hamilton, of Petersburg.

Mr. LACEY. Did they do a thing to them? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He said what they would do to the Republicans would be a plenty, and the result fully vindicates his prediction. All the election officers in that city were Bryan Democrats, and a majority of them were time-serving Democratic politicians.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Officeholders.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Officeholders, men who obtained their sustenance out of the public, whose subsistence depended upon Democratic supremacy. Talk about that being a fair election!

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. What was the plurality returned at this election for the sitting member?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Two thousand six hundred and twenty-one, and counting the 623 who tried but did not have an opportunity to vote, and rejecting the returns at the 19 precincts where Republicans were denied any representation at all on the election boards, without reference to other frauds reported by the committee, it will elect the contestant by over 400 plurality.

But there are six precincts where illiterate negroes were appointed to represent the Republican party; men without capacity to guard the interests of the public; men who were pliant tools of designing politicians, utterly incapable of detecting fraud if they were so disposed. In all honesty contestant was elected by a plurality of between 1,100 and 1,200 without reference to strong evidence of fraud at numerous precincts not mentioned in the report of the committee. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS] sought to invoke a technical application of the rules of evidence to retain contestee in his seat. It is a rare thing that fraud can be proven by direct evidence. It is not usually perpetrated in public, and can only be proven by circumstances. The duty of the House is well stated by Mr. McCrary in these words:

> It is undoubtedly the policy of the law not to throw too many obstacles in the way of investigating the correctness and bona fides of election returns. On this point the court in Reed vs. Kneass very justly observe:
> "The true policy to maintain and perpetuate the vote by ballot is found in jealously guarding its purity, in placing no fine-drawn metaphysical obstructions in the way of testing election returns charged as false and fraudulent, and in assuring to the people by a jealous, vigilant, and determined investigation of election frauds that there is a saving spirit in the public tribunals charged with such investigations, ready to do them justice if their suffrages have been tampered with by fraud or misapprehended through error."
> It is in the spirit of this rule that questions respecting evidence in contested-election cases should be solved.

Gentlemen insist that the registration books are the only competent evidence of the registration of voters. That doctrine is true as respects the election officers, but before a tribunal equipped to make a searching investigation for the truth it has no application. Every registrar in the district was a Democrat, and every registration book was at the command of contestee. Every witness testified he was a registered voter in the precinct where he tried to vote, and there is no evidence to the contrary. If they were not registered, contestee could easily have shown the fact by putting the books in evidence. I say to gentlemen on the other side of the House, let the State of Virginia correct her election laws. Let her establish those safeguards for the purity and fairness of elections that are recognized by experience to be necessary throughout the country and rigidly enforce them, and her peace of soul will not be disturbed by these unseemly controversies. The recent governor of that State, Governor O'Ferrall, in his last message to the legislature, characterizes this election law as a monstrous one, and earnestly urges its repeal. After four years of experience under it, he declares it to be a failure. He is a Democrat, remember, and I invite your attention to his language:

> But there is in the existing act provisions which make fraud easy and tend to cast suspicion upon the election as well as upon the purposes of the act, so that while the new law has its advantages over the old law, it has its evils, for it disfranchises many and opens wide the door for corruption and dishonesty. It has proved a failure, and should be amended, retaining what is good and discarding what is bad in it.
> No better evidence of the imperfection of the law as it stands is needed than the thousands of defective or improperly marked ballots that have been thrown out in every election since the law was enacted—in some instances as many as one-third or one-half of the ballots deposited. It shows that the mode is too intricate for the illiterate voters to prepare their own ballots correctly, or that the officials intrusted to mark the ballots of the illiterate voters are often either corrupt or too ignorant to discharge their duty. Imperfect ballots were very rarely cast prior to 1894.

That is the voice of a patriot, and it would be well for Virginia to give it consideration. There are doubtless Democratic Congressional districts in the State of Virginia that would return Democratic Congressmen without the infamous provisions of that law, but I should want some evidence of it besides the credentials issued by Democratic officers under the existing system of voting. A certificate of election under that system can have but little respect, and every honest man feels as if he would prefer to have it fumigated before he handles it.

The State of Virginia is scandalized by that outrageous law, and she will continue to be as long as it remains upon her statute books. No utterance of any member upon the floor of this House can add anything to the odium that it brings to the fame of the proud old State. It is a libel upon her citizenship and it is reprobated by a majority of the people of the State, I have no doubt. Virginians are honest people, but the politics of the State are controlled by an oligarchy of graceless timeservers and partisans, who are willing to subordinate principle to expedient and justice to plunder.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. May I ask my colleague another question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. In speaking of certain precincts you said there were nineteen at which the officers were all members of the Democratic party.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Was there any other evidence of fraud at those precincts besides that fact?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. At every one of those precincts there is ample evidence of fraud and irregularity to discredit the returns, even if the Republicans had been given representation upon the election boards. It consisted in the mismarking of ballots and in the rejection of a large number of the votes cast—in some instances more than half—and in refusing the right to keep a tally away from the polls, and in refusing witnesses to the count, and in other particulars which I have not time to enumerate.

I have in mind one particular precinct where ballots incorrectly marked for President were rejected altogether, though properly marked for other officers. At that precinct 83 ballots were rejected, and upon a recount later it was discovered that 79 of them were correctly marked for contestant and should have been counted for him under the law. There is not a precinct which the committee recommends to be rejected that is not fully discredited by the proof of fraud and irregularity. I have now discussed the case as fully as my time warrants, and desire to thank the House for its attention. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, is it desired that more time shall be consumed this evening?

The SPEAKER. It is only 4 o'clock.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman yield for a question before he takes his seat?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I understood there had been some agreement or arrangement made.

The SPEAKER. A gentleman who was to speak spoke to me. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. RHEA], as I understood him, asked the consent of the House to postpone, on account of sickness, what he had to say.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes; he said he was indisposed, and asked that he might be permitted to occupy the time in the morning instead of this afternoon. The gentleman from Kentucky now states that he is suffering very much from a headache and desires that he be not required to proceed until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the proposition to the House that further consideration be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I hope that request will not prevail. There are other speakers here, and we may not get through to-morrow unless the time is occupied.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. We have already occupied about four hours of the time.

Mr. HAY. How much time is there left on each side, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. One hour and thirty-seven minutes left on the side of the contestant and two hours and forty-five minutes on the side of the contestee.

Mr. HAY. There has been occupied, then, a little over four hours; so that we could get through easily to-morrow.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, it appears that there are a few minutes less than four hours for debate, and that would bring a vote on the question before the House adjourns to-morrow, at any rate. If we were to proceed now the House would hardly do more than conclude the discussion of the case and vote on it to-morrow. It appears to me that there would be no loss of time, no delay of the matter, if, in order to accommodate the gentleman from Kentucky, the matter were postponed until to-morrow, and the House go on with such routine business as may properly come before it.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. There are other gentlemen here who desire to speak.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. There are two more speeches to be made, and the time will be fully occupied by them.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. There are three speakers——

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. There are perhaps one hundred who would like to speak, but there are only two that are going to occupy the time.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] proposes to speak, and he is here. I do not see why we should lose this time. I have no personal interest in the matter, and do not wish to be unkind or discourteous, but I see no reason in the world why the debate should go over until to-morrow when others who are not sick are here ready to speak.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. There are two gentlemen, Mr. RHEA of Kentucky and the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. HAY. Mr. HAY was to conclude the argument, and Mr. RHEA is indisposed and asks permission that his argument go over until to-morrow.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. We in this part of the House would like to hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will be in order and resume their seats.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I made a statement, as I now recollect it, something like an hour ago, that I had consented and desired to address the House in behalf of the contestee, Mr. Epes; that it had been agreed upon that I should do so, and the order in which I was to make the address had been stated and understood upon this side of the Chamber; that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] was prepared to close the case for the contestee, assuming certain lines, being more familiar with the facts in the record than myself, but that I had been suffering all day with a headache and did not feel able to continue the discussion this afternoon; that I had no desire and no purpose to delay this case beyond to-morrow or beyond any time that the House chose to decide it.

I asked as a matter of courtesy to myself, and as a matter of kindness to myself under the circumstances, that the House adjourn until to-morrow at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], which at best could only delay the final consideration about sixty minutes; that then, if I was unable to proceed, I would in no way interfere with the proceedings so as to cause any further delay. I now make that request of the House.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not object if the gentleman from Kentucky were the only speaker, but there are other speakers here, and I can not understand why another speaker can not go on with the case. It interferes with the arrangement in no way except that one man speaks before the other; it leaves the gentleman from Kentucky to make the last speech. So far as the gentleman from Kentucky is concerned, I am guilty of no rudeness or unkindness to him. If he is unable to speak to-night, he can make his speech to-morrow; but I do claim that the gentleman who is not sick should proceed.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I understand the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER] objects.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes, I object. If there was no other gentleman here to speak but the gentleman from Kentucky, I would not object.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Then, Mr. Speaker, in view of that statement, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division (called for by Mr. WALKER of Virginia) there were—ayes 69, noes 49.

The SPEAKER. Before making the announcement, the Chair will lay before the House the report of the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

NEBRASKA UNDER REPUBLICAN AND POPULIST GOVERNMENT.

Mr. ALLEN. I present a letter from Hon. Charles Q. De France, of the executive office of Nebraska, to Hon. J. Gadsden, 624 Salmon street, Portland, Oreg., in response to a request for information regarding the administration of public affairs of the present executive State officers of Nebraska, as compared with the administration of Republican officers in the past. I ask that the letter be published in the RECORD and as a miscellaneous document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska to print the communication in the RECORD and to print it as a document?

Mr. FRYE. One moment. Does the Senator from Nebraska ask for both forms of printing?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I did ask for both.

Mr. FRYE. It seems to me the paper ought not to go into the RECORD if printed as a document.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the RECORD goes out quite extensively, and the letter is short. I thought it would do no particular damage to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FRYE. I shall not make any objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No objection is made, and the request of the Senator from Nebraska is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, Lincoln, Nebr., March 7, 1898.

MY DEAR JUDGE: By direction of his excellency Governor Silas A. Holcomb, I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favor under date of February 21, requesting information regarding the administration of public affairs by the present executive State officers of Nebraska as compared to the administration by Republican officials in the past.

At the outset I presume it will not be necessary for me to say that the present executive State officers were elected by a fusion or union of the Populist, Democratic, and Silver Republican parties, and whatever meed of praise is due for an honest, economical administration of State business in Nebraska should be given without partiality to any one of the three parties named. All have assisted to bring about needed reforms, and it is difficult to perceive any more difference, except in name, between any two of the three parties than usually exists between any two members of the same political faith. Of the executive State officers, the attorney-general is the only one who adheres to the name "Democrat," the remaining six being Populists; but among the various appointive officers are represented all three of the allied forces of reform.

To arrive at a correct understanding of the situation in Nebraska it will be necessary to state that since its admission to statehood in 1867 up to 1897 it has been under control of the Republican party. Twice during that period, however, a governor of a different political faith was elected; Governor James E. Boyd, Democrat, in 1890, and Governor Silas A. Holcomb, Populist, in 1894. Once or twice, too, an antimonopoly legislature was elected, and the legislatures of 1891 and 1895 were Populist bodies. But, on the whole, the Republican party has had practically complete control for thirty years. January 7, 1897, marked a new era in Nebraska history, and whether for better or worse the records are the best evidence.

For a number of years the Populist party in Nebraska went upon the stump and charged the Republican administration with extravagance, corruption, and mismanagement of the State's finances, but not one-half of the extravagance, corruption, or mismanagement was ever dreamed of by the most ardent Populist until the fusion forces gained complete control of all the executive offices. The legislature of 1897 appointed an investigating committee with full powers to secure expert accountants and make a thorough investigation of all State offices and institutions. A large part of this work has been finished, but until the committee makes its final report, nothing, except in an unofficial way, can be made public. This, of course, deals only with the corrupt side of Republican administration; but extravagance and mismanagement are already matters of public record and tells a story so plain that "he who runs may read."

When Governor Holcomb assumed the duties of his office on January 3, 1895, he was, by virtue of his office, authorized to appoint heads of six State institutions, while six other State institutions remained in charge of the officials appointed by the Republican board of public lands and buildings. Every legal obstacle was placed in the way of Governor Holcomb's appointees, but, after a hard-fought battle in the courts, they were finally successful and assumed control of the offices to which they were appointed. Notwithstanding the fact that the board of purchase and supplies, whose duty it is to let bids for furnishing supplies to State institutions, stood four Republicans to one Populist, Governor Holcomb's appointees immediately inaugurated needed reforms in the maintenance of the institutions under their charge.

So marked was the difference between the cost of maintaining the institutions under control of Governor Holcomb and his appointees, and the cost of maintaining those institutions under control of the Republican board of public lands and buildings and its appointees, that even the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err. Comparing the per capita cost for the years 1892, 1893, and 1894 of maintaining the six institutions in charge of Governor Holcomb's appointees during the years 1895 and 1896 with the cost for the latter period, it will be found that a saving of $99,524.75 was effected during the years 1895 and 1896 in these institutions. A similar comparison made for the institutions in charge of the Republican board and its appointees shows a net saving of $6,854.12 for the years 1895 and 1896.

Accompanying this letter is a comparative table showing the per capita expense in the different State institutions by semiannual periods from 1892 to 1897, inclusive. Even the most cursory study of this table will disclose an interesting story of Republican extravagance and mismanagement. The number of inmates in most of the institutions has increased since 1892, which naturally tends to reduce the per capita cost. Officers' salaries, unless reduced or increased by egislative enactment, remain the same whether 100 or 200 inmates are maintained in an institution, and the per capita cost varies inversely as the number of inmates increases or decreases.

But this is not true of board and clothing, fuel and lights, employees' wages, and other items of maintenance, which increase directly, though not fully in equal proportion, as the number of inmates increases. Taking into consideration this matter of increase in number of inmates to be cared for, and making due allowance therefor, it is not a difficult matter to show the saving made to the taxpayers of Nebraska by the present fusion administration.

The following table shows the total cost of maintaining the penal and charitable State institutions of Nebraska, by years, from 1892 to 1897, inclusive, together with the number of inmates each year and the per capita cost. In 1896 the fiscal year was changed to end November 30 instead of December 31, as had been the custom theretofore. The total cost for maintaining 2,548 inmates eleven months in 1896 was $365,217.97; but for purposes of comparison I have added one-eleventh to that sum in making up the cost in 1896.

Year.	Number of inmates.	Total cost.	Per capita cost.
1892	1,940	$434,945.05	$224.20
1893	2,133	457,525.48	205.12
1894	2,354	425,173.55	180.62
1895	2,519	428,164.16	169.97
1896	2,548	398,419.60	156.37
1897	2,443	375,957.60	153.57

Speculative losses or gains are, of course, usually looked upon with disfavor by thinking people generally; but there is no better way of judging the future than by the past; no better way of telling what might have happened to Nebraska in the year of our Lord 1897, if under Republican rule, than to compare what was done that year by Populists and Democrats with what was done by Republicans in years previous. A simple calculation in proportion will show that if it cost $434,945.05 to maintain 1,940 wards of the State one year under Republican misrule, the cost in 1897, under a similar system of mismanagement, for maintaining 2,443 such persons would be $548,837.88, or the sum of $172,880.28 more than it actually did cost. It is surely not going beyond the confines of reason to say that the actual saving in 1897 resulting from honest, economical administration in these penal and charitable institutions is fully $150,000, thus leaving $22,880.28 to be accounted for by reason of the increase in inmates.

Whatever may be the reader's deduction on this score, the bare fact remains that it cost $68,987.45 more to maintain 1,940 persons one year under a Republican administration than it did to maintain 2,443 persons during the year 1897 under the present State administration. And the table shows that each year under complete Republican control it cost more to maintain fewer persons than it did to maintain a larger number under Populist management in 1897. The years 1895 and 1896 are anomalous, neither party having entire control, but the economy of Populist administration is very apparent.

During the year 1896 State warrants were selling at a discount of 3 to 7 per cent, notwithstanding the fact that Nebraska's State bonded indebtedness was only $463,267.55. To-day brokers are quarreling with each other over them, trying to prevent any further rise in the price, which is 1½ to 1¾ per cent premium. In 1895 a Republican treasurer mismanaged the State's finances, and worse, he embezzled $555,700.66, and is now under sentence of twenty years' imprisonment in the State penitentiary. From January 7, 1897, up to date a Populist treasurer applies his "wild-eyed" notions of finance and matters in general to the conduct of his office, and, notwithstanding the enormous deficit made in the State's money by reason of the defalcations of Bartley, the Republican State treasurer, Mr. Meserve, the present treasurer, by his efficient management, has caused State warrants to rise from 93 to 101¾.

How this was done will not disclose any magical effects of the Dingley bill, of WOLCOTT's fruitless attempts to secure international bimetallism, or of Secretary Gage's proposed plan for reforming the currency. It was plain business, transacted by a plain man. During the year 1896 Mr. Bartley, the defaulting Republican treasurer, made but few calls for outstanding general-fund warrants, and allowed $569,370.39 to accumulate in the general fund by the 30th of November, 1896, as shown by his biennial report for 1895-96. Governor Holcomb, in his message to the legislature of 1897, took occasion to say that "the large amount accumulated in the general fund mentioned above is one of the features seemingly calling for some comment. It is difficult to understand why this large sum should be allowed to accumulate in the State treasury with so great amount—$1,934,069.13—of outstanding warrants unsatisfied. It would naturally be expected that such a considerable sum as this should have been applied to the reduction of the State's indebtedness as rapidly as it accumulated, as is provided by law and demanded in the exercise of prudent business management in the discharge of a public duty. * * * It is further to be observed that this fund at one time was within reasonable limits, not exceeding, according to the report of the State treasurer on the 1st of January last, the sum of $52,735.91. Under no process of reasoning can I understand why this further and larger sum should be deposited (in State depositories) and allowed to accumulate to the enormous amount mentioned, with obligations of the State pressing for payment and the value of its obligations constantly depreciating, and then, after such large accumulations are permitted, to have the matter explained by the suggestion that these funds could not, with safety to the business interests of the State, be withdrawn from the depositories." Mr. Bartley's report shows that during the period from November 30, 1894, to November 30, 1896, he disbursed only $1,230,141.74 general funds out of total receipts for that fund amounting to $1,819,512.13.

During Mr. Meserve's incumbency he has made thirty calls for general fund warrants, amounting to the grand total of $1,397,623.58, face value, upon which had accrued on the average about 9 per cent interest. From February 5, 1897, to April 26 there were ten calls. Then a suspension followed until June 24, because of the May school apportionment of over $300,000 coming on to be paid. Then from June 24 to November 27, 1897, were twelve more calls, with a similar suspension until January 12, 1898, to facilitate the payment of the December apportionment of the temporary school fund. Since then eight calls have been made. By such prompt action in calling outstanding warrants whenever twenty to forty thousand dollars have accumulated in the treasury, a careful estimate places the saving to the State in interest alone (at 5 per cent) at $35,000 per year.

To the treasurer's businesslike methods in the conduct of his office may be added, as an additional reason for the rapid rise in the price of State warrants, the action of the board of educational lands and funds in investing from time to time portions of the permanent school fund in general fund warrants at par. This board is composed of the governor, State treasurer, commissioner of public lands and buildings, attorney-general, and secretary of state, and, by the provisions of section 1, Article VIII, of the State constitution, is charged with the "general management of all lands and funds set apart for educational purposes and for the investment of school funds in such manner as may be prescribed by law."

Section 3 declares what shall be known as perpetual funds, "of which the annual interest or income only can be appropriated," and section 4 designates what shall constitute the temporary school fund. Section 9 provides that "all funds belonging to the State for educational purposes, the interest and income whereof only are to be used, shall be deemed trust funds held by the State, and the State shall supply all losses thereof that may in any manner accrue, so that the same shall remain forever inviolate and undiminished; and shall not be invested or loaned except on United States or State securities, or registered county bonds of this State."

At this point I would refer to pages 24-27 of the governor's message, a copy of which accompanies this letter, for a fair and impartial history of his efforts to have, during his first term of office, the uninvested permanent school fund invested in general fund warrants, and the utter disregard of the Republican members of the board for the best interests of Nebraska shown by their persistent refusal to invest in the only available avenue for a speedy and profitable investment of that fund.

Immediately after inauguration of the present State officers, at the first regular meeting of the board of educational lands and funds, a resolution was introduced and adopted instructing the state treasurer to invest a large amount of the uninvested permanent school fund in general fund warrants issued subsequent to February 1, 1897, paying par for them. Followed from month to month with similar resolutions, this at once caused warrants to rise from 93 and 95 to 97 and 98, and but a short time elapsed until par was paid by all the brokers, soon followed by a small premium.

At first blush it would seem that the only injustice caused by State warrants at a discount would be to the officers and employees of the State, who, being obliged to take warrants at par, would lose the discount; but a little reflection will show that such a condition is a great loss to the taxpayers as well. The State of Nebraska, during the year 1896, purchased goods and merchandise for maintenance of State institutions and State offices and made various repairs and improvements in and around State buildings in the sum of $335,759.40.

Such goods and merchandise were furnished under contract by the lowest bidder; but as each bidder knew the discount he must bear in taking warrants for his goods, unless he were able to hold such warrants for twenty-two to twenty-four months, it is reasonable to suppose that he would add a sufficient per cent to his lowest cash price to protect himself from loss by reason of the discount on warrants. This discount, on the average, was nearly 5 per cent, which leads to the reasonable conclusion that the State of Nebraska was compelled to pay 5 per cent above lowest cash prices during the year 1896. On the total purchases of that year, therefore, the loss occasioned by reason of discount on State warrants amounts to the sum of $16,787.97.

That the present State officers have done their duty, and done it well, may be further evidenced by an inspection of the following table, showing the different apportionments of the temporary school fund for the years 1890 to 1897, inclusive:

Date.	Amount.	Number of children of school age.	Per capita.
May, 1890	$281,255.20	316,805	$0.3877
December, 1890	305,004.97	332,243	.918
May, 1891	236,555.37	332,243	.7119
December, 1891	274,558.35	333,115	.824
May, 1892	319,283.67	333,115	.9584
December, 1892	358,126.43	343,629	1.042
May, 1893	352,184.07	343,629	1.024
December, 1893	309,506.78	352,175	.8788
May, 1894	304,189.97	352,175	.8637
December, 1894	215,069.02	362,729	.5929
May, 1895	256,906.42	362,729	.7085
December, 1895	216,336.33	352,028	.6145
May, 1896	260,410.12	352,101	.7395
December, 1896	231,958.30	348,538	.665
May, 1897	362,226.03	348,538	1.039
December, 1897	377,365.90	354,929	1.063

The average yearly apportionment for the period 1890-1896 is $560,205.28, while the apportionment of 1897, the largest in the history of Nebraska, is $739,591.93. This grand showing is the result of (a) judicious management by the board of educational lands and funds of the permanent school fund in their charge, keeping it invested so far as possible and drawing an income to the State; (b) judicious management by the commissioner of public lands and buildings of the school-land contracts and leases of the State, and (c) failure of the present State treasurer to follow in the footsteps of his predecessor and embezzle the major portion of the uninvested permanent school fund, thereby preventing it from being properly invested and drawing an income to become part of the temporary school fund.

While matters of a special nature are well enough to show wherein certain gains or losses are made, the general results speak for themselves. An inspection of the auditor's statement, herewith inclosed, shows a net reduction of the State debt for the fiscal year ending November 30, 1897, as follows:

Reduction in outstanding warrants	$343,376.83
Reduction in bonded indebtedness	207,000.00
Total	550,376.83

Surely a commendable showing when compared to, and in the face of, a defalcation of $555,790.06 in the State treasury, $23,276.40 in the auditor's office, together with minor mismanagement and extravagance, the two years immediately preceding under Republican rule.

I note your remark that "the Republican organs out here always refer to the Populist measures as 'pernicious Populistic legislation.'" This indictment is so general in its terms that I feel like pleading guilty on behalf of Populist legislators and Populists generally. Populist legislation is pernicious to public plunderers, but such legislation, when enforced in a spirit of fairness, has always proven beneficial to the people of Nebraska. The Australian ballot law and the maximum freight rate law are notable examples of Populist legislation in Nebraska, both of which, of course, received votes from members of other parties.

The latter law, passed by the legislature of 1893, has been hung up in the Federal courts ever since the time it should have taken effect. On this very day the dispatches from Washington are to the effect that the United States Supreme Court has handed down an opinion affirming the opinion of the circuit court of appeals, declaring the maximum freight rate law invalid, basing such decision on the showing made by the railroads to the effect that the low rates prescribed would result in actual confiscation of railroad property.

This showing by the railroad companies was supplemented by an ostensible counter-showing of the State board of transportation, at that time a Republican body, which counter-showing out-Heroded Herod and showed that the railroads would be mulcted by the maximum freight rate law even worse than the railroads themselves had the hardihood to declare by affidavit. Just what the final outcome will be in respect to this law is, of course, at this time problematical, but there is no doubt that the local shippers of Nebraska have paid upward of $4,500,000 more in freight rates than they would have paid had the law been enforced.

An examination of the session laws of 1897, a copy of which accompanies this letter, will show no legislation of a vicious character, in fact, nothing which could even be called "radical" legislation. The wisdom of many of the acts has long since been proven by actual experience, and I will touch briefly on a few of the measures which have given the taxpayers of Nebraska considerable relief.

When Mr. Porter, the present secretary of state, assumed charge of his office, he observed that many of the fees for services to be rendered by him in behalf of the State for corporations and individuals were entirely inadequate; in fact, in the case of filing articles of incorporation being merely nominal. The legislature being at the time in session, Mr. Porter was instrumental in having house roll 479 and senate file 287 (being chapters 18 and 72, respectively, of the session laws of 1897) enacted into law.

The following table shows the amount of fees collected in the office of secretary of state from 1887 to the present:

1888	1,600.99
1889	1,747.84
1890	1,635.32
1891	1,399.25
1892	1,410.00
1893	1,266.15
1894	1,169.67
1895	870.90
1896	806.22
	13,997.06
January 8, 1897, to January 31, 1898	18,633.45

As the total appropriation made by the legislature of 1897 for the maintenance of the office of secretary of state is $18,300, it will be seen that this office is more than self-sustaining.

The board of printing, of which the secretary of state, auditor of public accounts, and state treasurer are members, was created by the legislature of 1897, by the enactment of house roll 571, chapter 48, of the session laws, and a comparison of the work done by this board with the fast-and-loose methods which obtained under the Republican régime tells a startling story of public plundering:

Book.	Year.	No. of volumes.	No. of pages.	Cost per page.	Total cost.	Cost per book.
Session laws	1897	5,000	532	$2.95	$1,569.40	$0.31

RECAPITULATION.

Year.	Total cost.	Excess over 1897.
1897	$4,203.01
1895	12,247.90	$8,044.89
1889	18,510.00	14,306.99
Showing an excess of		22,351.88

Comment, it seems to me, is wholly unnecessary. When it costs $38.30 more to print 1,000 copies of the school laws of 1889 than it did to print 10,000 copies of the school laws of 1897, cheapness of printing brought about by use of typesetting machines will hardly make a satisfactory explanation.

The Republican legislature of 1895 appropriated $20,000 for printing laws, house and senate journals, and other State printing. Not only was this sum all used, but also a deficiency was created to the tune of $19,107.98, which the fusion legislature of 1897 was compelled to meet. For similar purposes during the biennium 1897-98 only $12,500 was appropriated; and of this sum, only $8,144.58 was expended up to February 28, 1898. The printing board assures me that although the total appropriation was hardly adequate, yet it is doubtful whether any deficiency will be created.

Section 36 of chapter 75 of the session laws of 1897, which chapter amends and repeals chapter 86 of the compiled statutes of Nebraska (1895), changes the manner of computing the fees and expenses of sheriffs and other officers incurred in conveying convicts to the penitentiary from a per diem of $3 and "10 cents per mile for traveling expenses in going and coming" to a per diem of $3 and "the actual and necessary traveling expenses in going and coming." Under the old law there was expended during the period from April 1, 1895, to April 1, 1897, the sum of $37,069.20 in such fees and expenses, while under the new law there was expended during the eleven months ending March 1, 1898, the sum of $7,490.41. At this rate the expenditures for two years ending April 1, 1899, will amount to about $16,342.72, resulting in a net saving to the taxpayers of the State of about $20,726.48 in two years.

Section 20 of chapter 28 of the compiled statutes of Nebraska provides that "each county treasurer shall receive for his services the following fees: On all moneys collected by him for each fiscal year, under $3,000, 10 per cent. For all sums over $3,000 and under $5,000, 4 per cent. On all sums over $5,000, 2 per cent. On all sums collected percentage shall be allowed but once; and in computing the amount collected, for the purpose of charging percentage, all sums, from whatever fund derived, shall be included together except the school fund." Notwithstanding the plain intent of this law, Republican State treasurers and auditors have allowed the various county treasurers each year to collect double fees on a portion of the collections made by such county treasurers.

The custom was to calculate fees for collecting the State taxes without reference to the amount of county taxes the treasurer had collected, plainly in violation of the provision, "and in computing the amount collected, for the purpose of charging percentage, all sums, from whatever fund derived, shall be included together except the school fund." But the present State officers were elected on a platform pledging reform in every department of the State, and the auditor refused to adjust fee claims of county treasurers for collecting State taxes on the basis of computation as interpreted by his Republican predecessors, and asked the attorney-general for advice in the matter.

On July 30, 1897, Attorney-General Smyth advised the auditor by letter that the Republican method of computing percentages should not be followed; that the law is clear and explicit in its terms, and that it was undoubtedly the intention of the legislators that the 10 per cent on sums collected under $3,000 did not mean 10 per cent on $3,000 of State taxes and 10 per cent on $3,000 of county taxes, but simply 10 per cent on $3,000, "from whatever fund derived." It will be seen that this opinion cuts off $280 from the fees of each county treasurer who collects $10,000 and over each year, exclusive of school moneys. There are ninety counties in Nebraska, and most of them furnish revenue over the amount named; hence a saving of fully $23,000 will result each year to the taxpayers of the State by reason of a proper enforcement of the law in question.

Many other of the laws enacted by the legislature of 1897 are worthy of a closer examination than the scope of this letter will permit, but I shall take the time to make a comparison of the total appropriations made by that body with those made by the Republican legislature of 1895, after deducting those items of an extraordinary nature which can not properly be counted as current expense, which shows a net saving of $371,378.13 in favor of the party of "pernicious Populistic legislation:"

Total appropriation, 1895		$2,784,684.60
Less relief for drought sufferers	$50,000.00
Less for procuring seed, etc., for needy farmers	200,000.00
Less to pay deficiency claims of 1893-94	27,588.12
Less to erect new buildings	73,000.00
		350,588.12
Net appropriation to pay expenses for two years		2,434,096.48
Total appropriation, 1897		2,335,843.40
Less appropriation in aid of Trans-Mississippi Exposition	$100,000.00
Less to pay deficiency claims of 1895-96	93,125.05
Less to erect new buildings	80,000.00
		273,125.05
Net appropriation to pay expenses for two years		2,062,718.35
Net saving, 1897 over 1895		371,378.13

I trust that the foregoing may prove of some benefit to you in your discussions in the campaign about to be inaugurated in Oregon. I have endeavored to be conservative in all matters of estimate and strictly correct in all matters of public record. There are many matters of minor, though not small, importance, all of which tend to show the wisdom of the people of Nebraska in breaking loose from the bondage of Republican control and in electing men of known integrity and honor to administer State affairs. But surely the items cited are convincing enough.

The defalcations by Republicans in the State treasury and auditor's office are matters of public notoriety extending far beyond the confines of Nebraska, and I have contented myself with a mere reference to them, feeling that the records of mismanagement and incompetency made by the Republican officials generally are more damning to that party than continual harping upon the universally admitted rascality of one or two officers of that political faith. Whatever may be said of the past history of the Republican party as a national party, it has no proud record in its management of State affairs in Nebraska. There is scarcely a State institution that has not its Republican skeleton none too securely closeted; scarcely a State building whose erection has not served as a shield for public plunderers.

I said in the beginning that January 7, 1897, marked the commencement of a new era in the history of Nebraska, whether for better or worse the records would show. Though only a short record in point of time, yet the people last fall expressed their appreciation of it by electing Hon. John J. Sullivan to the supreme bench, giving him a plurality of nearly 14,000. And every indication points to a further ratification by the people this coming fall of the acts of the present State administration, a ratification more overwhelming than ever before to the Republican party of Nebraska.

With kind regards, yours, very truly,

CHARLES Q. DE FRANCE, Clerk.

Hon. J. GASTON,

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4154) to amend an act approved August 30, 1890, entitled "An act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862," to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FRYE. Let the bill be read for the information of the Senate first.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the bill had better go over until to-morrow. There seems to be a general appropriation made. I should like to have some information as to the probable amount of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GEAR, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, submitted the views of the minority to accompany the bill (S. 120) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to effect an adjustment between the United States and the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company in relation to certain bonds issued by the United States in aid of the construction of said railway; which were ordered to be printed.

SUFFERERS BY DESTRUCTION OF BATTLE SHIP MAINE.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3618) for the relief of sufferers by the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine in the harbor of Habana, Cuba, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL POLICY IN PRESENT EMERGENCY.

Mr. BACON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 128) declaring the peaceful policy of the United States; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the joint resolution may be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Government and people of the United States, while avowing that at all times and to the uttermost limit they will maintain their national honor and protect their material interests, and while they will count no cost of blood or treasure which may be necessary for the accomplishment of this high resolve, nevertheless declare that it is their desire to live at peace with all the nations and peoples of the earth.

SEC. 2. That, supremely confident in the loyalty and patriotic devotion of the people of every class and of every section of the country, strong in more than 70,000,000 of people, resolute, brave, and ready for any personal sacrifice the honor and safety of their Government may require of them, and rich in the possession of material resources, practically without limit, the United States, nevertheless, desire and intend in the present threatening emergency, earnestly and patiently to use every practicable and honorable means to preserve peace so far as the same may be consistent with the honor of the nation and with their duty to themselves and to others.

SEC. 3. That, while unswerving in their purpose to fully protect the honor and the property of the nation, as well as the persons of its citizens, and while determined upon the performance of their duty to humanity and to a neighboring people struggling for liberty, the United States, desiring peace and deprecating war, will in good faith endeavor to accomplish these ends, consistently with national honor, through peaceful agencies and without unnecessary resort to war and bloodshed.

Mr. BACON. The resolutions are probably too important for me to ask that they be acted upon without an opportunity being given to Senators to inspect them. I would otherwise ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. I however ask that it may be printed and lie on the table until to-morrow morning, when I shall call it up.

Mr. TELLER. The joint resolution will be printed, I suppose?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table. It will be printed, under the rule.

Mr. STEWART. There is no general understanding that the joint resolution will be taken up to-morrow.

AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business appears to be closed.

Mr. CARTER. If, pursuant to the notice given on yesterday, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] desires to proceed with his remarks at this time, I shall refrain from presenting the request I intended to make for the consideration of the Alaska bill at the present moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Montana, that I greatly appreciate his courtesy in being willing to delay the business that he has in hand for the purpose of giving me an opportunity to briefly address the Senate on some observations that I recently made during a hurried trip to the Island of Cuba. I shall endeavor to be as brief as the importance of the case will warrant.

Mr. President, after the calm, dispassionate, and touching statement made in the Senate concerning Cuba by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] it might be well for me to remain silent; indeed, Mr. President, that was my purpose when I returned from the island, but yielding to the expressed wihs of many of my Senatorial colleagues, I have consented to give a plain recital of what I saw during my recent brief visit to that unhappy country, in the hope that it may add something to the already deep interest felt by the masses of the American people in the struggle now going on 80 miles from the American shore.

Neither the criticisms, many of them utterly unkind and unjust, which have already been made regarding that trip, nor the fear of the denunciations of the apologists and defenders of Spain will deter me from plain speech or the expression of views quite as honestly held as those of the men and newspapers who indulge in the senseless cry of "jingo" whenever a word is uttered in favor of freedom and independence for a people who for three centuries have been oppressed beyond endurance. In 1829, in 1844, in 1848, in 1850, in 1851, in 1868, and again in 1895 have the brave people of Cuba endeavored to break the chain that bound them and to establish for themselves free government on the soil that rightfully is theirs. The failure of the ten-years war, ending in 1878, is fresh in the minds of us all, and the violation of the promises made by Spain to the insurgents as a condition of peace is a matter of history which need not be recounted.

For many years I had felt a desire to visit Cuba, and when the opportunity offered for me to go in the company of some of my Congressional associates I was glad to do so, as it would enable me to see with my own eyes the devastation and wretchedness that I believed existed in that fertile but smitten land.

After a somewhat tempestuous and eventful voyage, Havana was reached on the morning of the 10th instant. Looking out through the mists of early morning, Morro Castle, with its gloomy memories, and the fortress of Cabanas, within whose walls hundreds of brave and innocent men have been shot to death, stood out in bold relief. The beautiful harbor was entered, in which were many vessels flying the Spanish flag, while the Montgomery alone had at its masthead the Stars and Stripes—glorious emblem of freedom and liberty. No, not alone, for as our vessel passed the wreck of the great battleship that so recently was destroyed an American flag floated from her also.

A CALL UPON GENERAL LEE.

Very soon after our arrival General Lee called upon us at the hotel, and graciously offered to accompany the party to the palace to meet General Blanco. General Lee is deserving of the highest possible praise for the manner in which he carries himself in Havana. Cool and fearless in the midst of difficulties and dangers, he never loses sight of the fact that he is an American citizen and the representative of this great Government, nor is he ever unmindful of the tremendous responsibilities and duties of his position.

A VISIT TO THE PALACE.

The visit to the palace was one of much interest. At a former period General Blanco was Captain-General of the island, and he is held in high esteem by the Spanish Government. When he assumed office this time it was as the successor of General Weyler, who, because of his cruelties, was driven from Cuba by the force of American public opinion. General Blanco was gracious in the extreme, and Dr. Congosto (who speaks most excellent English) showed the party many courtesies. Of course no allusion was made to political affairs.

THE AUTONOMIST CABINET.

Our next call was upon the autonomist cabinet, but we only saw the president of the cabinet. With him we discussed somewhat the question of autonomy; but it was plain to be seen that he was not greatly encouraged in the work that had been undertaken in that direction. The truth is, autonomy is a flat failure, opposed alike by the ultra Spaniards and the Cubans. The leaders of the insurrection have not forgotten how they were cheated by Spain in 1878, and the blandishments and bribes now being offered them are spurned with contempt. "Better death than autonomy," said a leading Cuban to me, "for," he added, "autonomy is only a pretense, under which we would again be slaves to Spain."

IS THERE WAR IN CUBA?

I recall the fact that in the debates had in the Senate on the Cuban question there have always been those who have denied that a real state of war exists in the island. It does not take long for one on the spot to determine that war does actually exist. A desolated country and a stricken people tell the story of war in language more eloquent than I can use. It is a peculiar kind of war, not the kind that this country became acquainted with at Shiloh and Vicksburg, at Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, and which General Sherman summed up in those three laconic words, "War is hell." It is not the kind of war that Grant and Lee, Sherman and Jackson, Sheridan, Longstreet, and Logan participated in from 1861 to 1865. In Cuba it is a war of starvation and extermination—a war more cruel than any the world has ever known.

THE SPANISH SOLDIERY.

The Spanish military do not impress an American with the idea that they are great soldiers. I witnessed three military drills, and in each case the story of the "Awkward Squad" came vividly to my mind. Talking and smoking in the ranks were noticeable, and neither officers nor soldiers seemed to possess the true military spirit. It is said that the rank and file of the Spanish army have not been paid for six months, and they certainly are poorly clothed and inadequately fed. The high officers appear to do most of their fighting in cafés and hotels, the actual fighting in the field being done under the command of officers of inferior grade.

THE INSURGENTS.

As to the insurgents, it is said that they are well fed and comfortably clad, their chief lack being guns and ammunition. They are good soldiers, under strict military discipline. They occupy a large part of the island, and, in my judgment, can take Havana or Matanzas whenever it suits their purpose, but for want of ships they could not hold those cities if taken. In Matanzas I was offered safe passport to the insurgent lines, but it was declined for want of time.

TERRIBLE SCENES.

The scenes in the streets of Havana are harrowing beyond description. People in want and suffering are everywhere seen and walking skeletons meet one on every hand. Naked children, emaciated and ragged women, and diseased and starving men throng the streets, the hotel lobbies, and every place of public resort. It is a terrible sight, one that sickens the heart, and quickens every impulse of human sympathy and love.

I have said in the public prints, and I repeat, that the Kingdom of Spain is carrying on a war in Cuba more utterly cruel and indefensible than any that the world chronicles, unless perchance a parallel may be found in the oppressions that the Armenians have suffered at the hands of the Unspeakable Turk. My observations were first made not in the rural districts, where the most horrible conditions are conceded to exist, but right in Havana, under the shadow of cathedrals and churches, where Spain's authority is absolutely unquestioned. The world has heard with horror the story of the starvation of hundreds of thousands of innocent people on this island, but while the statement has been generally accepted as true, there are those who have refused to believe that a great Government was waging a war of extermination instead of a war of honor, conducted upon the high principles of humanity and bravery, yet such is the fact.

CLARA BARTON AND HER GOOD WORK.

In my investigations I visited the orphanage under the care of that sainted woman, Clara Barton, who is being ably assisted by Dr. A. M. Lesser, surgeon in chief of the Red Cross Hospital of New York City, and his accomplished wife. It was also my great privilege to meet there Mr. Louis Klopsch, proprietor of the Christian Herald, under whose efforts the money has been raised to carry on Miss Barton's Heaven-inspired work, and who receives help and encouragement from his wife, who is there in person to do what she can to alleviate the terrible suffering that exists.

In connection with the orphanage a dispensary is maintained, Dr. Lesser being ably seconded in that work by a corps of Cuban physicians, and every day hundreds of poor creatures are assisted in that way. At present the orphanage contains about fifty children, almost every one of whom is the victim of starvation, suffering from diseases directly traceable to want of food and imperfect nourishment. Dr. Lesser has had experience in the famine in Armenia, and I believe in India, and is recognized as the highest possible authority on diseases of that kind. I have it from his lips, and also from Miss Barton's, that the famine in Cuba is worse than was that in Armenia or any other of which they have knowledge, and the pictures that they drew of the terrible suffering from starvation in the island fully confirm what has been written on the subject by those whose statements have been challenged in some quarters.

HUMAN SUFFERING IN ITS WORST FORM.

For most of my life, as a physician, I have witnessed human suffering, but pictures of wretchedness and anguish were photographed upon my brain in Cuba that will never be effaced. After the visit to the orphanage was over I went with the medical gentlemen and others to Los Focas, the place where the reconcentrados assemble daily to get food and shelter. There is a large side yard, which was filled with men, women, and children, a motley, dilapidated, hungry-looking crowd. But sad as was the crowd outside, it was nothing as compared with that inside the building. The structure is 108 by 40 feet, two stories high, and when a few weeks ago Miss Barton discovered the place there were 645 people lying on the floor, many of them entirely nude, and all suffering the pangs of starvation.

The children in the orphanage were taken from that wretched abode, and much has been done by the Red Cross to alleviate the condition of those who remain. Cot beds have been furnished, clothing supplied, plain food distributed, medical attendance arranged for, and every effort is being made in their behalf. Still there are men, women, and children there as gaunt and bony, almost, as a skeleton, while the sores that come from insufficient nourishment, and the other deplorable effects of starvation, are seen on every hand. I looked upon the scene until heartsickened, and then I thought of the hundreds of thousands of poor creatures who have perished in this island for want of food since the order was issued by Weyler to drive them from their homes and concentrate them in the cities.

What a chapter of horrors and death is that! And still the tragedy goes on. How much longer it shall continue largely depends upon the forbearance of a great people who through suffering and sorrow achieved their own independence, and whose sympathies have always gone out to the oppressed of all the nations of the world.

In brief, that tells the story of what was seen in Havana, except that the picture is mild, and in the very nature of things fails to reveal the horrible, inexpressible sufferings of those poor, persecuted people.

Many sights were witnessed which could not properly be related in this presence. Certain American newspapers have been persistently charged with coloring the facts and giving false information to our people. I do not see how it is possible for human language to exaggerate the suffering that exists in Cuba, and certainly the newspapers that are spending enormous sums of money to keep the American public informed as to the situation deserve praise rather than censure, for otherwise no information whatever favorable to the Cuban cause would come to us. Spanish censorship could be relied upon to give only one side of the controversy. The New York Journal keeps a large steam tug and a yacht employed in making daily trips from Havana to Key West bearing dispatches, and I am informed that that enterprising newspaper is spending $1,000 a day in that service and in gathering news on the island.

A VISIT TO MATANZAS.

Desiring to see something of Cuba outside of Havana, a visit to Matanzas was decided upon.

Matanzas is reached from Havana by both water and rail. I chose the latter, notwithstanding the suggestion that the insurgents were not far from the railroad, which was emphasized by the fact that an armored car, occupied by Spanish soldiers, was attached to the train. The distance is about 60 miles, which is covered in three hours by a railroad the trains on which are started by the ringing of a bell in the hands of a sturdy negro, and the track and rolling stock of which suggest antiquity rather than the ideas of our modern civilization.

The road runs through a beautiful valley, with mountain ranges on either side, which were pointed out as the abode of the insurgents. Over the entire distance is seen the effects of war, scarcely any cultivated land being visible, and the charred remains of villages and sugar plantations telling the story of devastation and destruction.

At one point 6 soldiers and about the same number of civilians occupied the site of a village of 2,000 inhabitants at the beginning of the war, only one or two buildings remaining to tell the story of the struggle that has been waged for three years.

Burning cane fires not far from the railroad indicated that the insurgents, and possibly the Spanish soldiers, were busy. Indeed, only a few evenings ago an insurgent force captured a large herd of horses and cattle in the outskirts of Matanzas, while the Dauntless discharged her last cargo of insurgent material literally in the harbor of that city.

I was fortunate to have as traveling companions Congressmen AMOS J. CUMMINGS, of New York, and WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, of Michigan; also Clara Barton; J. K. Elwell, of Lawrence, Kans.; Dr. and Mrs. Lesser, of New York; Dr. Hubbell and Mrs. Ward, of Washington; Mr. Louis Klopsch, proprietor of the Christian Herald, and other philanthropic persons. Senators THURSTON and MONEY went to Matanzas by water.

All along the route were wretched people in rags, but not until Matanzas was reached was the full extent of the existing suffering realized.

The railroad station was crowded with poor creatures, many of them nearing their graves as a consequence of starvation and resulting disease. Men, women, and children jostled and crowded one another begging for help. Some of the children were entirely without clothing, while most of them were covered only in part, and that with ragged and dirty garments. The same condition of things was seen on the streets, and the hotel lobby exhibited other scenes of similar destitution.

DANTE'S INFERNO.

It occurred to me as I looked upon these scenes of suffering and horror that the Cuban reconcentrados might well have adopted the words of Dante, "Who enters here leaves hope behind," when they were driven from the fields and herded like cattle in the cities and towns of this fertile land.

The truth is that Weyler devised a scheme of human suffering and sorrow that put Dante's Inferno into the shade and converted a contented, prosperous people into a herd of suffering, starving unfortunates.

True, it is said that under the present régime they are permitted to resume work on the land, but careful inquiry failed to discover that this is really so, and even were it so, how could starving, penniless men and women, with sick and emaciated children, find their way to their former homes and take up the duties of life, with their houses destroyed, their farm implements gone, their live stock driven away, and every means of supporting life taken from them by the cruel edict of a merciless tyrant?

In Matanzas I met an American citizen at the office of the United States consul who one year ago was worth $150,000, but who to-day is utterly penniless. He was driven from his home into the city, his buildings destroyed, and the accumulations of a lifetime disappeared. Recently he was told that he could return to his land, which he did, engaging in the manufacture of charcoal; but scarcely had he commenced work when his property was again seized and he was returned to the city, inside of the line called the "zone of cultivation."

A day in Matanzas is one never to be forgotten. The city nestles by the bay, just as it did before it was smitten by famine and when commerce and trade made it one of the most important ports of Cuba. To-day the bay is deserted, except by ships bringing relief to the starving people.

A PLACE OF BEGGARY AND DEATH.

Matanzas is literally a place of beggary and death. Never before did my eyes behold such suffering, and never again do I expect to see such havoc wrought through a cruel and inhuman decree.

After a call on Consul Brice, whose good work in Matanzas is known and recognized everywhere, the company were driven to the palace of the governor of the province, where they were received most graciously. The present governor is Cespedes de Arnos, a well-known journalist, and a man who seems to fully appreciate the appalling condition of the people.

He was especially kind and courteous to Miss Barton, placing at her disposal one of the finest apartments in the palace; and the other members of the family were equally devoted to this good woman.

The governor talked freely of the situation, tendered the party a reception that was declined, and when he proposed a toast to "Hail Columbia" it was evident that his eyes are turned in the only direction whence help can come to this stricken people.

Governor Arnos succeeded Senor Paret, who served under Weyler, and who is remembered as a cruel, brutal man. The present incumbent of the office, while serving the Spanish Government, is unquestionably very solicitous for a betterment of the condition of the people.

Returning from places of public resort, the party visited three hospitals, named, respectively, Providencia, Caridad, and San Carlos, and here were fresh evidences of the ravages that starvation is working.

Some members of the Red Cross had visited the hospitals two weeks ago, but they were terrified to discover that almost every one of the then inmates had died, and to some extent others had taken their places. Here poverty, sorrow, and suffering were depicted in their worst forms. Children, gaunt in face but with abdomen and limbs terribly swollen, women in the last stage of emaciation, and men rapidly drifting to death were on every hand.

HOSPITALS WITHOUT FOOD OR MEDICINE.

If there was food in these hospitals I did not discover it. Neither were there signs of medicine or of proper nursing or care. As these unfortunates lay there, suffering the pangs of hunger, an abundance of food was at the railroad station, sent there by Miss Barton more than a week ago, but which through some mistake had not been distributed, and the Fern and one other American vessel were lying in the bay loaded down with contributions from the Government and people of the United States.

CLARA BARTON.

I wish I could command language eloquent enough to pay a just tribute to Clara Barton, the guardian angel of oppressed, suffering humanity. More than 70 years of age, when the cry came from far-off Armenia she was soon in that stricken land, carrying the ministrations of the gospel and distributing benefactions under the ægis of the Society of the Red Cross. More than three-score and ten years of age, she has again responded to the Macedonian cry, and is in Cuba relieving suffering and sorrow—a very angel of mercy and of human love and sympathy. God bless Clara Barton!

DEATH THE ONLY RELIEF.

For a large proportion of the remaining reconcentrados death is the only relief. Food and medicine may palliate for a time the suffering they endure, but starvation has done its work, and the grave will claim many of them in the near future.

From the hospitals I went to the huts on the outskirts of the city, occupied by the families of reconcentrados, and here again is material for the artist and the novelist. In huts of one room, thatched with palm leaves, are families of eight or ten eking out a miserable existence. They were driven out of their homes when the plan was adopted to exterminate the Cuban race by starvation.

In their suffering and wretchedness they appear cheerful, occupying a portion of the time in making palm-leaf hats, for which there is a very limited demand at 6 cents each. Of course the children beg to help supply the absolute necessaries of life.

TERRIBLE DEATH RATE.

In this sketch I have not attempted to picture the extreme horrors of the situation, but rather to give a plain and unvarnished statement of what is seen at every turn. The death rate here, as elsewhere on the island, has been enormous. The governor of Matanzas told me that the first day he occupied the palace 15 persons died in the courtyard. He further said that in that city 1,200 died in November, 1,200 in December, 700 in January, and 500 in February.

The death rate is decreasing simply because the material—the reconcentrados—is becoming less. Estimating the population of the city at 75,000, and taking a death rate of 20 in 1,000, that would give 1,500 deaths in a year.

But here we have 3,600 deaths in four months, more than seven times that of a normal death rate, and the sad thing of it all is that the excess above the average rate shows the number of deaths from starvation, and from nothing else.

On the cars I was told that in San Cristobal one coach, used as a hearse, had carried to the cemetery 800 dead in twenty-six days, while many uncoffined dead were disposed of in other ways; and in another place of 3,000 inhabitants, Santa Cruz del Norte, not far from Matanzas, every dog and cat has been eaten, and utter desolation confronts the place unless relief comes soon.

The mayor of this town was in Havana, and he is responsible for the statement I have made. He begged Miss Barton to go to the relief of the place, which she promised to do, but God alone knows how much good it will do under the circumstances.

A WORSE FAMINE THAN THAT OF ARMENIA.

Miss Barton says that this is a worse famine than that of Armenia or India. In India famine came because of crop failures, and in Armenia as the result of religious fanaticism, but here in Cuba is a famine of cold calculation, with fertile land on every side, ready to produce abundant food in response to the demand of human labor.

That labor has been withheld, in accordance with the programme laid down by a heartless military ruler, and now the lands are uncultivated and the people starving.

NEARLY HALF A MILLION DEAD FROM STARVATION.

The number of people who have been starved in Cuba will never be definitely known. It is estimated that 800,000 were driven from their homes into the cities and towns. I had it from Spanish authority that according to their figures 225,000 have already perished; but it is said that the Red Cross Society is in possession of figures showing that 425,000 Cubans have died as a result of Spanish cruelty from starvation, and that 200,000 more must inevitably die, making an aggregate of 625,000, or almost twice the population of the District of Columbia or the State of New Hampshire. Dr. Lesser, an authority on the results of famine, who is on the ground, says that of the 175,000 not taken into the account above at least 5 per cent of them will die, making a grand total of 634,000 deaths of men, women, and children as the result of Weyler's inhuman and barbarous decree.

What a picture is that 80 miles from our shores! And yet this great nation folds its arms and officially asks, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Thank Heaven, the Government of France did not reason that way when Lafayette stood side by side with Washington and Stark and Mad Anthony Wayne when our forefathers were fighting for human freedom and independence!

It may be that the Government of Spain and the cities of Havana and Matanzas are doing something to relieve this terrible suffering, but if so, I did not see any evidences of it. The hope of the poor remaining sufferers is in this great Government, and, Heaven be thanked, our people are reaching out the hand of sympathy and affectionate interest in the shape of food, medicine, and clothing!

WHAT OF THE MAINE?

I have been asked many times, "What of the Maine?"

I do not know.

This, however, I do know: A nation that will deliberately starve 400,000 of its own people will do pretty much anything. [Applause in the galleries.]

If the ship was blown up from the outside, what should our Government do?

Perhaps I should forbear to discuss that question now, but this I will venture to say: Human life, purposely taken, can not be paid for in gold or silver. [Applause in the galleries.] Mark my words, "purposely taken." And if it shall appear that such was the fate of 250 brave American sailors, then Heaven pity the guilty parties. It will not be a question for arbitration, but a question involving the dignity and honor of this great Republic.

A JINGO.

Of course for these words I will be called a jingo, whatever that may mean, but, as I have said on former occasions I now repeat, I would infinitely rather be a jingo than a Tory; I would infinitely rather stand here as the defender of human rights than as the apologist of cruelty and oppression. A vigorous foreign policy is necessary to the strength and dignity of any nation, and it is the best possible assurance of peace that can be given.

CUBAN SYMPATHIZERS EVERYWHERE.

There is little real loyalty to Spain in Cuba, as will be demonstrated when the hour of trial comes. Cuban sympathizers are found everywhere. On the cars between Havana and Matanzas a prominent business man of the latter city openly expressed his deep sympathy for Cuba, and drawing from his pocket a little package asked me if I would not like a picture of Gomez, the grand and intrepid leader of the Cuban army. The picture is here—a treasure with which I would not lightly part.

I do not believe that Spain can subdue the insurgents.

Already the war has cost Spain the lives of at least 100,000 soldiers and a vast amount of treasure, and the approaching rainy season will decimate the Spanish ranks at a fearful rate.

The Cubans have been oppressed so long that they prefer death to continued Spanish rule; and why should they not?

EFFECTS OF SPANISH RULE.

Mr. President, has this Senate any idea what Spanish rule in Cuba really means?

Let us look at the matter of taxation.

I was told by reliable persons in Havana that, in addition to all direct and indirect taxes on real estate, there is a tax on every door, every window, and every chimney in every house.

There is a tax on every letter in every business sign.

There is a tax on every name on every hotel register. It is an edifying sight, Mr. President, to open the register of any hotel in Havana and, glancing down the page, to find a tax stamp opposite each signature.

Licenses are required to build houses and to paint houses.

There is a tax on food animals as a whole, and also special taxes on the horns, the hoofs, and the hide.

In addition to all this the interest on the debt is a tremendous burden, the salaries of Spanish officials are beyond all reason, and the amount of money wrung from the Cubans to keep the Madrid Government from complete insolvency is simply enormous.

What would we think of such a Government as that?

No people on the face of the earth have been so oppressed, the treasury of Spain being literally supplied from the revenues extorted from Cuba and the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, as far as I know no one in this country desires war with Spain, but the people of this country have come to the conclusion that the time has come for Spain to retire from the Western Hemisphere. [Applause in the galleries.] She has by misgovernment and cruelty forfeited every claim upon the Gem of the Antilles, and in the interests of a common humanity this country should intervene and stop the war.

SPAIN'S POSSESSIONS.

It will be remembered that one hundred years ago Spain owned a large part of what is now the United States, all of Mexico, most of Central and South America, and many of the West India Islands.

Within a hundred years, as the result of misgovernment and misrule, she has lost all of her territory on the Western Hemisphere except the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico, and if anyone can tell me why she should be allowed to longer retain control of Cuba, the information will be gratefully received. I certainly know of no reason.

I may be wrong, but it seems to me that it is a reproach to the civilization of the age that a bankrupt and corrupt Government like Spain should be permitted to hold in bondage on this continent a people who have aspirations for the same liberty that we enjoy.

Our forefathers went to war because the mother country put a tax on tea.

Cuba has ten thousand more reasons than we had for rebellion, and she deserves the sympathy and help of every true American.

A MATTER OF HISTORY.

If I have read history correctly, not since the downfall of the Roman Empire has there been such a story of the rise to greatness and the fall to helplessness of a great power as in this instance of Spain. It is one of the striking coincidences of history that Spain to-day, finding herself menaced with the loss of her last American possessions through a conflict with the great American Republic, dates the beginning of her power from the year 1492, in which year the discovery of Columbus led to the ultimate establishment of the United States.

The year which gave the Western Hemisphere to Spain witnessed the expulsion of the Moors from Grenada and made all the Spanish possessions one united country. Her first King, Ferdinand of Aragon, whose marriage with Isabella of Castile in 1469 marked the beginning of a real Spanish Kingdom, was also the last Spanish King, for at his death, in 1516, the succession passed into the lines of the Hapsburgs, with sad and melancholy consequences for the civilized world.

During the four hundred years of Spain's rise and fall her invariable record has been one of cruelty, of persecution, of bigotry, of hostility to every sentiment of human freedom, common justice, and enlightment. The slavery to which she doomed her subjects in the Western Hemisphere was not more cruel than her oppression of Holland or her tyranny over her own people at home. The bigotry, the fanaticism, the intolerance, and the gloomy superstition of her tone of mind are unrelieved by one single gleam of recognition of human rights, just as the disgraceful record of her decay and downfall is unrelieved by one single triumph of genius in statesmanship or of prowess in battle against an armed enemy.

One after another Spain's possessions have fallen away, like bricks from a moldering wall, until to-day she stands alone, bankrupt in resources, but still clinging to that policy of cruelty, of oppression and extermination, which has been her only known method of dealing for four hundred years, until finally forced to confront the Republic of freedom, of equality, of justice, of humanity, of civilization.

Mr. President, it is not accident or chance which has brought about the present situation. It is inexorable destiny, which decrees that the last of Spain's ill-gotten possessions in this hemisphere will be lifted to freedom by the one Republic which represents everything that Spain has antagonized during her whole history.

Fortunately the people of this great Republic are thoroughly aroused to the situation, and the great heart of the American populace is in full sympathy with Cuba.

Religion and humanity alike demand that this unholy war shall cease, and cease it should, even though the glitter and glamour of military rule shall end and a decaying and dissolute throne shall pass away never to return.

THE REMEDY.

Mr. President, I am asked what I would have done.

The question is one demanding an honest and careful answer.

The Senator from Vermont closed his speech by a declaration that he does not favor annexation; but for myself, looking to the demands of advancing civilization and the future peace and prosperity of the island, I am of opinion that sooner or later this great Government will of necessity absorb Cuba. And if it is to come, why not now?

It is argued that we do not want territory peopled by a race different in nationality and habits of life from our own. Is it forgotten that when we absorbed California, Florida, and Texas that same problem confronted our Government? The problem was soon solved, and who dares now say that California, Florida, and Texas are less American than Massachusetts, Virginia, and New York? Ours is a great country, of marvelous resources and infinite possibilities. We are once more a united people, and it is utterly idle to say that we can not successfully govern an island that is practically a part of our own territory. To doubt our ability to do that is a reflection upon the strength of republican institutions that I do not share.

But, Mr. President, if annexation can not be accomplished, let Cuban independence speedily come. American interests in Cuba have already suffered enough. We have patrolled our coast in the interest of Spain as long as we should, and we have spent quite too much money in protecting our people from epidemic diseases coming to our shores because of the unsanitary condition of the harbor and city of Havana. Spain has failed to meet the requirements of an age of advanced civilization. Let the United States or Cuba take up the problem and solve it. The vigor shown by our early statesmen in dealing with Spain in relation to the acquisition of Florida is a precedent that may well be invoked in this crisis, for no one now hesitates to commend the action of Monroe and Adams in dealing with that problem.

Mr. President, for Cuba the present is dark and foreboding, but we must not forget that God reigns, and that the mighty sweep of human progress will not rest until oppression and cruelty are overcome, and the aspirations and hopes of all people struggling for better conditions and a higher life are realized. Poor Cuba! Crushed and bleeding, I commend her to the great heart of the American people. [Applause in the galleries.]

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. TELLER. Yesterday, on my motion, the Senate recalled from the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 1595) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, and the bill has been returned by the House of Representatives. I now desire to submit a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I have consulted with parties who are interested in the bill, and they have no opposition to this course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from Colorado, and the question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Now I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate and subject to amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill may remain upon the Calendar until I can consult the parties who are interested, so that we may agree upon some amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that order will be made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar, subject to be taken up at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3729) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, which was under consideration yesterday.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, further replying to the question of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] presented yesterday, I desire to suggest that the causes which impelled the committee to provide for three judges, three United States attorneys, and three clerks of the courts, instead of one judge, one United States attorney, and one clerk, will be found, first, in the vast extent of the country; second, in the physical conditions surrounding it, principally climatic. For instance, it is a fact, so well known as not to require special mention, that the Yukon River begins to freeze at its mouth late in the summer or early in the autumn and that the stream can not be navigated between the months of September and July. It is equally true that a vessel can not approach the Island of St. Michaels until early in the month of July each year, because of the presence of ice in and about the island.

In the meantime it must be considered as a fact well known that the mining operations in the Yukon Valley are chiefly conducted during the winter months, when connection with the outside world by established lines of communication can not be regularly maintained.

It is a curious fact, not heretofore encountered in the mining operations of the world, that during the severest weather of the winter the mining operations in the placer mines of the central part of Alaska are most successfully conducted. The entire country seems to be covered with a deep layer of moss, which during the summer months thaws out, and the country becomes flooded with water, so as to practically impede travel and to prevent the sinking of the shafts necessary to reach the beds of the gold-bearing gravel. In the winter time nature stays this flowing water, and the shafts are sunk to bed rock, where the pay gravel is found, during the time the ground is securely frozen. Hence it appears as a fact that the population intending to conduct mining operations along the Yukon River will be busy during the winter time and will not be so closely employed during the summer.

The only question presented, then, is whether during the season of activity in the Yukon Valley we should leave the people accumulated there without any semblance of court or government. The Senator from Missouri suggested that the judge at Sitka should make a tour of that country once a year and dispose of all the court business in a few brief days at the various points at which court might be held. But, Mr. President, if this judge from Sitka should land in Circle City in the month of November, he would find it impossible to go down to St. Michaels until the next August, and he would be settled securely at one point on his circuit until the following summer. While this judge is snow-bound at Circle City there might be some business requiring his presence at Sitka or St. Michaels, and nothing short of a balloon would enable the judge to get about the circuit where his presence was required in the transaction of business.

These physical conditions led us to place one judge at Circle City, to be permanently located there, and required to hold one term of the court each year at that point and at such other places in the interior of the country as the business might require. The same observations would apply to the judge to be located at St. Michaels. To leave the entire work of the three divisions of this district to one judge would be equivalent to denying to the people engaged in mining and other occupations in the interior of that country access to courts of justice entirely.

From the best information obtainable, a moderate estimate would fix the number of our citizens destined to invade that country for legitimate purposes during the next year at 100,000. To-day between Dawson City and St. Michaels, a distance of about 1,400 miles, there is not a semblance of governmental authority of any kind, character, or description, except, I believe, one United States commissioner, with limited authority, located at Circle City.

Probably, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] suggests to me, that commissioner has not arrived at his destination. Captain Ray, of the Army, commissioned to go through the interior of Alaska during the last year, recently made a report from Circle City, and, indeed, reported from various other places along the river. The condition he disclosed was one of complete anarchy. Persons coming down from the British possessions found the trading companies in possession of certain supplies. There was no effort to purchase. Bands of men organized and determined to take possession of the property of our citizens trading in that country. If we do not provide the courts of justice and the means of administering the law, we must, under the flag of the country, condemn our citizens to organize independent of law for self-preservation and the protection of their property rights and interests.

The present method of disposing of disputes in that District is and for some time has been to order men supposed to be guilty of crime out of the country. Meetings are called; a miners' meeting passes on the merits of a case. There are no jails, no means of punishing offenders, except by hanging them by the neck or ordering them out of the country. This condition should not be allowed to continue if it is within the power of the Government to prevent it or to offer any substitute for such measures or methods. Our people are generally law abiding. They are extremely anxious that courts shall be established in Alaska, that methods shall be provided whereby they may make record of the basis of the titles to their property, to the end that in the future their property rights may be properly established and protected.

The expense of the entire scheme of government proposed by the bill will not entail upon the General Government an amount in excess of $50,000 per year. Under the revenue system contemplated by the bill and proposed amendments the Government will, I anticipate, collect from Alaska, independent of the seal fisheries, at least $200,000 per year in revenue. There can be no reasonable opposition urged to this bill upon the basis of general policy, and I assume that with needful amendments to perfect its various provisions, if they need improvement, the bill should pass and become a law. I now ask that the committee amendments may be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Territories will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 3, line 10, after the word "assigned," to insert "by the President;" so as to read:

SEC. —. That no license under this act shall be issued for a greater period than one year, and no license can be transferred by the licensee to any other person, except with the written consent of the court by authority whereof the same shall issue, upon application thereto in writing. That the liquor licenses authorized and provided for by this act shall be of two classes—wholesale liquor licenses and barroom licenses. Every applicant for a liquor license shall deposit the amount of the license fee with the clerk of the court at the time of filing his application for the license. If, upon consideration of the application for license by the court, as provided for in this act, the court should determine to grant the license prayed for, it shall notify the clerk and the applicant for such license in writing, and the applicant shall thereupon receive his license. The fee for a wholesale license shall be $2,000 per annum and for a barroom or retail license in towns or settlements of 1,500 population or upward, $1,500 per annum; in towns, camps, or settlements of less than 1,500 population, $1,000 per annum. A retail or barroom license shall be required for every hotel, tavern, barroom, or other place in which intoxicating liquors are sold by retail. A wholesale liquor license shall only authorize the licensee to sell distilled, malt, or fermented liquors, wines, and cordials in quantities not less than 1 pint, not to be drunk upon the premises where sold; and no such license shall be granted until it is satisfactorily shown that the place where it is intended to carry on such business is properly arranged for selling such liquors as merchandise. Every place where distilled, malt, or fermented wines, liquors, or cordials are sold in quantities as prescribed for retail dealers by section 3244, Revised Statutes of the United States, to be drunk upon the premises, shall be regarded as a barroom; and the possession of malt, distilled, fermented, or any intoxicating liquors with the means and appliances for carrying on the business of dispensing the same to be drunk where sold shall be prima facie evidence of a barroom within the meaning of this act, and the license therefor shall be known as a barroom license: Provided, That no license shall be granted for the sale of liquors at either wholesale or retail in any other than a substantial building which shall have cost for construction not less than $500.

That every person receiving a license to sell under this act shall frame it under glass and place it in a conspicuous place in his chief place of sale of such liquor, so that anyone entering such place of sale may easily read such license.

SEC. —. That all applicants for license and persons holding licenses shall allow the clerk of the court or any United States marshal or deputy United States marshal or any United States commissioner full opportunity and every facility to examine at any time during business hours the premises where intoxicating liquor is sold and for which a license has been asked or has been granted.

That druggists and apothecaries shall not be required to obtain license under the provisions of this act, but they shall not sell intoxicating liquors, nor compound nor mix any composition thereof, except upon the written prescription of a reputable physician, nor more than once on any one prescription of the physician; and every druggist or apothecary shall keep a book for the special purpose, and enter therein the date of every sale of intoxicating liquor made by him, the person to whom sold, the kind, quantity, and price thereof, and purpose for which it was sold, and such book shall be at all times open to the inspection of the United States marshal or any deputy marshal, any United States commissioner, the collector of customs, or any deputy collector of customs, for the District of Alaska, and shall be produced when required; and any failure to comply with the provisions of this section shall render such druggist or apothecary so failing liable to the same penalties as if he had sold intoxicating liquors without a license.

SEC. —. That any one engaging in the sale of intoxicating liquors as specified in this act in the District of Alaska, who is required by it to have a license as herein specified, without first having obtained a license to do so as herein provided, or any person who shall engage in such sale in any portion of the District where the sale thereof is prohibited, upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $2,000, or be imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than one year; and upon every subsequent conviction of a like offense shall in addition to the penalty above named be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than one year.

That any person, having obtained a license under this act, who shall violate any of its provisions, shall, upon conviction of such violation, be fined not less than $50 nor more than $200, and upon every subsequent conviction of such violation during the year for which such license is issued shall be fined a like amount, and in addition to such fine shall pay a sum equal to 25 per cent of the amount of the fine imposed for the offense immediately preceding, and have his license revoked, and in case of nonpayment of the fines and penalties above named shall be imprisoned for a period of time not exceeding six months or till the same are paid. That after second conviction no license shall thereafter be granted to said party: Provided, That no minor under 16 years of age shall be allowed to enter any place where liquors are sold, other than a hotel, without the consent of the parent or guardian of such minor.

SEC. —. That any person assisting in or aiding and abetting the violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $100, or be imprisoned for not more than one month, for each and every such offense.

SEC. —. That prosecutions for violations of the provisions of this act shall be an information filed in the district court or any subdivision thereof or before a United States commissioner by the United States marshal or any deputy marshal or by the district attorney or by any of his assistants. Or such prosecution may be by and through indictment by grand jury, and it shall be the duty of either of said officers, on the representation of two or more reputable citizens, to file such information, or to present the facts alleged to constitute violations of the law to the grand jury.

That license for any of the purposes specified shall not be granted to any person to conduct such business within 400 feet of a public schoolhouse, private school, or house of religious worship, except in such places of business as may have been located previous to the erection or occupation of such schoolhouse, private school, or house of religious worship owned or occupied in the District of Alaska, measured between the nearest entrance to each by the shortest course of travel between such place of business and the schoolhouse, private school, or house of religious worship.

SEC. —. That all applicants who have had a license during the preceding year shall apply for a renewal of such license on or before November 1 of each license year, and shall be permitted to continue business until license shall be granted or refused by the court or judge thereof; but in all cases of refusal to grant license such proportion of the license fee as may have become due shall be deducted and retained from the sum deposited therefor as the time from the 1st day of November to the date of such refusal bears to the entire license year, and no other person shall be permitted to conduct said business until a license is issued therefor.

SEC. —. That nothing in this act shall in any way repeal, conflict, or interfere with the public general laws of the United States imposing taxes on the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for the purpose of revenue, and known as the "internal-revenue laws."

SEC. —. That no license under a barroom license shall employ, or permit to be employed, or allow any female or minor or person convicted of crime, to sell, give, furnish, or distribute any intoxicating drinks or any admixture thereof, ale, wine, or beer to any person or persons, and no licensee in any place shall knowingly sell, or permit to be sold, in his establishment any intoxicating liquor of any kind to any person under the age of 21 years, under the penalty, upon due conviction thereof, of forfeiting such license, and no person so forfeiting his license shall again be granted a license for the term of two years.

SEC. —. That in the interpretation of this act words of the singular number shall be deemed to include their plurals, and that words of the masculine gender shall be deemed to include the feminine, as the case may be.

SEC. —. That sections 2139, 2140, and 2141 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby expressly extended and made applicable to the District of Alaska, and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act respecting the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquors are hereby repealed.

SEC. —. The provisions of this act respecting the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquors shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of June, A. D. 1898.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. CARTER. I offer the following, to be attached as a proviso to the last section of the proposed license amendment:

Provided, That the statutes of the United States prohibiting the sale or delivery of intoxicating liquors to Indians shall apply to and remain in full force and effect in said District.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from North Dakota will permit me one moment, I think the question is first on agreeing to my amendment to the amendment. That may be disposed of, and the entire amendment will then come up for consideration as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. PERKINS. I think that is already provided for by reciting the statutes relating to the prohibition of the sale of liquor to Indians.

Mr. CARTER. I have not carefully examined the proposed amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to the Senator from Montana that that is especially provided for.

Mr. CARTER. Certain Senators are very solicitous that this amendment shall be added to the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the Secretary kindly read the section of the amendment proposed by me which cites sections of the Revised Statutes?

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. —. That sections 2139, 2140, and 2141 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby expressly extended and made applicable to the District of Alaska, and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act respecting the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquors are hereby repealed.

Mr. CARTER. There are certain other sections of the Revised Statutes that authorize search to be made in Indian habitations for intoxicating liquors and the confiscation of the whisky when found. However, I presume the section of the amendment which has just been read can be elaborated hereafter if it is found necessary, and I therefore withdraw my proposed proviso.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, if I thoroughly understand the amendment submitted by the Senator from California, it is proposed to permit the sale of liquor under high-license regulations in the District of Alaska. Up to the present time no such privilege has been granted with respect to that country. It will be held, no doubt, that liquor is being sold in Alaska, and I presume that that is true, because the District of Alaska at the present time is in an unorganized condition. In this connection, I desire to send to the desk and have read section 1955 of the Revised Statutes, covering this question, that the Senate may understand the existing law on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 1955. The President shall have power to restrict and regulate or to prohibit the importation and use of firearms, ammunition, and distilled spirits into and within the Territory of Alaska. The exportation of the same from any other port or place in the United States, when destined to any port or place in that Territory, and all such arms, ammunition, and distilled spirits, exported or attempted to be exported from any port or place in the United States and destined for such Territory, in violation of any regulations that may be prescribed under this section, and all such arms, ammunition, and distilled spirits landed or attempted to be landed or used at any port or place in the Territory, in violation of such regulations, shall be forfeited; and if the value of the same exceeds $400 the vessel upon which the same is found, or from which they have been landed, together with her tackle, apparel, and furniture and cargo, shall be forfeited; and any person wilfully violating such regulations shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than six months. Bonds may be required for a faithful observance of such regulations from the master or owners of any vessel departing from any port in the United States having on board firearms, ammunition, or distilled spirits, when such vessel is destined to any place in the Territory, or if not so destined, when there is reasonable ground of suspicion that such articles are intended to be landed therein in violation of law; and similar bonds may also be required on the landing of any such articles in the Territory from the person to whom the same may be consigned.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understand that that statute is in force as applied to the District of Alaska. If the amendment of the Senator from California should be adopted, the Government would be in a position where it would be regarded as taking part in the liquor business. It is proposed that the Government of the United States shall license saloon keepers in Alaska and accept money from those people for the privilege of selling liquor. I do not believe that the Government should go into the liquor business, and I offer a substitute for that portion of the amendment proposed by the Senator from California pertaining to the licensing of liquor sellers in the District of Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. —. That any person importing or attempting to import, manufacturing or attempting to manufacture, selling or attempting to sell any malt, spirituous, vinous, or other fermented liquor, or pretended medicine, cordial, or other beverage of an intoxicating character within the District of Alaska shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 or more than $1,000 for each offense and imprisonment for not less than two or more than six months, one-half of the amount of any such fine to be paid to the person giving information upon which conviction is had: Provided, That where a corporation is found guilty of violating the provisions of this section, each officer and director of such corporation shall be liable to punishment as herein provided: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as exempting such prohibited liquors from forfeiture to and confiscation by the United States when found in said District or consigned to points therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, no one would go further than myself to aid my friend from North Dakota in advancing the cause of temperance. I claim to be a temperance man. I claim to be temperate in my food, in my drink, in my language, and my habits. I believe in temperance. Every man should learn to control his appetite and govern himself. It is for that reason that I have offered this amendment.

It is true, as the Senator from North Dakota states, that there is upon the statute book a law which prohibits the selling of intoxicating liquors in the District of Alaska. Theoretically, therefore, Alaska is a prohibition State. I desire to state that practically there is not a mining town in the Territory of Arizona or New Mexico that has as many rum shops in proportion to the population as have the mining towns of Alaska. I mean to say that the statute which the Senator has had read is not only a dead letter upon our statute book, but it has invited disrespect and disregard for other laws and it has no respect whatever in its observance by the residents of that District.

The ex-Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, Mr. Hamlin, is well known to many Senators upon this floor. There is no more high-minded, conscientious temperance man than that gentleman. In the performance of his duties last year he was called to Alaska. He stated to me that the revenue cutter on which he took passage anchored in the harbor of Juneau, and during the afternoon he went on shore. As he passed up the main thoroughfare of the town every other building was a saloon, and he counted twenty-seven of those saloons. He asked the collector of the port why this was permitted. The collector said it is impossible to close them. Mr. Hamlin gave orders that the saloons should be closed. A delegation of citizens waited upon him and said: "You must send the Marine Corps here to guard this town, and you must keep them here. It is impossible to close these saloons." The result was that he came away from there with every one of those saloons conducting an illicit traffic in liquor.

Now, with a high-license law we may control those groggeries. Under such a law every one would be a monitor upon his neighbor, and every one would see that his neighbor did not enjoy privileges for nothing for which he had to pay.

While I appreciate the sentiment of my friend from North Dakota that this Government should not take part in becoming a liquor dealer, yet here is the report of ex-Governor Sheakley, when governor of Alaska, and his report is but that of every other preceding governor and of those who have come after him. I ask leave to have the Secretary read an extract from his report, the last one, made in 1895, relating to this business in Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2680, on which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the Senator from Louisiana wish to go on with the quarantine bill this afternoon?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. Then the Alaska bill will go over, under the rule.

QUARANTINE REGULATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2680) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. VEST to the amendment of the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

The amendment to the amendment was, after line 13, on page 23, to insert:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the right of any State to protect its citizens from infectious or contagious diseases by such rules and regulations as the authorities of said State may deem necessary and which do not conflict with the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury as hereinbefore provided to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or the spread of such diseases from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia into another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, when I last addressed the Senate it was in answer to a question propounded by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], substantially as to the extent of the power of Congress to regulate commerce whenever that power came in conflict with the police power of the State.

Mr. President, I concede that all the police powers of a State are reserved to the States. I concede that whatever a State proposes to enact in the way of legislation for the health, the life, the liberty, the convenience, the comfort of its citizens, it has a constitutional right to enact, and it is done in the exercise of inherent sovereignty; but I hold, in the light of the supremacy of the Constitution of the United States and in view of all the decisions that have been rendered on the point, that whenever a State in the exercise of its undisputed police power uses means and methods which come in conflict with the means and methods used by the Congress of the United States in the execution of any of its powers, and notably the power to regulate commerce, the State law is necessarily subordinated or the State means to execute its laws are necessarily subordinated to the supreme and paramount authority of Congress.

After that concession, after that broad statement of the respective powers of the States and the Congress of the United States, I do not see how there can be a conflict of opinion in the application that the pending bill makes of the power possessed by Congress to regulate commerce.

The position taken by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] in my opinion amounts to a practical negation, to a practical obliteration of the Federal power of quarantine. If their doctrine is carried out to its fullest extent, it amounts to a contradiction and to a conflict of authority which would result practically in destroying the Federal system of quarantine.

The Senator from Florida and the Senator from Georgia say that they are perfectly willing for the United States to take hold of the subject of maritime quarantine; that they are perfectly willing for the United States consular officers and medical officers to derive information of the condition of any ship sailing from a foreign port and to fumigate that ship, to subject it to the disinfecting processes now applied by the medical fraternity, and to detain it in quarantine, but they are not willing that, after that quarantine shall have been perfected, after the vessel shall have been disinfected, the bill of health or the certificate of the United States quarantine officers should have power enough and potency enough to allow the ship to enter the harbor, to land its passengers, and to discharge its cargo.

They intimate that they are willing that the quarantine officers of the United States can go into a State, take hold of yellow fever or any other contagious disease in a State; that they can disinfect any infected place; that they can exercise all proper control and jurisdiction to effect that purpose; but when that purpose is effected, when the disease is crushed out, when the germ is destroyed, they hold that the power of the United States in the premises ceases, and the States have a perfect right to say that the disinfected town is an infected town; that the quarantine has been useless; that all the applications of science, all the care, prudence, and vigilance of the Marine-Hospital Corps or any other corps of doctors is perfectly idle, and that the States can step in and say as against the certificate of the Federal quarantine officers, "We discredit your disinfection, we discredit your work, and we put an embargo on everybody and everything that comes from this town that you say is disinfected; we shall not permit you to enter anywhere."

Now, Mr. President, in so far as their own States go, so far as their internal police is concerned, it is manifest that they have supreme jurisdiction. If they choose to exercise that jurisdiction in a useless manner, if they choose to bottle up a community disinfected after the approved manner of disinfection, that is their lookout; they can do so; they can police every portion of their territory; they can say to one village, "You can not go to another, whether that other has been disinfected or not;" they can say to the inhabitants of a disinfected town, "You can not circulate in the borders of our State."

But where the subject-matter is interstate commerce, where the intercourse is between the States, in the teeth of the Federal quarantine, in the teeth of the Federal permit, what the Federal quarantine says is safe they can not say is unsafe, and they can not pronounce infected what has been pronounced disinfected; and just to the extent of the particular intercourse or the transmission of the particular commodity in question, only so far as it is necessary to perfect the interstate intercourse or circulation of the interstate commodity, can the Federal law reach. It can reach that far, and no further.

If it can not reach that far, the Constitution of the United States is not supreme. If the States can block the way whenever they please of any commercial intercourse between the States or intercourse between the cities of different States, on account of a feared infection, over which the Congress of the United States has jurisdiction and has applied methods through its agents to destroy, to remove, then I say the Constitution of the United States has been written in vain.

The policy that is contended for by my honorable friend from Florida and my honorable friend from Georgia is worse than the mediæval policy. Your policy is one of absolute isolation. You are willing for the United States to wall in everybody, surround them with a cordon of guards, have a corps of doctors to disinfect, and yet you say you are not willing that a soul shall go out unless at the instance and under the authority of the States. Whatever may be the purpose of the exit, whether for interstate commerce or not, the States have a right to bottle up and wall up, to immure, every living soul and every commercial commodity in the United States.

Mr. President, does this comport with the idea of quarantine? Have they not, in their eagerness to maintain what they consider to be the supremacy of the State police power, transcended the very objects of quarantine, gone beyond the very point that the quarantine aims at, and rendered the whole system absolutely futile and useless?

The cross-question that I propounded to the Senator from Georgia illustrates very well the position they assume. They are perfectly willing that the States should say when a city or municipality is free from infection. They are not willing for the United States to say it for United States purposes. That amounts to an embargo; that amounts to an absolute isolation; that amounts to an absolute paralysis. It is undeniable that the power which is potent to isolate is potent to remove the isolation for the purposes for which the isolation was effected.

Now, under the jurisdiction of the State in regard to this matter of quarantine, what would result? Every municipality is supreme. Every municipality in the State, so far as I know, has a perfect right to say, "We quarantine ourselves." If this doctrine, therefore, that you preach is correct, then you have a community isolated, segregated, cut off in every particular; and there is no power anywhere, whether for Federal purposes or not, able to break through the circle and permit intercourse, however slight.

The State authorities may exercise such a power over internal intercourse and commerce, but when Congress intervenes in behalf of the Union and of commerce the mediæval structure crumbles, and a qualified intercourse, safe and limited, can be had under the sanction of the Constitution. Why, then, make the quarantines almost or quite as bad as the diseases against which they are laid? You destroy the very purpose and object of the quarantine; and notwithstanding the disclaimer of any constitutional right as against the exertion of the Federal authority in the matter of quarantine, the inference, in my mind, is perfectly clear that the struggle against the predominance of Federal quarantine is a lingering affection for the maintenance of State authority as superior to and paramount to the authority of Congress.

The idea seems to be advanced that there is more security in the administration of a law of this character by persons under State control than by officers under United States control; that a divided control is preferable to sole control; and that in the midst of the invasion or ravages of disease, an army of doctors under different jurisdiction and with different methods is superior to a compact, united, and disciplined corps.

Mr. President, it does seem like a work of surplusage to quote authority on the plain point I was arguing when interrupted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] yesterday evening, but lest there be any doubt upon this question, I will read from authors of approved reputation and standing. I will read first from Black on Constitutional Law, page 195, section 104:

> It is within the lawful power of each State to enact laws to guard against the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases from foreign countries. To this end it may establish quarantine stations and provide for the inspection of vessels coming from abroad to ascertain their sanitary condition, and require such vessels to pay a fee to cover the cost of such inspection. Statutes of this character are not regarded as regulations of commerce, but as police laws. At the same time they may and do in a sense affect foreign commerce, and for that reason the subject of quarantine is equally under the control of Congress, and State laws must yield in all points where they are inconsistent with such general regulations as Congress may see fit to impose.

Mr. MALLORY. I did not catch the name of the author from whom the Senator is reading.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am reading from Black on Constitutional Law.

Mr. President, there is the doctrine laid down very clearly. That is the doctrine of Marshall; that is the doctrine of Story; that is the doctrine of Cooley; that is the doctrine of Miller; that is the doctrine of Taney; that is the doctrine of Catron; that is the universally accepted doctrine of all authors and jurists of eminence in the United States.

As a matter of course, there are general assertions made as to the existence and supremacy of State police powers, such as I made in opening my remarks this afternoon. I concede the police powers of the States, but there has never been a question before the Supreme Court of the United States where the power of Congress to regulate commerce was ever subordinated to the police powers of the States, and there never will be, for, in the nature of things, it is impossible; but every single case has demonstrated the supremacy of the Constitution over the power of the States to regulate their own police affairs whenever the exercise of the constitutional power conflicted with the means used by the States in the execution of their police powers. That is not to say the police powers of the States are not reserved to them, but it is only to say that the supreme instrument, the supreme Government, must, in the execution of its laws, be transcendent or paramount to the exercise of the police power in the State.

I will read from the case of Morgan vs. Louisiana, 118 U. S. Reports, page 464:

But it may be conceded that whenever Congress shall undertake to provide for the commercial cities of the United States a general system of quarantine, or shall confide the execution of the details of such a system to a national board of health or to local boards, as may be found expedient, all State laws on the subject will be abrogated, at least so far as the two are inconsistent. But, until this is done, the laws of the State on the subject are valid. This follows from two reasons:

1. The act of 1799, the main features of which are embodied in Title LVIII of the Revised Statutes, clearly recognizes the quarantine laws of the States and requires of the officers of the Treasury a conformity to their provisions in dealing with vessels affected by the quarantine system. And this very clearly has relation to laws created after the passage of that statute, as well as to those then in existence; and when by the act of April 29, 1878 (20 Stat., 37), certain powers in this direction were conferred on the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, and consuls and revenue officers were required to contribute services in preventing the importation of disease, it was provided that "there shall be no interference in any manner with any quarantine laws or regulations as they now exist or may hereafter be adopted under State laws," showing very clearly the intention of Congress to adopt these laws, or to recognize the power of the States to pass them.

2. But, aside from this, quarantine laws belong to that class of State legislation which, whether passed with intent to regulate commerce or not, must be admitted to have that effect, and which are valid until displaced or contravened by some legislation of Congress.

That is the correct doctrine. The police powers of the States must be recognized. They were never surrendered in the constitutional compact; they inhere to the sovereignty of the States only with this exception, that they may come in conflict in their exercise with the exercise of other powers on behalf of the Government of the United States; and when that event comes, they must stand to one side. I will read, on page 459, from the opinion of this very eminent jurist, Mr. Justice Miller, who, I am told, was himself a physician at one period, the sentence in this opinion quoted in reference to a city in my own State:

If there is a city in the United States which has need of quarantine laws, it is New Orleans. Although situated over a hundred miles from the Gulf of Mexico, it is the largest city which partakes of its commerce, and more vessels of every character come to and depart from it than any city connected with that commerce. Partaking, as it does, of the liability to diseases of warm climates, and in the same danger as all other seaports of cholera and other contagious and infectious disorders, these are sources of anxiety to its inhabitants, and to all the interior population of the country, who may be affected by their spread among them.

So, therefore, we at the very entrance to the Gulf stand in the character of a sentinel over the health and the safety of the great valley of the Mississippi from invasions of yellow fever and cholera. Surely our people ought to know somewhat of the advisability of quarantine regulations being under the control and charge of the Government of the United States; surely our experience is such as to teach us the lesson whether or not the health sentinel that we have established at the mouth of the river is sufficient to stand guard over the whole valley and over our own city likewise.

I have no word of criticism or reproach to say to the Senators who advocate the integrity and the maintenance of their State police regulations. It is an honest difference of opinion between us. If these State laws were, in my opinion, capable of keeping out these fell destroyers—if they could only sentinel and guard the outposts which are attacked with these insidious enemies to life—I would be the last one to call in requisition the power of the United States; but, sir, not only has experience demonstrated that these diseases, notwithstanding the State quarantines, get in, but when they are in the country is thrown into panic and its inhabitants into the grave. Every State has different regulations, every municipality in every State has different regulations, and there are miles of quarantines hastily, crudely gotten up, armed with little save the weapons suggested by panic, the Winchester rifle and the shotgun.

Disease requires not exclusively a cordon of living sentinels, but the application of scientific methods of treatment. You may surround any locality anywhere in the South, North, or East with a living guard of human beings, armed to the teeth with Winchester rifles, and you have no security against the intrusion of this dreadful enemy—none on earth. You may have the States like armed camps, with sentinels at every depot, marching by with shotguns on their shoulders, and the disease doing its fell work unobstructed and unhindered.

It occurs to me that we ought to look into the nature, character, and situation of our country, in order to know how to guard it against the introduction and spread of disease. In the beginning of our Government, as I said yesterday, quarantine regulations could be safely left to the different States, and I do not say that there are not efficient quarantine regulations in some States now; but I say, with over 10,000 miles of seacoast to guard, with the interior to guard at every railroad depot, that the regulations which were good from 1799 down to 1878 are to-day valueless and ineffective, as the constant recurrence of yellow fever along all the seaboards in our country and in the interior demonstrates. It was not till 1878 that the interior of the country woke up, and I will ask to have read an extract from a speech of the lamented Senator Harris, of Tennessee, delivered in the Senate of the United States in 1893, when he was arguing in favor of the bill he had introduced in that year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair.) The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, there is scarcely a sanitary organization in the United States that has not, year by year, and for several years, urged the absolute necessity of an efficient and uniform quarantine system throughout the United States. The only exception that I know of to the absolute uniformity and unanimity of that recommendation comes from a few local boards of health jealous of their positions, jealous of their authority, and perhaps somewhat devoted to the income that results from the execution of their regulations. Some of them have always opposed any attempt by the Federal Government to interfere at all.

Now, what is the plain and unmistakable question for the Senate to decide? The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] will not differ with me in the assertion of the power in Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. Every power granted in this bill is the exercise of that constitutional power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. I defy any Senator to point out a single power granted by the bill that does not legitimately fall within that clause of the Constitution.

The plain, practical question for the Senate to decide is, Shall we have one uniform and efficient system of quarantine regulation throughout the whole country, or shall we have forty-four different systems of commercial regulations? For, if the Federal Government does not exercise the power to regulate commerce in respect to this question of quarantine, the courts have decided, and I think properly decided, that the States may exercise it. The whole theory of the argument of the Senator from Louisiana is that the Federal Government should ignore its power to control these questions and allow the forty-four States each to form its own system of commercial regulations.

I have a somewhat sad experience, which accounts in some degree for any enthusiasm I may have in support of this measure. I chance to live at the head of deep-water navigation of the great Mississippi River. New Orleans rests at the mouth of that great channel of commerce. It is the New Orleans board of health that speaks here to-day through the Senator from that great State, protesting against any exercise of the powers of Congress to regulate commerce in respect to this matter of quarantine. Efficient, and great, and able, and patriotic as the board of health of New Orleans may have always been and may be, I chance to know that the city in which I live has been under my own eye decimated as often as twice by yellow fever, which was allowed to slip through the quarantine regulations of New Orleans either because of the fact that their rules were not sufficient in themselves or not enforced with sufficient vigor.

Memphis has suffered to the extent of the decimation of her population as often as twice, and I have sat there and looked out my window for week after week during the epidemic of 1873 when not a door was opened except the door of the drug store, the doctor's office, and the undertaker's shop. I have walked the street, sir, from my house to the post-office, day by day, to get my mail, and have found not a single door open in that city for weeks except those that I have named. There was not a family in the city which could venture to aid its neighbor because the patients in its own house were so numerous as to demand the attention and the nursing of every member of the family. There was not an object moving on the streets except the hearse, followed by perhaps one carriage or a buggy with the surviving members of the stricken family accompanying the remains of the last victim to the grave. For weeks at a time I have witnessed scenes like those in 1873, and it was worse in 1878.

Are we to be compelled to rely now and always upon the wisdom and the zeal and the energy of a board of health and quarantine authorities which allow things such as these to occur year after year? I protest in the name of the people who are my neighbors, I protest in the name of the whole people of the valley of the Mississippi, against a failure to exercise the power that we unquestionably have, and that they have a right to demand we shall exercise for the security of their lives and their health, even though it may be distasteful to the New Orleans quarantine authorities.

The people of New Orleans are acclimated. There are very few if any adults who reside there who are not exempt from yellow fever, having once had it. Hence they have little or no fear of it, and naturally are not so vigilant in excluding it as the security of the people in the interior demands.

New Orleans has a large and profitable trade with Havana and Vera Cruz, where yellow fever always exists.

If the theory of the Senator from Louisiana prevails, the whole people of the interior States are compelled to rely upon the sufficiency of the regulations made by cities on the seaboard and the sufficiency of their execution by authorities over which they have no control. It is the duty of this Government to exercise its constitutional powers to protect the whole people and not compel the people of interior States to rely entirely upon the States upon the seaboard for their protection, when we know that if a single gate is left open, through which contagion may enter, the whole country must suffer the disastrous consequences of an epidemic.

This bill does not propose to interfere with State quarantines in any way except that where their rules and regulations are not sufficient to protect the people of the country the Federal authority shall step in, in the legitimate exercise of the power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, and make rules and regulations which will strip that commerce of contagion and protect that people; that is all.

Now, Mr. President, I want to dispose of the pending bill. I think it important to the whole country that it should be promptly passed, and therefore will not consume more time in debate; but I will put into the RECORD the action of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, sent to me yesterday, in respect to this matter, which I will have put into the RECORD without reading at present.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, when that speech was made, my then colleague, now Mr. Justice White, of the Supreme Court of the United States, opposed its passage—and he was its strongest opponent—first, on the ground that the quarantine system at the port of New Orleans was perfect, and on the further ground that the bill then pending was in violation of the power of the States over their own police regulations.

The system of disinfection which is now in vogue was first established by Dr. Joseph Holt, in the city of New Orleans, and at the quarantine station. He was a great physician. He had devoted himself to the study of germicide. He had discovered and applied means and methods whereby the malignant germ of yellow fever could be destroyed by certain applications—steam, sulphur, the bichloride of mercury, and other such compounds.

At that period I myself thought that perhaps the matter of quarantine had better be left to the control of the States; but the last epidemic has convinced me of the utter impossibility—laying aside any question of conflicting jurisdiction between the United States and the States, one in the exercise of its power to regulate commerce and the other in the exercise of its police power—laying aside any question of that sort, I am convinced of the utter inability of the States, with the enormous increase of population, the enormous increase in the volume and the circulation of commodities, of intercourse of individuals, since 1893, for each State on the seacoast to stand sentinel and guard for the interior to prevent the introduction of diseases from foreign countries.

Down in the South Atlantic and Gulf States the climatic conditions are favorable to the rapid spread of yellow fever. It is not indigenous; but when once in, when transplanted, when the malignant germ is conveyed from its habitat somewhere in the tropics to places along the South Atlantic and Gulf seaboard, it multiplies with frightful rapidity and becomes a fearful agent of death.

With the growing commerce, with the growing travel, with the constant passing in and out of vessels and ships and railway trains and every vehicle of transportation, however efficient one State quarantine may be, if there is a gap in the line—if, for instance, the quarantine is inefficient at Mobile and efficient at New Orleans, the dread invader comes in and the whole country is threatened with its destructive power. That is the condition of affairs.

The State board of health of New Orleans sent its representatives here in 1893, and they fought against the bill of 1893, and, without casting any reflections upon anybody, I think the opposition to this bill is somewhat due, and largely due, to the efforts of the State boards of health, in order that their State organizations should not be touched.

But, sir, it is not a question between State organizations and Federal organizations; it is a question of the safety of the lives of the inhabitants of this great country, and it is a question of the security of commercial intercourse in this country under such a system of quarantine as would both keep out disease and allow persons and commodities to circulate from one State to another with safety. That is the question which presses upon my mind. The constitutional doubt has no lodgment at all; it never did have with me.

It is a matter too clear that the Constitution of the United States is paramount to any exercise of police power on the part of the States, and it is a matter to my observation equally as clear that it is beyond the power and capacity of the States, under the present conditions of commerce, to guard themselves and other States dependent upon them from the encroachments of these terrible diseases. Read, sir, the pathetic utterances of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee; what he saw, what spectacles of death and sorrow and destruction! That is all he witnessed in the terrible epidemic which devastated Memphis, and that scene is common in the South. It is common wherever the yellow fever invades.

The whole Mississippi Valley is a prey to this disease. The whole interior of the country is a prey to it. In England they deride our quarantine system. They say it goes back to the ancient quarantine of the Mediterranean during the Crusades; that it is a legacy of ignorance and savagery. Not so. England is a small, compact territory. By the most excellent and perfect sanitary system in her cities, the fatal germ can not thrive and propagate its death-dealing species. Her climate operates in her behalf.

There is no excessive heat as we have in America in the summer time. The country is small. A person suspect of disease can easily be placed under surveillance, and that is what they do. They let everybody in, resting for the security of the country upon the sanitary regulations of the municipalities and the surveillance of the suspect.

The system of following him up for a certain period and then taking hold of him when stricken to prevent the spread of disease obtains, instead of our system of exclusion and sanitation at the seaboard. That system has been found to work well; but we must have a system of sanitation at the seaboard, and when does the sanitation commence? Under the regulations now in existence it commences on the other side of the water. The sanitation of the ship commences at the port where she clears. It is continued until she arrives at the port of entry. If then there is any suspicion that there is a lingering germ about the ship, the ship is still further subjected to sanitary treatment at the port of entry.

Mr. President, the opponents of this bill say, "We are not satisfied with that system. We not only want the system of the Crusades, which was forty days' detention, but we want a perpetual barrier, we want a perpetual embargo. We are not satisfied with your sanitation." And while they say they adopt the maritime system—they are bound to say it; they can not help but say it, because they can not go there with their police power of a State—they say that when the cargo and passengers shall have gone through the quarantine detention in order to let them land, and they attempt to land, "Oh, no; you are upon the sacred soil of the State. Notwithstanding your scientific precautions, notwithstanding your treatment, notwithstanding your sanitation, notwithstanding the care you have observed in regard to this vessel, you can not come a step unless you have the certificate of a State health officer; and then when you come into the interior you can not go there without another certificate;" and as you go on it is certificate after certificate, it is regulation after regulation, until you have destroyed commerce, destroyed intercourse.

If that system is to work, why have any regulations at all? Why not keep everything out? Why have any intercourse with anybody? The doctrine results in absolute isolation—the absolute destruction of commerce and intercourse. Therefore it occurs to me it ought not to be adopted.

The Marine-Hospital Service seems to evoke some opposition. Can we have the execution of a law in the hands of perfect administrators?

Suppose somebody says that the present Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service is not fit for his place, does not know anything about the yellow fever. Does that destroy the system of the Marine-Hospital Bureau? Sir, sometimes the American people say a man is not fit for President of the United States, and yet he may happen to get there. Perhaps the President will die and the Vice-President will come in, and the people would not have elected him. Are you going to have no President because an inefficient President may get in? These arguments against the possible inefficiency of a certain individual to preside over a bureau do not amount to anything, can not amount to anything, and ought not to amount to anything.

So far as I know personally, I gave in my testimony that the present head of the Marine-Hospital Service is well equipped for the functions with which he is charged—the functions of an organizer, the functions of the head of a great bureau. It is said that he knows nothing about yellow fever or cholera or diphtheria or bubonic plague. His office is here. He as an organizer, as the head of the Bureau, has able lieutenants in the field. Some of them are now in foreign ports studying the germ of yellow fever. Dr. Geddings is one of these, and they are scattered all over the country everywhere, and all over the world.

I do know that Dr. Guiteras and Dr. Carter, who visited my State in the last yellow-fever epidemic, are men who are an ornament to their profession and great benefactors to our people, in that they suppressed the epidemic, they crushed out the disease; at least it was so in my town. If not entirely through their efforts, it was largely due to them.

Mr. President, I have some literature here, and I will have some of it read. I desire to have read from the quarantine convention of Jacksonville, in order that my friend the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] who sits by me may see what that convention said in 1878 about a national quarantine. I will have some of these extracts read, and I will offer them all to be put in as an appendix to my remarks. I ask the Secretary to read, commencing at page 4, down to page 6, and then, reverting to page 1, to read the recommendations of the President in his message.

The Secretary read as requested. (See Appendix A.)

Mr. CAFFERY. I have some more literature which I will ask the Secretary to read. Let him read from pages 29, 35, 36, 37, and 38, giving some Southern newspaper extracts.

The Secretary read as requested. (See Appendix B.)

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask the Secretary to read the extracts from the New York papers.

The Secretary read as requested. (See Appendix B.)

Mr. CAFFERY. I will introduce all of those extracts from newspapers as a part of my remarks, to be placed in an appendix. [See Appendix B.] Those extracts taken from newspapers published in States all over the Union, from Alabama to Washington, in my opinion clearly indicate the opinions of the thinking masses of the United States on this subject. The expressions from the papers published in the South are as strong as the expressions contained in the papers published in the North. There is a wonderful unanimity of opinion expressed all over the different States through these different newspapers. They look at the subject in a plain, common-sense way. They are not unmindful of the security of human life, while they are mindful of the necessities and exigencies of commerce, and they take a plain, sensible, businesslike view of the matter.

The truth of the business is that the question has grown to be too big for the States to handle, and it is only a traditional love of State institutions, in my opinion, that is at the bottom of the opposition to a national quarantine.

After the expressions of opinion from papers North, I am at a loss to understand the position taken the first day of this debate by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. I am at a loss to understand how he could take a position that a bill of this kind interferes with the autonomy of States. I do not see that Senator in his seat, but I would like to ask him, if he were present, what part of the autonomy of the States the bill interferes with.

What is the autonomy of States, and wherein does the bill interfere with autonomy? Does the autonomy of States consist in their retaining barbarous methods of quarantine? Because the people of New Jersey may think they have ample means and abundant equipment to keep out any infectious disease, does it follow that the States all around the Pacific coast, all up the Atlantic coast, and on the Gulf coast have such appliances and equipments and means? Is the whole United States to be left to the tender mercies of these invading enemies because one or two States happen to be able to protect themselves? Is that the doctrine the Senator from New Jersey relies upon? The statement he made that the South wanted to throw the burden of the expenses of its quarantine regulations upon the North is not worthy an answer.

Mr. President, there is the consensus of opinion of the press of the United States on this very vital subject of national quarantine. There are papers published in the very States of the Senators who are most vigorous in opposition to a bill advocating a national quarantine straight out in favor of doing away with State quarantine. I do not say that those Senators do not represent their States, but I say there must be some ground for the opinion of the editors of those newspapers as to the advisability of a Federal quarantine.

I will send up and make a part of my remarks the opinions of various medical journals on the subject of national quarantine. Where you can get the medical fraternity to speak its unbiased mind I believe that their expressions ought to be entitled to great weight. Where the medical fraternity is represented by State health officers I think their interest in maintaining their position discredits to some extent their statements as to the advisability of Federal quarantine. I ask the Secretary to read an extract from the New England Medical Monthly of the issue of March, 1898, from the Philadelphia Medical Journal, and the Medical Record of New York, and the others I will ask to be inserted as a part of my remarks.

The Secretary read as requested. (See Appendix C.)

Mr. CAFFERY. I send to the desk another document, which is a statement by Dr. Wyman of the functions and management and equipment of the Marine-Hospital Service, the number of its employees, and the work that has been done in various epidemics. I ask that it be inserted in my remarks as an appendix. [See Appendix D.] I ask the Secretary to read under the subhead "Medical corps," on page 2.

The Secretary read as requested. (See Appendix D.)

Mr. CAFFERY. I have some papers here which I wish to introduce, and one letter particularly, addressed to me by the manager of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, showing the interruptions of trade and the inconsistencies of the quarantines of Louisiana and Texas. I desire to have that letter read, and the remainder of them I shall put in the RECORD hereafter without reading. [See Appendix E.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANTLE in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as requested. (See Appendix E.)

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Louisiana will yield to me for a moment, I have a letter received this morning from Dr. H. P. Walcott, chairman of the Massachusetts State board of health. He is, I suppose, the highest authority in that State and one of the highest in the world on this part of the question, and as his letter strongly reenforces the views of the honorable Senator from Louisiana, perhaps he would like to have that letter also inserted at this point in his speech or printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Boston, March 20, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: I take the liberty of writing to you upon a subject which is, I observe, now under consideration in the Senate—the improvement of the public health service.

Some years ago, when our former highly valued associate, Dr. R. T. Davis, was a member of the House, this board formally expressed its approval of the bill introduced by him for the establishment of a bureau of health.

A measure substantially the same introduced by Senator SPOONER does not seem to have received the approval of the appropriate committee, and the bill reported by Senator VEST gives all the sanitary authority to the Marine-Hospital Service.

Our experience in Massachusetts with boards possessed of extended, varied, and sometimes contradictory functions has not been fortunate. In fact, the general court is now separating into its component parts all that has remained coherent of the old board of health, lunacy, and charity.

This board wishes to convey to you the hope that it may be found possible to give the sanitary work of the country to some board, bureau, or department exclusively devoted to the consideration of sanitary questions and the study of the best means for preventing the over present communicable diseases which are of so much more real importance than the two exotic diseases which now monopolize public attention.

Yellow fever means nothing to-day for Boston, though twice in the early years of the century epidemics of the disease drove out all who could afford to go. A young man died of yellow fever brought from Jamaica in the Massachusetts general hospital last autumn, and no one here believed that the public health was in peril.

England, not less exposed to disease invasions than we are, finds a complete protection in well-ordered internal sanitary administration. So long as we build all our hopes upon a vexatious system of quarantine we are not likely to be sufficiently careful of our own domestic sanitary arrangements, and it seems to us that a sanitary board at Washington, in much closer relations than have hitherto existed with the various State boards of health, might happily unite the powers of the nation and the individual States more completely than has hitherto been the case.

Very respectfully, yours,

H. P. WALCOTT,
Chairman of the Board.

HON. GEORGE F. HOAR, Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana whether he will yield to me to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business; which motion I desire to make, unless, indeed, the Senator expects to finish his speech to-night.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, retaining the floor.

ELECTION CONTEST—THORP VS. EPES.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the contested-election case pending before the House yesterday, from the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish to inquire whether under the order of the House any time has been fixed for the taking of the vote?

The SPEAKER. The vote will be taken at the close of the debate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. When will the debate close?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know exactly how much time there is remaining. The order of the House allowed four hours' discussion on each side.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the debate proceeds, I wish, upon the suggestion of several gentlemen, to ask the gentleman from Virginia how much time remains for general debate?

The SPEAKER. Four hours and twenty-two minutes remain, if all the time is occupied.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand there is some probability that all the time may not be occupied on this side.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I think I can say that all the time will not be occupied on our side. I hope we shall be able to reach a vote by 3 o'clock.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I desire to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. RHEA; but before doing so the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE] wishes to ask a question. I do not know what it is, but I yield to him for a moment.

Mr. BURKE. Being a member of the committee and having signed the minority report, I assume that I shall be entitled to some time to discuss this case before the House. I had intended to do so this morning, but for reasons which are satisfactory to myself I shall not avail myself of that privilege, and whatever time I may have as a member of the committee I yield equally to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. RHEA] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The SPEAKER. The time on that side of the question is under the control of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS].

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. RHEA].

[Mr. RHEA of Kentucky addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The gentleman has one hour and twenty-nine minutes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I yield that one hour and twenty-nine minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. I presume that gentlemen on the other side desire to consume some of their time now.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER] informed me that they have but one other argument, and they desire to put it in in one speech, and ask that the argument proceed in this way.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that in a discussion of this case there would be no partisanship involved in it, and that those who presented the case for the contestant would content themselves with confining their remarks to the evidence as adduced in the report which they have filed in this House. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] has seen fit to go out of his way to attack the State of Virginia and the people of that State, and I would not be true to the people whom I represent upon this floor, I would not be true to the traditions of that State, if I allowed the aspersion of the gentleman from Indiana to pass unanswered before I enter upon the argument which I propose to make in this case.

It pleased the gentleman from Indiana—I do not see him in his seat, and I wish he were here—it pleased the gentleman from Indiana to say that the people of Virginia had no more consideration for negroes than they had for common dogs. I say that that statement is false, is maliciously false or ignorantly false, and either one of them is as bad as the other. Why, the State of Virginia has spent upon the education of negroes since 1875, $9,000,000. It has erected a college for the education of the negroes; and during the last legislature, when every appropriation for public institutions was cut down in that State, the appropriation for the negro college was not cut down.

I say, and I say it without fear of contradiction for the people of Virginia, that the Democrats of Virginia are the best friends that the negroes have ever found there. I want to know how many negroes from Virginia have been appointed to office under this Administration? How many people, that constitute, as is contended by the gentlemen on the other side, the great bulk of the Republican party, have been considered when it comes to giving out the offices? I believe that in the entire Fourth district of Virginia they have appointed one colored postmaster—at Yale, in Sussex County; and that is all they have done for those people.

I do not care to enter into a controversy or say anything as to what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER] has been pleased to say about the people of Virginia. We all know General WALKER in Virginia. I remember the time when, in the Democratic convention in 1885, I voted for him as Democratic candidate for attorney-general. The people of Virginia know General WALKER, and it is not necessary for me to animadvert or to say a word as to what he has been pleased to say about her people. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to argue this case.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will say what I have said about the people of Virginia. No man can point to a word that I have said about the people of Virginia except what was good. I am a Virginian, born and raised in Virginia, and my ancestors are buried there; but I speak not of Virginians when I speak of those frandulent election officers and election laws. [Applause on the Republican side.] I want to say that the great——

Mr. HAY. I do not propose to yield to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I say that the great majority of the people of Virginia are honest.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I do not want to say anything about what the gentleman from Virginia has said; but when he attacks the election laws of Virginia, he attacks the majority of the people of Virginia who made those election laws; when he attacks what he calls these fraudulent election officers of Virginia, he attacks the men who are placed in office by the majority of the people of Virginia. I say that on yesterday he stated upon this floor that these election laws were fraudulent, and that they could get no fairness under them.

If they are fraudulent, how does the gentleman hold his seat on this floor? If they are so fraudulent, they could be used as fraudulently in the gentleman's district as they could be used anywhere else. He and his colleague from Virginia [Mr. YOST] both hold their seats on this floor under the same title and in the same way as the balance of us do.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that question?

Mr. HAY. No; you have got an hour and thirty-seven minutes of your time left.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I should like to answer the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman holds his seat the same as we do. He may say that he comes from a white district. So do I. My district is of a similar character to his. But, Mr. Speaker, I say it now, and I defy denial upon the part of any man who is acquainted with the laws of Virginia and the white people to say that the people of Virginia, through their election officers or through any other source, have committed a fraud in an election in the Fourth Congressional district, in the Second Congressional district, or in the Fifth Congressional district. Any man who says that says what he can not maintain upon the evidence which has been adduced before this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I particularly desire to confine my argument to the facts in this case, and to the precincts these gentlemen have so ruthlessly thrown out. The ground upon which the majority of the committee of this House have reported that Mr. Epes is not entitled to his seat are as follows:

The first ground is that there should be counted for Mr. Thorp 633 so-called excluded votes; the second ground is there should be nineteen precincts thrown out absolutely, because there were Democratic election officers at those precincts; the third ground is that six precincts should be thrown out because the Republican judge at each one of those precincts was not such a Republican as the machine politicians of these precincts desire; the fourth ground is that they should throw out six precincts on general grounds of fraud without adducing any, and the fifth is by counting certain certificates given by voters after the election was held.

Now, as to the excluded votes, upon what evidence do they propose to throw out this excluded vote? I have got the majority report here, and I am willing to stand on this majority report, and I say that if any man in this House will read it, he can come to but one conclusion, and that is that Mr. Epes is entitled to his seat.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is a remarkable fact that in the two speeches made by the chairman of the committee and by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] they have not given to this House one single solitary fact or evidence of fraud from this report; they have not gone into the record at all; they have not shown why these thirty-one precincts should be thrown out. They have not undertaken to do that, and I submit that no man who respects his oath upon this floor, no man who wants to do justice—and I presume every man here does want to do it—no man who wants to do justice will vote to unseat any member unless he is satisfied from the evidence in the case that enough votes should be thrown out or that fraud has been perpetrated at enough precincts to change the result.

What is the evidence as to these excluded votes? The first votes excluded are 101 votes at the precinct in the First Ward of the city of Petersburg. The facts taken from the record are these: The majority report gives the names of five witnesses who testified as to their exclusion from voting. These are all the names and all the witnesses out of the 101 votes which they exclude in the First Ward in the city of Petersburg which they give. They do not undertake to say, they do not undertake to adduce evidence which will show, that the other 95 men whom they say were excluded from voting were excluded in a way which would authorize the counting of these 101 votes.

No man testifies to an act of fraud, of violence, or of intimidation at this precinct. Not a single witness has been brought by the contestant before this House to prove that an election officer, that a Democrat, that anybody in any possible way connected with the election at this precinct, by fraud, by violence, or by intimidation, prevented these people from voting as they desired to vote. Hill, a witness for the contestant, a negro politician, a leader and captain of a colored volunteer troop, contradicted himself as to discrimination in receiving white and colored voters.

His statement as to the time consumed that day is totally and entirely wrong. The voting day was 630 minutes. That would have admitted only 252 votes, because under our election law two and one-half minutes can only be consumed in a booth. Yet 394 persons voted at that precinct. Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] on yesterday undertook to tell the House that it was the duty of the judge of the county court to see that there were precincts enough throughout the county and city. That is not true. Fifteen voters can apply to the court to have a new precinct established.

This law does not say they shall be Democratic or Republican voters. It says "fifteen voters" shall have a right to apply for the establishment of a new precinct. No application of that sort was made at this ward. Nothing was done toward having a new precinct established in that ward. It was not the fault of the contestee that it was not done. He did not live and does not live in the city of Petersburg, and therefore to say that these people should be counted as excluded voters for the contestant because there were no sufficient facilities to let them vote would be an outrage.

Whose fault was it that they did not vote? It was not the fault of the contestee. It was not the fault of the election officers; they voted over 150 more men than they could have been expected to vote under the law; and it was not their fault that these people did not vote. So that, if it was anybody's fault, it was the fault of the law. Neither the contestee nor the election officers are responsible for the law.

And these people who testify that they were excluded from voting by the action of policemen or election officers are contradicted by the election officers themselves. Mr. Lanier, a citizen of Petersburg, a Republican, who testifies for the contestant, gives this testimony:

> Q. How do you account for the fact that the electors thus shut out, not allowed to vote, were negroes?
> A. I don't know how to account for that, only that they feel awkward in cases of that kind. As a general thing they are willing to give way to the whites and let them vote, or rather, that was the case in this instance. And I will further say that in conversation with those people who came to me about voting, I advised them to follow that mode.

Now, here was a leader of the Republican party in that ward advising colored people to stand back and let other people vote. Why did he do it? He was their trusted leader; he was a white man. They had as much right to press up to the polls as had anybody else. Yet this man, who had control of the forces of the Republican party at the polls in that ward on that day, advised them to give back and to let the white men go before them. So that I say you can not count for Mr. Thorp those 101 excluded voters in the First Ward of the city of Petersburg.

The evidence shows conclusively that very many of the so-called excluded voters of that precinct did not sincerely try to vote. They did not stay in line all day. On this point I refer to the evidence of the contestant's witnesses, C. W. Johns, J. W. Thompson, George Royal, Orris Powell, and others. I have here the names of at least twenty-five witnesses who all testified that they went to the polls and stayed there half an hour or so, then went away, then came back and stayed half an hour or so, then went away. That is no sort of reason for these people having their votes counted. If they had remained in line all day, as they could very well see they must do in order to get in their votes, they could have voted. So that, I repeat, you can not count those 101 votes for R. T. Thorp.

Now, as to the excluded voters in the Sixth Ward of the city of Petersburg. The evidence relied upon as justifying the counting of 306 votes at that precinct for the contestant is so vague and indefinite that no importance can be attached to it. It is proven that more than thirty minutes were consumed by the judges in eating their meals. No complaint was made as to voting illiterates slowly. No witness for the contestant could name a single illiterate voter who was allowed a longer time to vote than the law permits. There was no intimidation or violence proven. No one testifies to any fraud or illegal act of the election officers. So that I say as to that precinct there is absolutely no reason shown why those 306 votes should be counted for R. T. Thorp.

Now, as to the facts in regard to the excluded votes at Boydton precinct, the precinct of the contestant in this case. The contestant received there a majority of 179; and he asks this committee to count for him some forty or fifty more votes. Upon what ground? The majority of the committee ground their claim to counting the excluded voters at this precinct upon the arbitrary action of the judges in deciding that the white and colored voters should vote alternately, regardless of the time they offered to vote.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is a well-understood principle of law—it was determined by a Republican committee of this House in the case of Waddill vs. Wise—that:

> It is preeminently proper in approaching the polls, where there are a large number of voters, that the voters should form a line and take their orderly turns in voting. To prevent any race trouble it is not unusual in many places to form two lines, one white and one colored, approaching the polls in their order and casting their ballots in regular turns.

This quotation is taken from Rowell, page 234. At that precinct, although there were only six hundred and thirty-three minutes in the voting day, 587 people cast their votes; and Mr. Thorp received a plurality of 179. The evidence shows that the alternation was in the interest of the contestant; and there is no evidence of any fraud, of any intimidation, or of any violence of any sort.

I now come to consider the facts as to the excluded voters at Clarksville precinct. Exactly the same reasons are given for counting the so-called excluded votes here as at Boydston. If the voters had not been alternated, very many of the colored voters would have lost their votes. The contestant asks this House to count 56 voters for him at that precinct, when, if the rule of alternation had not been adopted, the contestant would have lost a great many more votes than he did.

It is nowhere shown in any of these cases or at any of these precincts that there was any fraud, that there was any intimidation, that there was any violence, that any officer of the election prevented these people from going to the polls. I defy gentlemen who may follow me to point out at a single one of these precincts one act of fraud, one act of violence, one act of intimidation, or to show that these voters were excluded in that way.

Now, these are the facts as to the excluded voters at Prospect precinct: The contestant asks that 57 votes shall be counted for him there. The contestant received at that precinct a majority of 84 votes. R. N. Wilkinson, a nonpartisan judge, marked the ballots at this precinct. Contestant says of this judge, in the record:

> Contestant has never in his testimony reflected on the honesty and integrity of the witness, he being the judge, or his conduct at the election of Prospect precinct.

This witness says:

> I think if the voters had commenced in the morning as soon as the polls were open, and voted as freely as they did in the evening, they could have done it.

That is, all could have voted, and if they did not vote it was their own fault. It was not the fault of the election officers at all.

Now, the facts as to the excluded voters at Lawrenceville precinct are these: Five hundred and twenty votes were polled at this precinct. A careful examination of the majority report does not show that any fraud, violence, or intimidation is alleged. A careful examination of the record in the case shows that no violence, no fraud, and no intimidation were resorted to by the election officers, or by anyone connected with the party of the contestee.

Notwithstanding the heavy vote polled, there were several intervals during the day when the judges, being at liberty, urged colored voters standing around to vote. A copy of the poll books is filed, designating the color of electors, showing that sometimes the whites voted 3 to 1, at other times the colored people voted 3 to 1 and even 14 to 1. The rule as to alternating was customary, and is adopted solely to facilitate the vote.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. In the Waddill-Wise case the Democratic minority recommended that the election be declared null and void, by reason of the detaining and preventing of votes from being cast.

Mr. HAY. I understand that.

Mr. LACEY. How far would that principle as laid down in that case apply to this?

Mr. HAY. It would not apply to this particular case, for the reason that in the Waddill-Wise case the voters who were excluded gave their votes into a ballot box presided over by United States officers.

Mr. LACEY. The minority of the committee held that that made the election void and that the votes ought not to be counted at all, and the prevention of the voters from voting was held by Judge Crisp and the minority that he represented as invalidating the election.

Mr. HAY. That is true, because it was shown in that case that Democratic challengers prevented these people from voting at all. They kept them out of line, and kept them from voting at all. Nothing of that kind is shown in this case. In this precinct about which I am talking now there were intervals when people could have voted if they had wanted to vote. The colored voters stood around and did not vote, and did not try to begin to vote until late in the evening, when it was a matter of impossibility for them all to vote.

The judges asked them to vote—wanted them to come and vote. They did poll at this precinct 520 votes, and the testimony in the record—and it is irrefutable and will not be questioned—is that there were intervals during the day when these voters were around the polls and would not vote. If the gentleman was familiar with colored voters, he would know that it is one of the most difficult things in the world to get them to go to the polls.

They would rather stay around there all day and enjoy themselves and hold back from voting, and see if they can not get something out of it. That is the character of the colored voter. And I want to say this, while I am on that branch of the subject, that it is a fact well known to every man in Virginia, be he a Republican or be he a Democrat, that if a colored man goes into a booth and votes for a Democrat and comes out and there is a prominent Republican who asks him for whom he voted the colored man will tell him every time that he voted for the Republican ticket, although he has just come from voting for the Democratic nominee.

So that as to this evidence in this case, from those witnesses who were taught what to say, I will venture the assertion that at least one-third of them voted for the contestee.

Now, I want to come to the facts with reference to the nineteen precincts which are bodily thrown out, and I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that every single precinct thrown out by the majority in this case gave a majority for the contestee. They have not thrown out a single precinct which gave a Republican majority.

Now, I say it is dangerous for any House of Representatives to undertake to disfranchise a whole people and a whole community unless upon evidence which can not be questioned. I say to throw out the entire vote of the city of Petersburg, to throw out the entire vote of the county of Lunenburg, and to throw out twelve or fifteen precincts, solely because there were Democratic election officers, is carrying partisanship too far.

I should like to know how any gentleman on this floor would like to have his community thrown out upon any such ground as that. I lay this down as the law, that if every election officer in the city of Petersburg was a Democrat, yet if he conducted the election in that city fairly and squarely, the entire community of this city of Petersburg should not be disfranchised. If they can prove fraud, well and good.

If they can show that these officers in the city of Petersburg ever committed gross frauds, or frauds of any kind, or irregularities which go to the purity of the election, then, I say, throw them out; but I take the majority report and I say they have not touched upon a single one of these precincts. They have not given you the name of a single witness who proves any fraud. I will take the majority report, and I will go through all of these precincts, and I will convince any fair-minded man that there was no fraud practiced in the city of Petersburg on the 3d day of November, 1896.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. I have not had an opportunity of reading the report. Were all of the election officers in the precinct of which you speak Democrats?

Mr. HAY. In the city of Petersburg.

Mr. STEELE. Were there Republicans there who might have been put on the board?

Mr. HAY. There were. One of them was put on the board and did not attend.

Mr. STEELE. Were there not other Republicans there?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. Is not that rather a suspicious circumstance?

Mr. HAY. The law says it raises a prima facie suspicion.

A MEMBER. A prima facie presumption.

Mr. HAY. But a prima facie suspicion is not proof, and unless they can prove that these officers did commit fraud, then they can not throw out the precinct.

Mr. STEELE. If all the officers on that board were of the same mind and desired to perpetrate fraud, would it not be a difficult matter for the opposition to prove it?

Mr. HAY. Oh, no.

Mr. STEELE. I should think it would.

Mr. HAY. Not at all.

Mr. STEELE. Why not, if they connived at fraud and kept the evidence of it to themselves?

Mr. HAY. If they connived at fraud you can show that fact. You can show a conspiracy if they did it, but you have not done it in this case.

Mr. STEELE. How would we go about getting at that fact when all the witnesses to the fraud were parties to it?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Take all the votes polled in one particular place. Suppose the proper number of Republican votes was not returned. You could take the deposition of every Republican who voted at that place and show that a sufficient number of Republican votes was not returned. Would not that show fraud?

Mr. STEELE. Yes; that would.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is the way to get at it.

Mr. STEELE. But that would be very unfair to compel the calling of the whole community as witnesses.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It might be unfair to require it, but it could be done.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I should like to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. HAY. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Suppose that all the judges were Democrats, and not only that, but that they refused to allow anybody to witness the count.

Mr. HAY. I will answer that.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Suppose, moreover, they refused to mark the ballots of the Republicans?

Mr. HAY. But you have not any such proof as that in the Petersburg case.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. The record is full of it.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman says, suppose they refused to allow anybody to witness the count. They did not refuse anybody the privilege of coming in to witness the count. Under the law of Virginia, as the gentleman well knows, there is a canvass of the votes in order to make the ballots tally with the names on the poll books before anybody is allowed to come in. Under the law of Virginia it is practically an impossibility during that short space of time to fix or contrive any ballots other than those that were in the box.

After that preliminary canvass is completed and the number of ballots is made to tally with the number of names on the books, then everybody is allowed to come in and witness the count of the ballots.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. They were not allowed.

Mr. HAY. I say there was not a precinct, and I defy you to put your finger upon a single precinct in this record, where anybody was refused permission to attend the count—not the canvass. I am talking about the count, not the canvass.

Mr. LACEY. There is one point that I desire to ask the gentleman about.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CHICKERING). Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LACEY. What I want to inquire is if there is a provision in the law by which the boards are required to examine and count the ballots and find if the names on the tally book square with the ballot, and if anybody is permitted to be present when that is done?

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman think——

Mr. LACEY. Is there anything that would prevent them changing the whole of the ballots?

Mr. HAY. It will take some time, but I will answer. In the State of Virginia in the election law we have what is known as an official ballot. That official ballot contains, and did contain in the election of 1896, the names of the candidates for Congress, the candidates for President of all parties, and the electors of all parties.

The canvass of the votes, in order to make the names in the box tally with the names on the book, is done in a very short time; and the count is made inside of a quarter of an hour generally. That has been my experience; and I say it would be impossible, if you would look at the record in this case—it would be a matter of impossibility for the judges to scratch the tickets as they are required to do under the Virginia election law and to bring out such a result as is brought out in this case.

Mr. LACEY. What I want to get at is this: Suppose there were three judges, all of the same politics, and they wanted to bring out a certain result; what is to hinder them having sufficient time to throw away all the tickets which have been cast and substitute another set before other people come in and witness the count?

Mr. HAY. They can not do it because they are at work diligently all the day, because when the poll is first opened they have to show the box is clear, and because it would be a matter of utter impracticability to accomplish any result of that sort; and the present election law was passed for the purpose of doing away with anything of that sort, if anything of that sort was ever perpetrated.

Mr. LACEY. In that connection, is there any provision by which the number of official ballots must be counted and accounted for, so that others can not be substituted?

Mr. HAY. The law provides that at each precinct there shall be twice as many ballots as voters at the poll box. The law provides that the judge of the county court, before the election is held, shall stamp all the ballots with a seal, that they shall be put into a bundle in his presence and given to the secretary of the board, and he goes then with him to one of the judges at the precinct and that judge is not allowed to open these ballots until he goes to the precinct. Now, of course, you can not entirely safeguard any election law——

Mr. LACEY. What becomes of the unused ballots?

Mr. HAY. They are directed to be burned up.

Mr. LACEY. When?

Mr. HAY. As soon as the polls are closed.

Mr. LACEY. Then they could be substituted without any trouble?

Mr. HAY. How could you substitute a thing burned up?

Mr. LACEY. Before they are burned up could they be substituted for those which were cast, and then burned up?

Mr. HAY. If you are going to assume that every election officer in the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia is a thief or a cheat——

Mr. LACEY. I am not assuming that.

Mr. HAY (continuing). Well, then, that might be done.

Mr. LACEY. I was simply wanting to see if there were opportunities. In our State under our law we are required to account for every ballot. They must all be accounted for.

Mr. HAY. Now, the Iowa law is practically word for word the Virginia law. That is the Virginia law; and the law of Virginia is practically taken from the Iowa law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been interrupted, and I desire now to discuss to the members of the House the evidence upon which these nineteen precincts of this district have been thrown out and these people of these nineteen precincts have been deprived of their votes.

I want to say that if they can not maintain the throwing out of these nineteen precincts, they can not maintain this case. The first precinct which they throw out is the First Ward in the city of Petersburg. I am going to quote from the witnesses of the contestant and from the majority report. I am not quoting the evidence of anybody now except the witnesses for the contestant. The First Ward of Petersburg gave Epes a plurality of 17. C. A. Clark, a witness for the contestant, does not testify to a single illegal or fraudulent act of the election officers. He is one of the leaders of the Republican party in the First Ward. R. T. McCann, another witness for the contestant and another prominent leader of the Republican party, says he knew of nothing crooked in that ward.

George T. Brodie, a witness for the contestant, says he was in the house all day and knows nothing of the acts of the election officers. Beck and Sheffield, judges of election, testified that the election was perfectly fair, and contradicts Leebert as to the conversation he had with Seyler, one of the Democratic judges.

This man Leebert testified that Seyler, one of the Democratic judges, told him that they had committed some fraud—I do not now recall what the fraud was—and these other two judges testify that no such conversation took place between them and Seyler, and that nothing of the kind did occur. A. W. Redgrape, a tally keeper for the Republicans, who was paid $2.50 for services, does not testify to any illegal or fraudulent act.

George T. Brodie, clerk and Republican tally keeper, received

$2.50 for his services, was inside the house all day, and knows nothing of the election officers. R. T. McCann, paid by the Republican leader $2.50 a day to stay at the polls all day, says he does not know of anything crooked being done by the election officers. Charles A. Clark had charge of the Republican headquarters in that ward, and he does not testify to a single illegal or fraudulent act on the part of the election officers.

Now, these are the witnesses relied upon in the majority report to throw out the returns from that precinct. They are all they do rely upon, and that is, in substance, their evidence; and I ask the members of this House if they propose to throw out a precinct and disfranchise three hundred and odd voters on such evidence as that?

In the Second Ward of the city of Petersburg the only witness relied upon in the majority report is Harrison Waite, chairman of the Republican committee in the city of Petersburg. The only charge Waite brings is that the Democratic judges had some conference with the election officers, that the Democratic judges had some conference with Democratic gentlemen that day, or with men interested in the Democratic party.

The Democratic judges deny this, and show beyond question that it is false, and they account for every moment of their time. Now, suppose they did have some conference with some gentlemen interested in the Democratic party on that day. Does that prove fraud? Nobody was turned away from that precinct. Every man who wanted to vote voted there, and there were no excluded votes.

There has not been adduced in evidence one single act of fraud or violence or intimidation on the part of the election officers or upon the part of any man connected with the Democratic party in that ward, and I ask gentlemen if they are going to vote to throw that ward out? I say it is impossible for them to do it.

Now, as to the vote upon which they rely as to throwing out the Third Ward of the city of Petersburg, where Mr. Epes had a large majority, A. W. Branch, a tally keeper for the bolting Democrats, says that he was 40 or 45 feet away from the ballot box; that he wa not interfered with after he went beyond the 100-foot line.

I want to explain that. The law of Virginia requires that there shall be a line 40 feet from the ballot box, beyond which no one shall approach, and that no crowd or no number of people shall gather within 100 feet of the polling box. Bond, tally keeper for the Republicans, does not testify that he was interfered with. R. B. Friend, tally keeper for the voting Democrats, does not name any illegal or fraudulent act, and was paid by the day for his work. Pascal Davie, a witness for the contestant, does not testify to any fraudulent, illegal, or irregular act of the election officers. Hill, a witness for the contestee, denies that Bond was prevented from keeping a tally, and said he did not know who Bond was.

These ballots in this Third Ward, there being some question about them when it came to count, were opened at the request of the contestant by the corporation court of the city of Petersburg, and what was the result? The returns showed for Epes 377 and for Thorp 137; Epes's plurality was originally 240, when there were returned for him only 222. This was done because the judges throw out ballots if they are invalid for any candidate, and upon the count it was shown that Epes lost by the return from that ward and that Thorp gained by the return from that ward, so there could not have been any fraud practiced there of any sort or kind.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Virginia will suspend until they get done with their caucus on the other side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CHICKERING). The House will be in order, and gentlemen must cease conversation.

Mr. HAY. It is immaterial to me if the gentlemen on the other side do not care to listen. Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to the Fourth Ward of the city of Petersburg, which is also thrown out.

This ward gave Mr. Epes a plurality of 213, and the only witness is William Mahone. He testifies that the election officers held a conference with Democratic officials. This is denied by one of the people who he said had a conference with the Democratic judges, by Jarvis, by Pegram, by Pleasants, and by all the four men who Mahone said had the conference with Democratic judges.

So I say in the Fourth Ward of the city of Petersburg the majority of the committee, knowing the exigencies of the case and the necessity of throwing out that precinct in order to obtain a plurality for Thorp, have thrown out the votes of over 500 citizens because one man testified that the Democratic officials had a conference with some Democratic gentlemen, and they do not regard at all the denial which these Democratic gentlemen give to the assertion made by Mahone.

I come now to the Fifth Ward of the city of Petersburg. This ward gave Epes a plurality of 269. The only witness cited in the report of the majority is H. C. Wilson. His assertions are based entirely upon opinion. He shows himself to be a bitter partisan, and he testifies that he knew of no frauds. This man, whom they rely upon to throw out the voters of the Fifth Ward of the city of Petersburg, testifies that he knew of no fraud being perpetrated at that precinct. What he says with reference to Kilmartin, one of the judges of the election, is fully and satisfactorily contradicted by the testimony of R. C. Kilmartin and J. M. Vaughn.

Every voter who offered to vote at that precinct voted. There were no excluded voters. No illegal or fraudulent acts were proven to have been committed by the election officers at that precinct. It is impossible that any fair-minded man could vote to throw out a precinct which is assailed upon such evidence as this, and that, too, in the face of the report of the majority, which says that these two wards—the Fourth and the Fifth wards of the city of Petersburg—were Democratic strongholds; and because the votes sustain the opinion of the committee announced in their report that these were Democratic strongholds, and because they gave Democratic majorities, they are thrown out without any evidence whatever—without enough evidence to hang a sheep-killing dog.

I say that such a spectacle as the report of the majority of the committee in this case was never seen before in any legislative body, and I hope will never be seen again.

I come now to the Sixth Ward of the city of Petersburg, which gave Mr. Epes a plurality of 94. Much stress is given in the report of the majority to the fact that B. D. Akers produced from his pocket a ballot the day after the election. This is fully and satisfactorily explained by him. No illegal or fraudulent act is proved to have been committed by any one of the election officers at this precinct. This precinct has been already fully discussed by me under the head of excluded voters.

The plurality of Epes in the city of Petersburg was 838. That plurality is thrown aside by the majority of the committee on the sole ground that the election officers were Democrats. The minority respectfully insist that the House can not afford to set such a precedent. It would be against the statute law of Virginia, which in distinct terms says that the fact of all the election officers of a precinct being of one political party shall not invalidate the election held by them.

Such a precedent ought not to be established here, because there has not been shown one single fraudulent, illegal act on the part of any one of these election officers in the city of Petersburg. Why do they not show fraud? Why do they not show illegality? Why do they not point out to this House some one act of fraud on the part of these officers? They can not do it. They have not done it. They will not do it.

I come now to Church Road precinct, which was thrown out. The evidence in this case to which I am going to call attention is the evidence of the witnesses of the contestant alone. One complaint at this precinct was that there was not a Republican judge. The record shows that a man named Hewlett, a Republican, was appointed a Republican judge by an electoral board of Dinwiddie County, that he did not show up on the morning of the election, and that the polls were kept open, as required by the laws of Virginia, one hour in order to give him time to get there.

He did not get there; and if the Republican party did not have representation at that precinct on that day, it was their own fault or the fault of their official, and not the fault of the electoral board of the county. And the politics of this man Hewlett are testified to. He is shown to be a Republican.

It was said by some of the witnesses who were examined at this precinct that they could not see the polling box, but Sydnor Bolling, Colen Blackwell, B. W. Edwards, Henry Evans, and a great many others whom I could name, testify that they could see the polling box; that it was in full sight; that it was right in front of a window to which every man who voted had to go; that they could all see it.

This is all the evidence, gentlemen, upon which they undertake to throw out this precinct. This is absolutely the only ground assigned, except that they say the key to the ballot box stayed in the ballot box all day. That is true, but no harm was done by it. No man testifies that that key was used for the purpose of taking ballots out. People were voting there all day. They saw the key there all day. And when the attention of one of the judges of election was called to that fact in the afternoon, he immediately locked the ballot box and put the key in his pocket. Now, gentlemen, that is the evidence upon which this precinct is thrown out.

The next precinct which they throw out is Columbian precinct, Lunenburg County. William M. Bagley, a witness for the contestant, does not believe or know that the judges of the election were guilty of any fraudulent conduct. W. E. Crowder (colored) and John Hobson (colored) both say the same thing; they do not know that any fraud was committed. William Ingram, a tally keeper for the Republicans and a witness for the contestant, testifies that no objection was made to his keeping tally. So, gentlemen, that is the evidence by which they throw out that precinct.

They throw out Meherrin precinct in Lunenburg County. The complaint made of the judges there was about the way in which they prepared the ballots of those who went in to vote. But A. A. Bigger, a Republican witness for the contestant, says that no complaint was made concerning the judges who prepared the ballots. That is the only evidence upon which they ask to throw out that precinct.

As to Pleasant Grove, in Lunenburg County, the only evidence upon which they ask to throw that out is the evidence of Daniel Townsend, precinct chairman of the Republican party, and he says that the election was perfectly fair. He says that the judges did nothing that was fraudulent or wrong. That is all the evidence upon which they ask you to throw out that precinct, and here is the report of the majority, which proves what I say.

At Plantersville precinct they undertake to throw out the vote upon the evidence of J. F. Eubank. He was the Democratic judge. His evidence is the only evidence which they bring upon which to throw out that precinct. What does he say? He says that nothing was done unfairly; that the election was fairly conducted. That is the testimony of their own witness, and they are bound to stand by him.

In Lochleven precinct, in Lunenburg County, they rely upon W. W. Fisher, who says they had a Republican club of 80 members, and upon Peter B. Bishop, who says they had a Republican club of 169 members; but both of them say that there was no illegality or fraud practiced at that precinct on that day. W. W. Bagley, a witness relied upon by the contestant, says that the election was fair; that a ticket was given him by the judge and was such a ticket as he wanted.

At Blackstone precinct, the home of the contestee in this case—it was not referred to in the argument by counsel on the other side, and it was a great wonder that it was not, because they pretend that there was a mob there that day. The evidence at that precinct shows that the election officers were not guilty of a single act of fraud. It shows that not only were Republicans allowed at the count, but they were allowed at the canvass. It shows that Mr. Epes receives a majority of 273, and this they propose to take from him, for no reason whatever stated in the majority report.

Now I want to read to you the evidence of the contestant's witnesses. Mr. Boswell, the chairman of the Republican party of Nottoway County, advised negroes not to vote. See page 1082 of the record, questions 30 and 33.

R. G. Dyson, a prominent Republican of that county, advised the colored people not to vote. Not a single fraudulent act in the conduct of the election officers is testified to.

R. T. Jones, a witness for the contestant, says there was no disturbance.

A. B. Jones, a prominent Republican, was at the count, and stayed there and handled ballots and saw that they were properly counted.

J. B. Jones, a witness for the contestant and a judge of election, was thought fair enough by the contestant to make him his witness, although he was a Democrat. He says the election was perfectly fair.

Blackstone precinct was not even attacked in the case of Thorp vs. McKenney, and J. O. Jackson, since appointed postmaster at that place, says he could not say there was any crowding the evening before the election took place. He says he saw no disturbance at the polls and no intimidation.

John Gray, a witness for contestant, could only name three in the crowd at any one time, and says that Boswell, the Republican chairman, was done no injury whatever.

A. B. Jones says there was no disturbance at all.

At Nottoway Court-House precinct there is no evidence as to fraud, illegal act, or intimidation. Republicans were advised not to vote. The ballots were opened and counted by the county court, and there were found to be all right and in accordance with the returns.

At Briery precinct there was nothing charged and shown which can possibly throw out the vote. There was no evidence of fraud or illegal act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have gone through with these nineteen precincts and have shown that there was no fraud whatever in any one of them. If I had time, I would go through the other twelve precincts which they undertake to throw out in order to give Mr. Thorp his seat. But I have not the time. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty-two minutes.

Mr. HAY. I believe that if the gentlemen of this House knew the evidence in this case, and knew the evidence which is given concerning each one of these thirty-one precincts which the majority report asks to have thrown out—I believe if they knew what that evidence was, they would not and could not vote to sustain such a report as has been offered here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to distinguish, as briefly as I can, this case from the case of Thorp vs. McKenney. In the case of Thorp vs. McKenney no evidence whatever was taken, and there was not a unanimous report in that case. There were two reports, one by the majority and one by the minority, and that minority report was signed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CODDING], than whom there is not a more fair-minded man in this House.

They stated that no evidence was taken, and that these election judges were without defense, and that they had no opportunity of showing that they had not been guilty of the frauds which had been charged upon them. Now, it is not true, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER], that all the election officers of the city of Petersburg were the same as those who acted in the case of Thorp vs. McKenney. That is not correct, and if the gentleman had read the record, which I hardly think he could have done, he would not have made that statement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude what I have to say with the assertion that I am willing, for my part and for the contestee, to stand upon this majority report. I am willing that every member of this House shall read it, and if, after he reads it, he does not come to the conclusion that it can not give Mr. Thorp the seat on this floor, then I do not know what evidence is, I do not know what law is, I do not know what honesty is, and I do not know what justice is.

I read that report. I have never read the minority report at all. I do not want to read it. The majority report was enough to convince me, and after giving a long, careful, and continuous consideration to the record in the case, after having read every line of the evidence given by every witness in these 2,300 pages of record, I am convinced that no greater outrage could be perpetrated by this House upon any people than would be perpetrated upon the people of the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia if they took away the certificate which Sydney P. Epes holds as their justly, truly, and honestly elected Representative.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been laboring under the difficulty of having to cover a most voluminous case in what is to me a brief time, because in arguing a case at the bar we can usually get all the time we need. I perhaps may have left out something which I ought to have put in, but I want to say this, that the contestee in this case is my personal friend.

He is the truly elected Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia. He has gone in and out among his people for many years. He has ever worn the white flower of a blameless life from his boyhood to the present day. And if any man is deserving the commendation and honor which his people have conferred upon him, it is Sydney P. Epes.

As for the State of Virginia, I can add nothing to the eloquent tribute which was paid to her by my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. RHEA]. But before closing, I wish to call attention for a moment to the impossibility of the people of the Fourth Congressional district voting for and electing Mr. R. T. Thorp.

I have nothing personal to say about Mr. Thorp. But I want to call the attention of the House to his political status. I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that in 1894 R. T. Thorp was the silver candidate of the Republican party for Congress; that he ran as a silver man; that he made a canvass of his district as a silver man; that he educated the people of his district up to believing that free silver was the cure for all their ills.

I want to call attention to the further fact that in 1896 he was nominated for Congress by the silver wing of the Republican party of the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia. I want to call attention to the fact that he was nominated in June, and that he continued to hold his silver views until the 16th of August. Then it was, by some shuffle and deal, I know not what, he was induced to become an advocate of the gold standard, and Mr. Gee, who had been nominated by the Republican party as their candidate for Congress, withdrew.

I want to call attention to the fact that not a single white Republican of the Fourth Congressional district opened his mouth for R. T. Thorp in that canvass, from one end of it to the other. Where was Colonel Brady, the present collector of internal revenue, who lived in the city of Petersburg? Did he make any speeches for Mr. Thorp? Did Mr. Gee, who withdrew and is now a deputy collector of internal revenue, make any speeches for Thorp? No; he made some speeches, but he made them for McKinley and Hobart and never mentioned the name of Mr. Thorp, and I make that statemen upon his own authority.

Mr. YOST. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. YOST. Do you contend that Mr. Thorp lost votes by reason of any division in the party down there?

Mr. HAY. I contend Mr. Thorp preached the doctrine of free silver to the people of the Fourth Congressional district. I contend that the colored people of that district were for free silver, thought free silver was a good thing and that they would gain by it.

I maintain that it was a good thing for the colored voter; and if the gentleman will read the record he will find that there were 200 Republicans who testified they did not vote for Thorp because he had turned over from silver to gold. I contend further that the entire Populist party, which has a vote of about 1,200 in the Fourth Congressional district, turned over from Thorp to Epes, taking down their own candidate and supporting him. How did Mr. Thorp expect to get the vote of the simon-pure Republicans?

Mr. YOST. I want to ask you this: Do you concede that the Republican party was a unit so far as the Presidential ticket was concerned?

Mr. HAY. I deny that the Republican party was a unit so far as the Presidential ticket was concerned. It has been stated here in argument that the census of 1890 shows that there is 5,000 majority of negroes in the Fourth Congressional district, and the poll books and the registrars' books show that 4,903 of these negroes did not go to the polls and vote in 1896.

Mr. YOST. Were not Mr. Gee's friends and Mr. Thorp's friends a unit on that one issue?

Mr. HAY. On what issue?

Mr. YOST. On the issue of the President.

Mr. HAY. They may have been.

Mr. YOST. Then how do you account for Thorp running 734 ahead of McKinley?

Mr. HAY. I am not aware of the fact. As shown in the record, there are more votes thrown out for President than for Congressman, and that would show there were more illegal votes thrown out for President than for Thorp.

Mr. YOST. How do you make that?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman asks me how I make that. He knows how as well as I do. You know that on the official ballot in 1896 the names were so printed that there were a great many more candidates for President than for Congress.

Mr. YOST. Yes.

Mr. HAY. And more votes for President are rejected.

Mr. YOST. All tried to vote for President.

Mr. HAY. And it was more than marking the name.

Mr. YOST. You simply had to mark the President, and not the electors.

Mr. HAY. You had to mark five Presidents and five Vice-Presidents—ten.

Mr. YOST. But the fact is shown that Thorp ran 734 votes ahead of the Presidential ticket, and it is not even contended that there was any division so far as the head of the ticket was concerned.

Mr. HAY. I say there was a contention so far as the head of the ticket is concerned. I want to refer now to the fact that 4,903 negroes did not go to the polls on the 3d day of November, 1896, at all. They were not there, and your 5,000 majority is wiped out in that line. Now, it is assumed here that every negro votes the Republican ticket. It is not true. There is not a thing that is tried to be impressed upon the Northern mind with more insistence than that every negro of the South is a Republican.

I say it is not true. It would not be a compliment to the negro if it were true. We have been educating him. For twenty years we have been spending our money upon him for the purpose of doing all we could to raise him and to give him some sort of education; and to say that they all vote in a mass, that they are so ignorant that they have to follow the dictates of any little Republican officeholder or would-be officeholder is, to say the least of it, a violent presumption.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I have been told that this is a ballot cast in that election [exhibiting].

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir; I voted one of them.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. The peculiar arrangement of this ballot certainly indicates that it might have been arranged for the purpose of committing fraud. Will the gentleman explain why these names are arranged upon that ballot in the peculiar order in which they appear?

Mr. HAY. Pass the ballot over, and I will explain it if I can get the time. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is an official ballot. The gentleman says that it was arranged for the purpose of fraud. The gentleman makes a statement which I utterly deny. The statement was gratuitous on his part, and if he undertakes to say that the people who arranged that ballot arranged it for the purpose of committing fraud, he states what——

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I did not say it was done. I said it appeared to me so from the order in which it was arranged.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, this ballot is arranged so that the candidates for Congress appear at the head of it. There is nothing wrong about that. Here is "Sydney P. Epes, R. T. Thorp, J. L. Thorp," three candidates for Congress, and there is at the head of this, "Election Tuesday, November 3, 1896, for Representatives in Congress, Fourth Congressional district of Virginia." There is nothing of fraud in that.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Why is it arranged to put the Congressional candidates at the head?

Mr. HAY. Why should it be arranged to put the Presidential candidates at the head of the ticket? What difference does it make?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. It makes a good deal of difference.

Mr. HAY. Why, what difference would it make if you can read and write? I voted that ballot, or one like it, and I voted it in half a minute; and any man of reasonable intelligence can take it and vote it in half a minute.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. When you take a ticket to ascertain who are the candidates for President and Vice-President, as they are the first ones to be elected, you naturally look for them to be at the head of the ticket. In no other State in the Union is there any such arrangement.

Mr. HAY. I hope this does not come out of my time. No matter what may be the law in any other State, I say no intelligent man can take that ticket and look at it and say that he could not vote it intelligently in half a minute; any man with reasonable intelligence could vote it in less than a minute.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Did not the last Democratic governor of Virginia denounce this very law?

Mr. HAY. I will tell you about the last Democratic governor of Virginia. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] read an address delivered by this Democratic governor in December, 1897, just as he was going out of office. He had then turned to a gold Democrat, or some other fish of that color——

Mr. STEELE. He did not turn; he just stayed a Democrat. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAY. No, sir; he had turned. He was not as good a goldbug as you are by a long-sight. In 1895 he sent a message to the legislature of Virginia commending this very law under which that ticket was printed. He would have commended it again if he had not known that he had politically cut his throat in the State of Virginia, and that, like Lucifer, he never could rise again. That is the governor you quote, and that is the sort of a man he is.

Mr. YOST. He got to be a goldbug and he got to be honest.

Mr. HAY. He got to be a goldbug and he got in a fix that he was ready to bite the hand which had placed him in the high place he then held. My friend from Virginia [Mr. YOST] says that when he became a goldbug he became honest. Well, so far as honesty is concerned, I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia that the Democrats of Virginia have as much honesty and more than the Republicans of Virginia.

I say that in the record in this case it is proven that S. H. Bliss, a prominent Republican of the county of Prince Edward, offered a Democratic judge a bribe of $75 if he would do his bidding at the election on the next day. Who did the cheating then? Why, it was the Republican leader. So I say to my friend that I leave this case in the hands of the House, fully believing that if they try it according to their conscience, that if they do what is right, and what is just, and what is fair, they will refuse to seat this contestant, and will keep that high and honest gentleman who, if he thought that his certificate was smirched with one single blot of fraud or intimidation or irregularity, would never have accepted it, and never would have taken his seat in this House under that certificate. [Applause.]

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the contestant one hour.

Mr. THORP (the contestant). Mr. Speaker, recognizing the fact that my privilege of addressing this audience is due to the kindness of both sides of the Chamber, I trust that I shall be able to so conduct myself as to cause no gentleman to regret that this courtesy has been extended to me; and I would feel sure that I could do so but for fear that in the heat of debate I may inadvertently bear upon a soft spot which some gentleman might prefer not to have touched.

Perhaps I can not better show my high appreciation of your kindness than by proceeding, without preface, to a discussion of the case under consideration as it is and presenting it to this House as the record discloses it, and not as gentlemen seem to have understood it, judging from the arguments which have been made in behalf of the contestee. I come not here to you, gentlemen upon the one side, as a beggar. I come not here to you upon the other side to apologize. I come here because I believe, as firmly as I believe in the God who made me, that I am entitled to be here in this Chamber as a Representative by right derived from the will of the people of my district.

If I did not believe it, I would not be here. I think that my friends on the other side who know me will concede that I have come here honestly. Certainly no one in my section who knows my past life will question it; and believing that, I propose to present to you, gentlemen, as well as I can within the limited time allowed me, some of the reasons why I think the contestee should be turned out and the contestant be seated upon this floor.

The charges in this case are, first, that 623 voters who were deprived of the right to vote would have voted for the contestant had that right been extended to them. Upon that proposition I hardly think it necessary for me to say anything. If you will read the report of the committee I think you will see that the facts and law there presented are such as to justify you in concluding that these 623, each one of whom was examined as a witness and testified that he would have voted for contestant, should be now counted for him.

Now, mark you, 623 do not represent all the Republicans of the Fourth Congressional district who were deprived of the privilege of voting. Not by a great many. In fact, 1,026 Republican voters of the Fourth Congressional district were standing on election day at sunset in line at the polls, and many of them had stood there all day, without bread and without drink, begging for a right guaranteed by our highest law—the right to cast a ballot—and yet they did not get it.

It does not represent that large element of voters who came to the polls, and, seeing that Republicans had no rights which election officers would respect, went away in disgust. But the committee said, "We think that 623 have been proved sufficiently to come within the strictest rule of the law," and hence they allowed them to the contestant. This was only a fraction of the Republican vote which in one way or another was suppressed.

That unjust and illegal discrimination was practiced against Republicans is clearly shown by the record.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that out of the 1,026 voters who stood in line that night demanding the right to vote only 3 were Democrats? That is a fact. No gentleman can deny it. It is a fact from the record that only three Democrats, who had come in just about night, were deprived of the privilege of voting. I do not mean to claim, of course, more votes than the committee has allowed—623; but I do claim that this many American citizens, having the right to vote in Virginia and who made the effort to vote, should be counted by this House.

As to this claim I would be willing to submit the case right here but for a remark of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. RHEA] in the course of his speech this afternoon. He said it does not follow because these men were in line asking to vote that their votes ought to be counted, because there was not in this case a legal tender of the votes. He said that to make a legal tender in payment of a debt the man must offer the money then and there, and that these men did not offer the ballots then and there. Ah, gentlemen, as a proposition of law relating to the payment of money the gentleman's statement is true. But how could these voters offer the legal ballots when the election officers had the legal ballots in their possession, so that the voters could not get them?

Suppose a man who was going to pay a note came into the bank, and the cashier of that bank had locked up in his safe thousands of dollars belonging to this man and refused to let him have the money which belonged to him. Suppose the man said, "If you will let me have my money, which the law requires you to give me, I will pay my note." Do you not think this would be a legal tender? This is an answer to the gentleman, and a complete one. These election officers had the ballots in their possession; the voters stood upon the outside clamoring for ballots and could not get them. Yet the gentleman from Kentucky says there was not a legal tender of these votes because the men did not have the ballots in their hands. How could they? It was utterly impossible for them to have them.

I hope you have read this report. I could not add anything to it upon this line if I tried; and I have not the time to undertake it. I am content to leave it to the candid judgment of any honest man who believes in manhood suffrage and who will examine the record, to say whether the votes of these men ought to be counted or not, and I will submit this branch of the case upon the facts and reasons clearly set forth in the report.

But there is another charge, and it is one that goes to the core. It is that at many of the precincts of this district where the election officers were all Democrats or worse, incompetent Republicans, or pliant instruments of the machine, the returns are tainted with fraud, corrupt, untrustworthy, and ought not to be counted. Mr. Speaker, when we come to investigate a charge of fraud, one of the first questions that we meet, one that any judicial mind will ask, is, What opportunities did the accused have to commit that fraud? The next question would be, What was to be accomplished by the fraud? And then the judicial mind would consider the proof.

Let us first look at the opportunities. The Virginia election law furnishes every opportunity which the most clumsy villain might desire to commit a fraud without fear of detection. How is that opportunity afforded? Sir, I blush for the name of my State when I am compelled to come here and make this statement to the Representatives of all the States of this Union. What is the Virginia election law? Why, sir, do you know that we have an electoral-board system in Virginia? Do you know how an election board down there is constituted? It consists of three men elected by a Democratic legislature. In that way the electoral board is constituted in every county and every city of the State.

Who are the members of such a board? Democrats all. No representation whatever is given to the opposite side. These three men have power to appoint all the registrars, all the judges of election, all the commissioners—in fact, they have in their hands all the power of an election machine. When and how do these three men meet? So far as Republicans are concerned their meetings are usually star-chamber performances. They meet in secret. The law fixes no time when they shall meet. They are allowed to meet when they please. The Republicans never or very rarely know when a meeting of the board is to be held.

These men control the elections in Virginia. They appoint all the registrars. They appoint the judges of election, and though the law requires that judges shall be appointed from different political parties, there is no appeal from their action; hence they appoint whom they please. These three men—partisans all, Democrats all—have control of the voting booths. They control the printing of the ballots; they have entire control of everything pertaining to the election; and no Republican has any voice at all in the matter.

Now, gentlemen, passing to the ballots, do you know how a man runs for office in Virginia? Why, anybody can run for office there; anybody can have his name printed upon the official ballot. The greatest ignoramus that ever lived can become a candidate for public office. A man who can not write his name may run for governor of Virginia on his own motion, and have his name printed at public expense upon the official ballots. In other States it is required of persons intending to be candidates for office that they shall at least be put up by some political party or by a certain percentage of voters; but down in Virginia all a man has to do is to make his mark upon a piece of paper and slip it into the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth, and his name is printed as a candidate for the office which he may designate. The law does not require that there shall be any means of letting people know who are candidates.

On the other hand, it provides that if any man, by writing, print, or in any other way, does anything to give information to the voters as to who the candidates are, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined. [Laughter.] The fine is, I believe, from $10 to $500. In every other State, by emblems and by printed ballots put up before the day of election, and by every other means that can be used, the voter is made familiar with the ballots and placed in a position to know how he wants to vote and whom he shall vote for. In Virginia it is made a crime to give the voter any information as to the ballot before it is handed to him by the judge of election. The great object seems to be to keep the voter in darkness, and thereby to force him into the clutches of a political opponent who is so placed as to render it difficult to detect any fraud which he may choose to commit.

I went to the secretary of the Commonwealth at the previous election and wrote him a letter, asking him to please tell me who were the candidates in the Fourth Congressional district. His answer is in the record in the case of Thorp vs. McKenna, in which he says, substantially, "I am afraid to do it, because it would lay me liable to a fine." It would lay him liable to a fine to let me know whom I was opposing! In that case the same Democratic party, or the Democratic machine, as we call it down in Virginia, put upon that ticket the name of an ignorant colored man who could not read nor write, and on the day of election, when the ignorant voter went in and applied for his ticket, he found a ballot with the name of this man Thornton upon it, which sounded something like mine. That man came from the town of the contestee in this case, and he was the servant of a member of the electoral board of his county.

This time they improved. By searching the whole district they happened to find a man whose surname was the same as mine, and on the day of election, when we went to vote, the poor voter came in and said: "I want to vote for Thorp." The election officer said: "Which Thorp—J. L. Thorp?" And he, not knowing anything about it, said: "Yes; that is the man." Sir, was that fair? Was that honest? Was that right? I could have found in the county of Nottoway a Republican voter having, I think, the same initials and spelling his name the same as Sidney P. Epes, but before I would have permitted his name to be printed upon that ballot I would spend the balance of my life in the woods of Virginia and never come here at all. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THORP. Unquestionably, sir.

Mr. HAY. Is it not a fact and does it not appear in the record that Mr. Epes, the contestee, did not know anything of the placing of the name of J. L. Thorp upon this ballot?

Mr. THORP. Mr. Sidney P. Epes was not examined as a witness, and he and God Almighty alone know whether he knew it or not. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. EPES. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. THORP. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORP. I will yield to anybody.

Mr. EPES. I will ask you, do you believe, upon your honor as a gentleman, that I knew it?

Mr. THORP. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not had any personal controversy with Mr. Epes. He, at least, was willing not to have it, because when I hounded him over the district and asked for a division of time he never would grant it.

Mr. EPES. I want you to answer that question. But I will say that that was because you wanted to have a joint discussion with me, in order for me to furnish you with a white audience, as you could not get ten white men in the district to listen to you. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. THORP. Why do you come here now and attempt to count the colored audiences on your side, then?

Mr. EPES. Because they voted for me.

Mr. THORP. Why, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORP. I should like to be very courteous, but——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. HAY. I do not understand him to say so. Does the gentleman decline to yield?

Mr. THORP. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that as far as Mr. Epes is concerned personally, I know nothing against him. I hope and trust to God, my friend, that you did not know it. So far as my knowledge of you is concerned, I am willing to say that I am willing to believe you did not know it, if that will do you any good.

Mr. EPES. That is all right.

Mr. LAMB. Do you think there is a man in the Fourth district of Virginia, be he Democrat or Republican, who believes for a moment that Sydney P. Epes knew anything about it?

Mr. THORP. My friend, I know from the record in this case that there are some men in the Fourth district that have not the same high opinion of Mr. Epes which you have got; but I have nothing to do with that. All I mean to contend, gentlemen, is this, that the Virginia electoral board knew it, and they did it for the benefit of Sydney P. Epes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAY. I know the gentleman does not want to be unfair——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORP. I should like to yield to you.

Mr. HAY. I was interrupted a dozen times——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORP. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Does it not appear from the record that you knew of the fact ten days before the election that the name of J. L. Thorp would be on the official ballot, and did you not take steps to correct it?

Mr. THORP. Yes; it appears from the record that one of your men, selected to print the ballots, got drunk and tore up the ballot, and that I picked up the pieces afterwards and found you had put the name of Mr. J. L. Thorp on it, but too late to do me any good. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I regret that my time is so brief, because of all things in the world I do like to be courteous to any gentleman who wishes to ask me a question, but I hope that inasmuch as my time is so short, my friends upon the other side will at least wait until some time when we can get together upon the stump, or somewhere else, if they will ever concede to me that privilege, when I will answer all their questions.

Now, sir, I was going on to show that the returns from these precincts ought to be rejected. I can not hope, within the limited time allowed me, to go into the details, but I would be willing to meet my competitors and to meet any gentleman upon the other side before the Great Maker of us all with that record in my hand and stand or fall by it.

The report in this case shows that 19 precincts ought to be rejected. Why? Because at those 19 precincts, in despite of the law, in despite of every effort that the Republicans could make, we were denied the privilege of having any representation whatever at those precincts, and because at every single one of those precincts there were other evidences of fraud sufficient to vitiate them if this fact had not existed.

Look at the city of Petersburg. Briefly, what are the facts? The record here shows that 351 well-known white Republicans voted for me in that city. The return gives me 800 only, so that in point of fact half of the votes returned for me were given by white men. Yet the evidence is overwhelming that, with scarcely enough exceptions to prove the rule, here as elsewhere in the district the negroes were united in support of the contestant and all who got their ballots in voted the Republican ticket, and, mark you, the negro vote in this city, as well as in every county of this district, exceeds the white vote.

Coming back, sir, just for a moment, I want to show you some facts. There are 33,963 voters in the Fourth district. The colored vote is 19,263. The white vote is 14,700. The excess of colored votes is 4,563. The total vote returned for all Congressional candidates was 23,683, an excess of voters over the vote returned of 10,280.

If this loss is ratably divided between the colored and white voters, it will be seen that of the votes returned 13,431 were cast by colored and 10,252 by white voters, showing that 3,179 more colored than white men voted.

Mr. Speaker, that was a national election. Every effort known to politicians was put forth to bring out the vote. We fought the enemy in Virginia from start to finish, and in point of fact we whipped them. With every effort that we could make to bring out the vote, you find, in a small district, 10,293 men who did not vote at all. Why, gentlemen, in that contest which rocked this country from center to circumference, men traveled from California to New York to vote. Do not tell me that there were 10,293 Republicans and others, nearly one-third of all the voters, who voluntarily abstained from voting in the Fourth Congressional district where we were doing everything in our power to bring out the vote. The small vote actually returned as cast under these circumstances is in itself significant.

Then again, passing on, the total vote returned for the contestee was 12,894, being 2,642 more than the whole white vote cast. Gentlemen say I did not get any white votes. And yet it is in proof in this case that I received 351 white Republican votes in the city of Petersburg alone, to say nothing of the Sound-Money Democratic vote. It is in proof in this case that in the good old county of Lunenburg, now unfortunately under the complete domination of the Democratic election machine, which disregards both the form and substance of the law, more white men came up to the polls and voted the Republican ticket than had ever been known to do so before since the day when Lee laid down his sword at Appomattox. Yet these gentlemen come in here and say, "Oh, but this saintly gentleman who has been described by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. RHEA] received 2,621 plurality, and therefore it would be wrong for this Republican House to seat me; the returned plurality is too great."

When it is remembered that the election was conducted in the district by twelve electoral boards, consisting of thirty-six members, every one of whom was a Democrat; by 106 registrars, all Democrats; by 212 clerks, all but one of whom were Democrats; by 318 judges of election, 231 of whom were Democrats, and the other 87 such Republicans as the electoral boards chose to appoint—some of whom were both educationally and morally unfit to be judges; that the ballot not only contained the name of a bogus candidate, but was in itself a puzzle, designedly so printed as to render it difficult to prepare; that no Republicans were admitted to see the count—when all these facts are considered we may well be astounded at their moderation in giving to the contestee a plurality of only 2,600 from a district where the true Republican majority is well known to be from 5,000 to 9,000 votes. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] They could have made it 5,000 as easily as they made it 2,600.

Take the judges of the election and the clerks, put them in a room where no eye can see them except One above (who will surely hereafter mete out to them their just dues), close the door, stop, as they do sometimes, the very keyhole, shut the blinds, and let them have in that room just as many unmarked as marked ballots to do what they please with, and oh, what a glorious opportunity for manipulation is presented! What effrontery is exhibited by these men when they are charged with fraud! They coolly reply, "You have proved it by nobody; you did not see me put a vote in the ballot box." Until it is given to me as from One above I never will be able to do so, and that is why we complain. That is why we say, "Give us some representation." Comply with the law. Let some Republican be there and see whether we get justice or not. These gentlemen have denied us representation, and thereby willfully violated the law at every precinct in the city of Petersburg, at every precinct but one in the whole county of Lunenburg, and at numerous other precincts in the district.

Now, what is the law? Let us see. The law of Virginia, bad as it is, possesses at least one redeeming feature in this, that it says you shall give representation to other political parties than the dominant one. That is the law. It can not be denied, and yet this plain provision was ignored. The law does not say you must make application to the electoral boards; but we did. We went and bowed to them, on bended knees, and asked that they give us the poor pittance that the law required, and they refused.

The law says it shall be a misdemeanor for the electoral boards to do just exactly what they did. Now, you need not tell me that when men do that which the law declares to be a misdemeanor, punishable by fine of from $100 to $500, there is no harm done. But gentlemen say, "You have not convicted our fellows; you have not even prosecuted them." Why? I can give you a reason. One of these gentlemen was prosecuted. It was proved that he had stuffed the ballot box until the very hinges were stretched. [Laughter.]

It was proved that he had voted a man who had been dead fifteen years. It was proved that he had voted men who had not been at the precinct as registered voters in years. He was, after having interposed every dilatory and technical plea, convicted; and what do you suppose was his punishment? A fine of $10! And to-day this same convicted election officer is holding one of the best offices in the gift of the Democratic party. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Gentlemen, these are the facts; and because I do not want to give any of these rascals any more offices than I can help giving them I am not going to prosecute them. [Laughter.]

Now, let us see. I would not complain, Mr. Speaker, if they would give us honest Democrats. Why, I love an honest Democrat almost as well as I do an honest Republican, and many of them are my warmest friends. I have one close to me now that I believe is a gentleman and a high man, and I do love an honest Virginia Democrat, because I hear they are getting sort of scarce. [Laughter on the Republican side.] In the city of Petersburg if they had given us all honest Democrats, we would not have been here complaining; because if they had given us honest Democrats, instead of 928 plurality for my competitor, they would have given me what people of that city say I am entitled to—1,000 majority. But what sort of men did they give us? Do you want to know? Here are the men.

Mr. YOST. Did you make application for Republican judges on that occasion?

Mr. THORP. We not only made application, but the Gold Democrats also made application and the Prohibitionists made application, but nobody but simon-pure machine Democrats were appointed. Here are the men they gave us there: Of the 18 judges in the city of Petersburg, 11 of them were holding city offices under the Democratic municipal government. Three of them were policemen, detailed possibly for the special duty of attending to elections. Eleven men, whose daily bread depended upon keeping the Democratic party in power, were placed in charge of the polls at that election.

Well, the proof here is that among the eleven were rowdies and loafers, and, as my friend said over there, "tin-horn gamblers." It seems that they must have searched the whole city to secure objectionable election officers. Now, let us go a step further. I am not here to say that integrity should be measured by dollars and cents, nor that honesty should be gauged by the amount of property that a man pays taxes on; but I do say that it is a matter to be considered when you remember that my interests and the interests of all were at stake, and these men were there performing as they did. It is a proper matter for consideration to inquire what taxes these election officers paid, especially in view of the fact that it has been the proud boast of the Democratic party that it represented the intelligence and the wealth of Virginia.

If it represents the wealth and intelligence of Virginia, how does it happen that such men as these are appointed as election officers? Thirty election officers, all white Democrats, assessed for taxes upon personal property for the year $41.83 in the aggregate. [Laughter.] Thirty of them. Sixteen returned as delinquent for the nonpayment of this tax, little as it was. [Laughter.] It appears that these thirty representatives of the wealth and intelligence of one of the best cities in Virginia all together paid a tax of $18.48. Do you know what that means? I will tell you what it means. It means when a fellow has been injured or damaged by these men and brings a suit for damages he will have a barren field to reap his reward in.

A MEMBER. Is that in the record?

Mr. THORP. That is in the record. I do not go outside of the record. I will leave that for the gentlemen on the other side to do. Among the judges we find old offenders, men who have grown gray in the service, men who have been here not at the last election only, but have been here since 1888—the same men. The same men that perpetrated the frauds against Langston in 1888 perpetrated them against me, and they have been doing it ever since. It can not be said that the Langston case was not fought; it undoubtedly was, to the finish.

Now, let us go a step further. All these things might have happened, and yet justice been done, had any Republican been admitted to see the count. But when night comes we go to the door, knock at it, and ask, "Gentlemen, let some Republican come in and see the count." What do they say? "No, sir; you can not come in here," and not a Republican is allowed to come in and see the count.

Mr. LAMB. Are you not mistaken there, my friend?

Mr. THORP. No; I am not.

Mr. LAMB. A Republican and a Democrat are always present at the count.

Mr. THORP. I speak from the record when I tell you that application was made to have a Republican to witness the count, and they were refused everywhere by everyone. A sound-money Democrat, Mr. Alexander Hamilton, one of the best men I know, his testimony is in the record, made application and they refused to admit him. These officers alone had ballot boxes and ballots all to themselves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that this election was begun in fraud. The ballots themselves bear on their faces two distinct badges of fraud. Here they are, and if any man upon this floor wants to carry them back to his constituents I want to furnish them to him, to let them know what a law we have in Virginia and what methods we have. I would like to take such a ballot as that and stamp it under my feet. It bears upon its face two distinct badges of fraud to begin with. What are they? I have mentioned one; they put upon the ballot the name of a bogus candidate, an ignorant Democrat, who himself voted for Mr. Epes.

The man who induced this poor fellow to be a candidate was a Democratic member of the electoral board of his county. A public officer, paid by the taxpayers, goes out of his way to find a man to put upon the ballot to confuse the voters. That is not all. Look at the ballot, carry it home to your constituents, you men that represent constituencies north of Virginia—carry it home to your people and ask them how long free men should permit such an outrage as that. Do you know who printed this ballot? The chairman of the Democratic party of the city of Petersburg, who happened at the same time to hold the chairmanship of the electoral board. He was the chairman of the party, and at the same time chairman of the electoral board, and he had this ballot printed. Who superintended it? The secretary of the electoral board, who happened also to be secretary of the Democratic party.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Are these the tickets they used all over the State?

Mr. THORP. God forbid that they are. They were the tickets used in the city of Petersburg and in several of the counties of the Fourth district, but I hope they were not used in other parts of the State. Each county prints its own tickets. Now, let us look further into the record. What was done in the county of Lunenburg? They appointed as judges all Democrats, except in one instance. They gave Republicans no representation. They refused at some precincts to give any assistance to the voters.

They refused at other precincts to give proper assistance. In one precinct we examined the voters as witnesses, and whereas they had given me 52 votes, it was proved by voters themselves that I received 102. At another precinct ballots were prepared beforehand. You see, this ballot is a curious thing, and even the Democratic judge was afraid he could not prepare it in time and so prepared them in advance and handed them out to Democratic voters already prepared.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other branch of this case that I wish to call to the attention of the House. It is this: These gentlemen complain that the committee threw out precincts. It is not necessary. If the declarations of the voters made in due form and certified to by the voters were accepted as a part of the res gestæ, it would not be necessary to throw out any precinct. We do not claim that this should be done; but there were at thirty-four precincts alone enough men who came out immediately after voting and certified and signed their names to certificates that they had voted for me to have overcome the whole returned majority of the gentleman on the other side. We have not undertaken to count them; but they are there all the same.

I see now that my time is running fast; I have but little left. But before I conclude I want to call the attention of the House to some remarkable statements made on the other side. The gentleman from Indiana, who seems to have drawn his inspiration from the brief of the contestee in this case rather than from the record (I trust that he did so, because I do not believe he would otherwise have made so many mistakes), has made statement after statement which if time allowed I could show from the record to be erroneous. It has been said that the devil can quote Scripture to his purpose; and while I would not compare the gentleman from Indiana with his satanic majesty, I will say this—that he has gone a step beyond his majesty in misquoting the record to his purpose. [Laughter.] I know he did not mean to do it; the trouble was that he was looking through the glasses furnished by the brief upon the other side and did not see the record as it is.

I join with him fully in the declaration that there ought not to be anywhere in this Republic a place where an honest ballot can not be cast and honestly counted. He says there is no place where might makes right. I say there is no place where might makes right, except in the polling rooms of the State of Virginia. There might does make right, or claims to do so, at all events. The motto of those men down there controlling the elections—and I do not speak of honest Democrats, for we have honest Democrats in Virginia—is the motto of Rob Roy, changed only slightly, so as to read:

> That he may cheat who has the power,
> And he may hold who can.

Be it said to the everlasting credit of many of these election officers that they did not avail themselves, that they refused to avail themselves, of the opportunities for fraud presented by the Virginia election law. Their fair record stands out in bold relief against the dark, nefarious deeds of those other men. I for one will never say one word against any honest election officer, whether Democrat or Republican; but I am ready, in old Virginia, to take off my hat to an honest election officer, because the opportunities to be dishonest are so great and so many.

Sir, I would not take one flower from the garland so beautifully woven by the gentleman from Kentucky around the brow of Virginia. My ancestors were among the first English colonists who set foot on the shores of old Virginia. Their dust is to-day mingled with her soil. Her traditions, her history, and the deeds of her great men are in part my heritage. I love her hills and her valleys. I love her mountains and her seacoast. And above all I love her historic fields once drenched with the blood of heroes wearing the blue and the gray, shed in unfortunate fratricidal strife, but yet furnishing at least a grand object lesson to future ages, that the virtue which was taught at Rome and deified at Sparta survived their ruin, was transplanted across the ocean to the New World, and there flourished in pristine vigor upon the soil of America.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen who are practicing this fraud upon me and upon the people of the United States as well, under the pretense of preserving civilization, under the pretense that they represent all that is good, are simply deceiving themselves or deceiving you. They tell you that the colored vote is unreliable. They come here and say, "We admit that the colored majority in the district is 5,000 in excess of the white vote." They come here and admit that no colored man can join the Democratic party. Yet they ask you to count 5,000 of those same colored men for their candidate.

Sir, descended as I am from a long line of former slaveholders, born upon an old plantation not many miles from where I now live, I have known the negro race from my earliest infancy. One of the tenderest recollections of my life is that of a good old negro "mammy," whom I loved second only to my own mother. And I say to this House that those people do not deserve the harsh treatment they have received at the hands of the machine Democracy of Virginia. As a rule they compose our laboring class, and whether as slaves in the very hearing of the guns which announced their approaching freedom, when they stayed upon the old plantation and worked by day to feed our armies and watched by night over the bent form of the old master and over the helpless mother of the boys in the field, or later when other sections of the country were shaken to their centers by labor strikes and riots, the conduct of our negroes deserves the highest commendation. They are guilty only of the unpardonable sin of always voting the Republican ticket.

Mr. LAMB. They do not always do it, my friend, and you know it as well as I do.

Mr. THORP. Possibly, possibly, on account of the excellent qualities in some respects of my friend over there, when he is not running with Bryan or not running on the Democratic ticket, they may sometimes slip in a vote for him; but when a national election comes the negro is as true as the needle to the pole.

Mr. LAMB. Lots of them voted for Bryan.

Mr. THORP. How did you find it out? They would not let anybody else know it.

Mr. LAMB. I found it out, if you must know it, because seventy-five of them who were working at a mill I was running declared they would vote for him because you were a silver man in 1894 and a gold man in 1896.

Mr. THORP. Is that so?

Mr. LAMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. THORP. Well, this is the first time I ever heard of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMB. It is an absolute fact. I would not have said a word, however, but for the tirade you have made against Virginia.

Mr. THORP. Why did not the gentleman come forward and testify in this case if he knew this fact that would go so far toward saving his fellow-Democrat?

Mr. LAMB. I have taken no part in this contest, and I would not have said one word now but for the assault you have made here on the land of your nativity and the home of your birth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. THORP. Why, Mr. Speaker, they say I have made an onslaught upon Virginia. I repel the charge. I have made an onslaught upon a nest of thieves and a band of robbers. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. A division.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I do not believe it is understood by some gentlemen what we are voting upon.

The SPEAKER. The vote is upon the substitute resolutions proposed by the minority.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes 127.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 151, answered "present" 3, not voting 71; as follows:

Mr. COX. I desire to state in regard to the pair between myself and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that he left the Hall this morning very sick, and I agreed to pair with him. If he were present, I should have voted in the affirmative on this question, and I suppose he would have voted in opposition to me. I wish this statement to go into the RECORD. I wish to answer "present."

Mr. JOY (having previously voted in the negative). I see that I am paired with the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON]. Therefore I desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded as present.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I think a vote like this ought to be recapitulated. I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks for a recapitulation.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the original resolutions reported by the majority of the committee.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I should like to have the resolutions reported.

The resolutions were reported, as follows:

Resolved, That Sydney P. Epes was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Fourth district of Virginia, and is not entitled to his seat.

Resolved, That R. T. Thorp was duly elected as a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia to the Fifty-fifth Congress, and is entitled to the seat.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I ask for a division of the resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for a division. The question is on the first resolution.

The question was taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think there is a misunderstanding about that. Will the Chair please state which part of the resolution comes first?

The SPEAKER. The first part. [Laughter.] The Chair does not mean to jest about it, but it is the only answer he can give.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But I understand that the first part seats Mr. Epes, and the Republicans voted "aye" and the Democrats "no."

The SPEAKER. It seems to have been a mutual understanding, then.

A MEMBER. The gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I got it very much twisted if they did not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first resolution.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest that the recorded vote which has just been taken practically disposes of the first resolution. While we are undoubtedly outvoted, our purpose is to get a vote on the second resolution declaring Mr. Thorp entitled to the seat.

The SPEAKER. By agreeing to the first resolution the second one will immediately come to a vote. The Clerk will report the first resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Sydney P. Epes was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Fourth district of Virginia, and is not entitled to his seat.

The resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk will report the second resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That R. T. Thorp was duly elected as a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia to the Fifty-fifth Congress, and is entitled to the seat.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Upon that resolution, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 130, answered "present" 2, not voting 72; as follows:

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PARKING OF CARS IN CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to report to the Senate by what authority the Metropolitan Railroad Company parks its cars in the Capitol grounds and delivers passengers at the corner of B street instead of at the proper terminus of its line.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

STAR-ROUTE CONTRACTS.

Mr. STEWART. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General, in pursuance of the suggestion of the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, contained in the answer of the Postmaster-General to the resolution of the Senate of February 25, 1898 (Senate Document 184, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session), inform the Senate what amount was annually paid to each of the contractors hereinafter named, the amount which was annually paid to each of the subcontractors of each of such contractors, the aggregate amount paid to all of such contractors, the aggregate amount paid to all of their subcontractors, showing the annual difference between the aggregate contract price for the service and the aggregate amount paid to subcontractors for performing such service.

The following are the names of the contractors above referred to: J. M. Boreing, A. A. Call, W. H. Stelle, L. H. Hansberger, Evan Jones, J. R. Anglin, J. D. Franklin, G. Cowles, J. M. Slavens, F. S. Smith, F. E. Means, W. L. White.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is so much noise and confusion in the galleries that it is impossible for Senators to hear what is being read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must request that better order be kept in the galleries. Persons occupying seats in the galleries should be courteous to the Senate, by whose permission they are there. The Chair will enforce the rules of the Senate, and if there is not less noise in the galleries they will be cleared by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the rule of the Senate, an invariable rule universally enforced, that there shall be no demonstrations of approval or disapproval in the galleries, and that if such demonstrations occur the rule must be enforced and the galleries cleared, the guilty and the innocent suffering alike. I hope the Chair will have that rule read and see that it is rigidly enforced.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will take notice of the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, and will do his best, with the aid of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to keep order in the galleries.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the pending resolution will be passed. The answer of the Postmaster-General to the former resolution was to the effect that he could not furnish the whole information desired, but could pick out a certain portion of it. The object of the resolution is simply to meet that suggestion, so that the information may be had without expense and trouble.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND INDUSTRIES.

Mr. FRYE. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the hearing before the Senate Committee on Commerce on March 3, 1898, in relation to bill (S. 624) to establish the department of commerce and industries be printed as a document, and in addition to the usual number 3,000 copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. FRYE. It is a very small document.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I am here by command of silent lips to speak once and for all upon the Cuban situation. I trust that no one has expected anything sensational from me. God forbid that the bitterness of a personal loss should induce me to color in the slightest degree the statement that I feel it my duty to make. I shall endeavor to be honest, conservative, and just. I have no purpose to stir the public passion to any action not necessary and imperative to meet the duties and necessities of American responsibility, Christian humanity, and national honor. I would shirk this task if I could, but I dare not. I can not satisfy my conscience except by speaking, and speaking now.

Some three weeks since, three Senators and two Representatives in Congress accepted the invitation of a great metropolitan newspaper to make a trip to Cuba and personally investigate and report upon the situation there. Our invitation was from a newspaper whose political teachings I have never failed to antagonize and denounce, and whose journalism I have considered decidedly sensational. But let me say, for the credit of the proprietor of the paper in question, that I believe the invitation extended to us was inspired by his patriotic desire to have the actual condition of affairs in Cuba brought to the attention of the American people in such a way that the facts would no longer remain in controversy or dispute.

We were not asked to become the representatives of the paper; no conditions or restrictions were imposed upon us; we were left free to conduct the investigation in our own way, make our own plans, pursue our own methods, take our own time, and decide for ourselves upon the best manner of laying the result of our labors before the American people. For myself, I went to Cuba firmly believing that the condition of affairs there had been greatly exaggerated by the press, and my own efforts were directed in the first instance to the attempted exposure of these supposed exaggerations.

Mr. President, there has undoubtedly been much sensationalism in the journalism of the time, but as to the condition of affairs in Cuba there has been no exaggeration, because exaggeration has been impossible. I have read the careful statement of the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and I find that he has anticipated me in almost every detail. From my own personal knowledge of the situation, I adopt every word of his concise, conservative, specific presentation as my own; nay, more, I am convinced that he has, in a measure, understated the facts. I absolutely agree with him in the following conclusions:

After three years of warfare and the use of 225,000 Spanish troops, Spain has lost control of every foot of Cuba not surrounded by an actual intrenchment and protected by a fortified picket line.

She holds possession with her armies of the fortified seaboard towns, not because the insurgents could not capture many of them, but because they are under the virtual protection of Spanish war ships, with which the revolutionists can not cope.

The revolutionists are in absolute and almost peaceful possession of nearly one-half of the island, including the eastern provinces of Santiago de Cuba and Puerto Principe. In those provinces they have an established form of government, levy and collect taxes, maintain armies, and generally levy a tax or tribute upon the principal plantations in the other provinces, and, as is commonly believed, upon the entire railway system of the island.

In the four so-called Spanish provinces there is neither cultivation nor railway operation except under strong Spanish military protection or by consent of the revolutionists in consideration of tribute paid.

SUFFERINGS OF THE COUNTRY PEOPLE.

Under the inhuman policy of Weyler not less than 400,000 self-supporting, simple, peaceable, defenseless country people were driven from their homes in the agricultural portions of the Spanish provinces to the cities and imprisoned upon the barren waste outside the residence portions of these cities and within the lines of intrenchment established a little way beyond. Their humble homes were burned, their fields laid waste, their implements of husbandry destroyed, their live stock and food supplies for the most part confiscated. Most of these people were old men, women, and children. They were thus placed in hopeless imprisonment, without shelter or food. There was no work for them in the cities to which they were driven. They were left there with nothing to depend upon except the scanty charity of the inhabitants of the cities and with slow starvation their inevitable fate.

It is conceded upon the best ascertainable authority, and those who have had access to the public records do not hesitate to state, that upward of 210,000 of these people have already perished, all from starvation or from diseases incident to starvation.

The Government of Spain has never contributed one dollar to house, shelter, feed, or provide medical attention for these its own citizens. Such a spectacle exceeds the scenes of the Inferno as painted by Dante.

There has been no amelioration of the situation except through the charity of the people of the United States. There has been no diminution in the death rate among these reconcentrados except as the death supply is constantly diminished. There can be no relief and no hope except through the continued charity of the American people until peace shall be fully restored in the island and until a humane government shall return these people to their homes and provide for them anew the means with which to begin again the cultivation of the soil.

Spain can not put an end to the existing condition. She can not conquer the insurgents. She can not reestablish her sovereignty over any considerable portion of the interior of the island. The revolutionists, while able to maintain themselves, can not drive the Spanish army from the fortified seacoast towns.

The situation, then, is not war as we understand it, but a chaos of devastation and depopulation of undefined duration, whose end no man can see.

I will cite but a few facts that came under my personal observation, all tending to fully substantiate the absolute truth of the foregoing propositions. I could detail incidents by the hour and by the day, but the Senator from Vermont has absolutely covered the case. I have no desire to deal in horrors. If I had my way, I would shield the American public even from the photographic reproductions of the awful scenes that I viewed in all their original ghastliness.

SPAIN'S FORCES IN CUBA.

Spain has sent to Cuba more than 225,000 soldiers to subdue the island, whose entire male population capable of bearing arms did not exceed at the beginning that number. These soldiers were mostly boys, conscripts from the Spanish hills. They are well armed, but otherwise seem to be absolutely unprovided for. They have been without tents and practically without any of the necessary supplies and equipment for service in the field. They have been put in barracks, in warehouses, and old buildings in the cities where all sanitary surroundings have been of the worst possible character. They have seen but little discipline, and I could not ascertain that such a thing as a drill had taken place in the island.

There are less than 60,000 now available for duty. The balance are dead or sick in hospitals, or have been sent back to Spain as incapacitated for further service. It is currently stated that there are now 37,000 sick in hospital. I do not believe that the entire Spanish army in Cuba could stand an engagement in the open field against 20,000 well-disciplined American soldiers.

As an instance of the discipline among them, I cite the fact that I bought the machete of a Spanish soldier on duty at the wharf in Matanzas, on his offer, for $3 in Spanish silver. He also seemed desirous of selling me his only remaining arm, a revolver.

The Spanish soldiers have not been paid for some months, and in my judgment they, of all the people on the earth, will most gladly welcome any result which would permit them to return to their homes in Spain.

The pictures in the American newspapers of the starving reconcentrados are true. They can all be duplicated by the thousands. I never saw, and please God I may never again see, so deplorable a sight as the reconcentrados in the suburbs of Matanzas. I can never forget to my dying day the hopeless anguish in their despairing eyes. Huddled about their little bark huts, they raised no voice of appeal to us for alms as we went among them.

There was almost no begging by the reconcentrados themselves. The streets of the cities are full of beggars of all ages and all conditions, but they are almost wholly of the residents of the cities and largely of the professional-beggar class. The reconcentrados—men, women, and children—stand silent, famishing with hunger. Their only appeal comes from their sad eyes, through which one looks as through an open window into their agonizing souls.

The present autonomist governor of Matanzas (who speaks excellent English) was inaugurated in November last. His records disclose that at the city of Matanzas there were 1,200 deaths in November, 1,200 in December, 700 in January, and 500 in February—3,600 in four months, and those four months under the administration of a governor whom I believe to be a truly humane man. He stated to me that on the day of his inauguration, which I think was the 12th of last November, to his personal knowledge 15 persons died in the public square in front of the executive mansion. Think of it, oh, my countrymen! Fifteen human beings dying from starvation in the public square, in the shade of the palm trees, and amid the beautiful flowers, in sight of the open windows of the executive mansion!

The governor of Matanzas told us that for the most part the people of the city of Matanzas had done all they could for the reconcentrados; and after studying the situation over I believe his statement is true. He said the condition of affairs in the island had destroyed the trade, the commerce, and the business of the city; that most of the people who had the means assisted the reconcentrados with food just as long as they could, but he said to us that there were thousands of the people living in fine houses on marble floors who were in deep need themselves and who did not know from one day to the other where their food supply was coming from.

SPAIN'S SELFISHNESS A STENCH IN THE NOSTRILS OF CIVILIZED NATIONS.

The ability of the people of Matanzas to aid is practically exhausted. The governor told us that he had expended all of his salary and all that he could possibly afford of his private means in relief work. He is willing that the reconcentrados shall repass the picket line and go back to seek work in the interior of the island. He expresses his willingness to give them passes for that purpose, but they are no longer physically able to take advantage of that offer. They have no homes to return to; their fields have grown up to weeds; they have no oxen, no implements of husbandry with which to begin anew the cultivation of the soil. Their only hope is to remain where they are, to live as long as they can on an insufficient charity, and then die. What is true at Matanzas is true at all the other cities where these reconcentrados have been gathered.

The Government of Spain has not and will not appropriate one dollar to save these people. They are now being attended and nursed and administered to by the charity of the United States. Think of the spectacle! We are feeding these citizens of Spain; we are nursing their sick; we are saving such as can be saved, and yet there are those who still say it is right for us to send food, but we must keep hands off. I say that the time has come when muskets ought to go with the food.

We asked the governor if he knew of any relief for these people except through the charity of the United States. He did not. We then asked him, "Can you see any end to this condition of affairs?" He could not. We asked him, "When do you think the time will come that these people can be placed in a position of self-support?" He replied to us, with deep feeling, "Only the good God or the great Government of the United States can answer that question." I hope and believe that the good God by the great Government of the United States will answer that question.

I shall refer to these horrible things no further. They are there. God pity me; I have seen them; they will remain in my mind forever—and this is almost the twentieth century. Christ died nineteen hundred years ago, and Spain is a Christian nation. She has set up more crosses in more lands, beneath more skies, and under them has butchered more people than all the other nations of the earth combined.

Europe may tolerate her existence as long as the people of the Old World wish. God grant that before another Christmas morning the last vestige of Spanish tyranny and oppression will have vanished from the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Vermont has seen all these things; he knows all these things; he has described all these things; but after describing them he says he has nothing to propose, no remedy to suggest. I have. I am only an humble unit in the great Government of the United States, but I should feel myself a traitor did I remain silent now.

SILENCE AND MODERATION NO LONGER TOLERABLE.

I counseled silence and moderation from this floor when the passion of the nation seemed at white heat over the destruction of the Maine; but it seems to me the time for action has now come. Not action in the Maine case! I hope and trust that this Government will take action on the Cuban situation entirely outside of the Maine case. When the Maine report is received, if it be found that our ship and sailors were blown up by some outside explosive, we will have ample reparation without quibble or delay; and if the explosion can be traced to Spanish official sources there will be such swift and terrible punishment adjudged as will remain a warning to the world forever.

What shall the United States do, Mr. President?

I am a Republican, and I turn to the last platform of my party and I read:

From the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other American people to free themselves from European domination. We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty.

The Government of Spain, having lost control of Cuba and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident American citizens, or to comply with its treaty obligations, we believe that the Government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace and give independence to the island.

Mr. President, when that declaration was read before the St. Louis convention, over which I had the distinguished honor to preside, it was greeted with a mighty shout which seemed to lift the very roof of that great convention hall, and it was adopted as a part of the platform of the Republican party by unanimous vote. On the 29th day of June, 1896, William McKinley, standing upon his vine-clad porch at Canton, Ohio, in accepting the nomination then officially tendered him, said:

The platform adopted by the Republican national convention has received my careful consideration and has my unqualified approval. It is a matter of gratification to me, as I am sure it must be to you and Republicans everywhere and to all our people, that the expressions of its declaration of principles are so direct, clear, and emphatic. They are too plain and positive to leave any chance for doubt or question as to their purport and meaning.

That platform of the Republican party, that indorsement by its nominee for President, was ratified by more than 7,000,000 American voters. That platform has marked my path of duty from the hour of its adoption up to the present time.

RECORD OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IN KEEPING ITS PLEDGES.

It is an honored boast of the Republican party that it always keeps its promises and that its platform declarations are always carried out by its Administrations. I have no reason to doubt, I have every reason to believe, that the present Chief Magistrate of the United States still stands upon the platform of the Republican party. I have no reason to doubt, I have every reason to believe, that he will make its fulfillment a part of the glorious history of the world.

Mr. President, that platform was adopted almost two years ago. Has there been any such change in the Cuban situation as to relieve the Republican party from its obligations? None whatever. There has been no change except such as to strengthen the force of our platform assertion that Spain has lost control of the island. Twice within the last two years I have voted for a resolution according the rights of belligerents to the Cuban revolutionists.

I believed at those times, I still believe, that such a recognition on our part would have enabled the Cuban patriots to have achieved independence for themselves; that it would have given them such a standing in the money markets of the world, such rights on the sea, such flag on the land, that ere this the independence of Cuba would have been secured, and that without cost or loss of blood or treasure to the people of the United States. But that time has passed; it is too late to talk about resolutions according belligerent rights; and mere resolutions recognizing the independence of the Cuban Republic would avail but little. Our platform demands that the United States shall actively use its influence for the independence of the island.

I am not here to criticise the present Administration. I yield to no man living in my respect, my admiration for, and my confidence in the judgment, the wisdom, the patriotism, the Americanism of William McKinley. When he entered upon his Administration he faced a difficult situation. It was his duty to proceed with care and caution. At the first available opportunity he addressed a note to Spain, in which he gave that Government notice, as set forth in his message to the Congress of the United States, that the United States—

Could be required to wait only a reasonable time for the mother country to establish its authority and restore peace and order within the borders of the island; that we could not contemplate an indefinite period for the accomplishment of this result.

The President further advised us:

This Government has never in any way abrogated its sovereign prerogative of reserving to itself the determination of its policy and course according to its own high sense of right and in consonance with the dearest interests and convictions of our own people should the prolongation of the strife so demand.

This was the proper, the statesmanlike beginning of the performance of the promise of the Republican platform. It was in accordance with the diplomatic usages and customs of civilized nations. In the meantime the whole situation apparently changed. In Spain the liberal ministry of Sagasta succeeded that of Canovas; the cruel and inhuman Weyler was recalled, and succeeded by the humane Blanco, who, under the Sagasta ministry, has unquestionably made every effort to bring about peace in the island of Cuba under the promise of autonomy—a decided advance beyond any proposition ever before made for the participation of the Cubans in their own domestic affairs.

It was the plain duty of the President of the United States to give to the liberal ministry of Spain a reasonable time in which to test its proposed autonomy. That time has been given. Autonomy is conceded the wide world over to be a conspicuous failure. The situation in Cuba has only changed for the worse. Sagasta is powerless; Blanco is powerless to put an end to the conflict, to rehabilitate the island, or to relieve the suffering, starvation, and distress.

TIME FOR ACTION NOW.

The time for action has, then, come. No greater reason for it can exist to-morrow than exists to-day. Every hour's delay only adds another chapter to the awful story of misery and death. Only one power can intervene—the United States of America. Ours is the one great nation of the New World, the mother of American republics. She holds a position of trust and responsibility toward the peoples and the affairs of the whole Western Hemisphere.

It was her glorious example which inspired the patriots of Cuba to raise the flag of liberty in her eternal hills. We can not refuse to accept this responsibility which the God of the universe has placed upon us as the one great power in the New World. We must act! What shall our action be? Some say the acknowledgment of the belligerency of the revolutionists. As I have already shown, the hour and the opportunity for that have passed away.

Others say, Let us by resolution or official proclamation recognize the independence of the Cubans. It is too late even for such recognition to be of great avail. Others say, Annexation to the United States. God forbid! I would oppose annexation with my latest breath. The people of Cuba are not our people; they can not assimilate with us; and beyond all that I am utterly and unalterably opposed to any departure from the declared policy of the fathers which would start this Republic for the first time upon a career of conquest and dominion utterly at variance with the avowed purposes and the manifest destiny of popular government.

Let the world understand that the United States does not propose to annex Cuba, that it is not seeking a foot of Cuban soil or a dollar of Spanish treasure. Others say, Let us intervene for the pacification of the island, giving to its people the greatest measure of autonomy consistent with the continued sovereignty of Spain. Such a result is no longer possible. It is enough to say that it would be resisted by all classes of the Cuban population, and its attempt would simply transfer the putting down of the revolution and the subjugation of the Cuban patriots to the armies of the United States.

There is also said to be a syndicate organization in this country, representing the holders of Spanish bonds, who are urging that the intervention of the United States shall be for the purchase of the island or for the guaranteeing of the Spanish debt incurred in the attempted subjugation of the Cuban revolutionists. Mr. President, it is idle to think for a single moment of such a plan. The American people will never consent to the payment of one dollar, to the guaranteeing of one bond, as the price paid to Spain for her relinquishment of the island she has so wantonly outraged and devastated.

INTERVENTION FOR INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. President, there is only one action possible, if any is taken; that is, intervention for the independence of the island; intervention that means the landing of an American army on Cuban soil, the deploying of an American fleet off Habana; intervention which says to Spain, Leave the island, withdraw your soldiers, leave the Cubans, these brothers of ours in the New World, to form and carry on government for themselves. Such intervention on our part would not of itself be war. It would undoubtedly lead to war. But if war came it would come by act of Spain in resistance of the liberty and the independence of the Cuban people.

Some say these Cubans are incapable of self-government; that they can not be trusted to set up a republic. Will they ever become better qualified under Spanish rule than they are to-day? Sometime or other the dominion of kings must cease on the Western Continent.

The Senator from Vermont has done full justice to the native population of Cuba. He has studied them, and he knows that of all the people on the island they are the best qualified and fitted for government. Certainly any government by the Cuban people would be better than the tyranny of Spain.

Mr. President, there was a time when "jingoism" was abroad in the land; when sensationalism prevailed, and when there was a distinct effort to inflame the passions and prejudices of the American people and precipitate a war with Spain. That time has passed away. "Jingoism" is long since dead. The American people have waited and waited and waited in patience; yea, in patience and confidence—confidence in the belief that decisive action would be taken in due season and in a proper way. To-day all over this land the appeal comes up to us; it reaches us from every section and from every class. That appeal is now for action.

In an interview of yesterday, the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is reported as saying:

Events have crowded on too rapidly, and the President has been carried off his feet.

I know of no warrant for such an assertion, but I do know this, that unless Congress acts promptly, meeting this grave crisis as it should be met, we will be swept away, and we ought to be swept away, by the tidal wave of American indignation.

The President has not been carried off his feet.

The Administration has been doing its whole duty. With rare foresight and statesmanship it has hastened to make every possible preparation for any emergency. If it be true that the report in the Maine case has been delayed, it has been delayed in order that we might be prepared at all points for defensive and offensive action. There are some who say, but they are mostly those who have procrastinated from the beginning up to the present time, "Let Congress hold its peace, adjourn, go home and leave the President to act."

I for one believe that the Congress of the United States is an equal and coordinate branch of the Federal Government, representing the combined judgment and wisdom of the many. It can more safely be depended on than the individual judgment and wisdom of any one man. I am a Senator of the United States, and I will never consent to abdicate my right to participate in the determination as to what is the solemn duty of this great Republic in this momentous and fateful hour. We are not in session to hamper or cripple the President; we are here to advise and assist him. Congress can alone declare war; Congress can alone levy taxes; and to this Congress the united people of this broad land, from sea to sea, from lake to gulf, look to voice their wishes and execute their will.

VOICE OF THE MONEY CHANGERS AGAINST INTERVENTION.

Mr. President, against the intervention of the United States in this holy cause there is but one voice of dissent; that voice is the voice of the money changers. They fear war! Not because of any Christian or ennobling sentiment against war and in favor of peace, but because they fear that a declaration of war, or the intervention which might result in war, would have a depressing effect upon the stock market.

Mr. President, I do not read my duty from the ticker; I do not accept my lessons in patriotism from Wall street. I deprecate war. I hope and pray for the speedy coming of the time when the sword of the soldier will no longer leap from its scabbard to settle disputes between civilized nations. But, it is evident, looking at the cold facts, that a war with Spain would not permanently depreciate the value of a single American stock or bond.

War with Spain would increase the business and the earnings of every American railroad, it would increase the output of every American factory, it would stimulate every branch of industry and domestic commerce, it would greatly increase the demand for American labor, and in the end every certificate that represented a share in an American business enterprise would be worth more money than it is to-day. But in the meantime the specter of war would stride through the stock exchanges, and many of the gamblers around the board would find their ill-gotten gains passing to the other side of the table.

Let them go; what one man loses at the gambling table his fellow-gambler wins. It is no concern of yours, it is no concern of mine, whether the "bulls" or the "bears" have the best of these stock deals. They do not represent American sentiment; they do not represent American patriotism. Let them take their chances as they can. Their weal or woe is of but little importance to the liberty-loving people of the United States. They will not do the fighting; their blood will not flow; they will keep on dealing in options on human life. Let the men whose loyalty is to the dollar stand aside while the men whose loyalty is to the flag come to the front. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. THURSTON. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. HALE. I wish merely to correct a statement. I was not present when the Senator from Nebraska made it.

Mr. THURSTON. The Senator can make his correction after I get through. It will be entirely proper.

Mr. HALE. I shall be called away from the Chamber. It is only a single matter.

I was informed, not being present, that the Senator from Nebraska referred to an alleged interview quoting me as saying that in the present emergency the President has been carried off his feet. I not only never stated anything of the kind or made any such statement, but I do not believe it. I think the President has been eminently wise and calm in the whole matter, and the interview does not represent me properly. I thank the Senator for allowing me to make this statement. It is better to make it now than to wait until the Senator concludes.

Mr. THURSTON. I am glad to have the Senator's disclaimer. I took the statement from the public press. It has gone all over this land.

Mr. HALE. Yes. I heard it from the Senator from New Hampshire, and I disclaimed it yesterday.

HONOR OF THE NATION ABOVE ALL OTHER CONSIDERATIONS.

Mr. THURSTON. There are some who lift their voices in the land and in the open light of day insist that the Republican party will not act, for they say it sold out to the capitalists and the money changers at the last national election. It is not so. God forbid! The 7,000,000 freemen who voted for the Republican party and for William McKinley did not mortgage the honor of this nation for a campaign fund, and if the time ever comes when the Republican party hesitates in its course of duty because of any undue anxiety for the welfare of the accumulated wealth of the nation, then let the Republican party be swept from the face of the earth and be succeeded by some other party, by whatever name it may be called, which will represent the patriotism, the honesty, the loyalty, and the devotion that the Republican party exhibited under Abraham Lincoln in 1861.

Mr. President, there are those who say that the affairs of Cuba are not the affairs of the United States, who insist that we can stand idly by and see that island devastated and depopulated, its business interests destroyed, its commercial intercourse with us cut off, its people starved, degraded, and enslaved. It may be the naked legal right of the United States to stand thus idly by.

I have the legal right to pass along the street and see a helpless dog stamped into the earth under the heels of a ruffian. I can pass by and say that is not my dog. I can sit in my comfortable parlor with my loved ones gathered about me, and through my plate-glass window see a fiend outraging a helpless woman near by, and I can legally say this is no affair of mine—it is not happening on my premises; and I can turn away and take my little ones in my arms, and, with the memory of their sainted mother in my heart, look up to the motto on the wall and read, "God bless our home."

But if I do, I am a coward and a cur unfit to live, and, God knows, unfit to die. And yet I can not protect the dog nor save the woman without the exercise of force.

We can not intervene and save Cuba without the exercise of force, and force means war; war means blood. The lowly Nazarene on the shores of Galilee preached the divine doctrine of love, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." Not peace on earth at the expense of liberty and humanity. Not good will toward men who despoil, enslave, degrade, and starve to death their fellow-men. I believe in the doctrine of Christ. I believe in the doctrine of peace; but, Mr. President, men must have liberty before there can come abiding peace.

Intervention means force. Force means war. War means blood. But it will be God's force. When has a battle for humanity and liberty ever been won except by force? What barricade of wrong, injustice, and oppression has ever been carried except by force?

THE PART FORCE HAS PLAYED IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY.

Force compelled the signature of unwilling royalty to the great Magna Charta; force put life into the Declaration of Independence and made effective the Emancipation Proclamation; force beat with naked hands upon the iron gateway of the Bastile and made reprisal in one awful hour for centuries of kingly crime; force waved the flag of revolution over Bunker Hill and marked the snows of Valley Forge with blood-stained feet; force held the broken line at Shiloh, climbed the flame-swept hill at Chattanooga, and stormed the clouds on Lookout heights; force marched with Sherman to the sea, rode with Sheridan in the valley of the Shenandoah, and gave Grant victory at Appomattox; force saved the Union, kept the stars in the flag, made "niggers" men. The time for God's force has come again. Let the impassioned lips of American patriots once more take up the song:

> In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
> With a glory in His bosom that transfigured you and me,
> As He died to make men holy, let us die to make men free,
> For God is marching on.

Others may hesitate, others may procrastinate, others may plead for further diplomatic negotiation, which means delay, but for me, I am ready to act now, and for my action I am ready to answer to my conscience, my country, and my God.

Mr. President, in the cable that moored me to life and hope the strongest strands are broken. I have but little left to offer at the altar of Freedom's sacrifice, but all I have I am glad to give. I am ready to serve my country as best I can in the Senate or in the field. My dearest wish, my most earnest prayer to God is this, that when death comes to end all, I may meet it calmly and fearlessly as did my beloved, in the cause of humanity, under the American flag. [Long continued applause in the galleries.]

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to make a request. I was unavoidably absent from the Senate for nearly three weeks, during which time the Private Pension Calendar was somewhat increased. The House of Representatives has passed a very considerable number of Senate pension bills, while the Senate, I think, has passed but two House bills. Senators are urging that their bills shall have consideration in the House of Representatives. They are likewise urging that we shall as speedily as possible reach the Private Pension Calendar for the purpose of clearing off the bills that are now on it. There are about fifty House bills on the Calendar.

I rise to request that on Monday next, after the routine morning business be concluded, the remainder of the morning hour until 2 o'clock, if that time be necessary, shall be devoted to the consideration of private bills that are unobjected to.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether it would not probably be as well to fix a distinct hour for the purpose—say 2 o'clock?

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps we can get to it before 2 o'clock. I will modify my request, and ask the Senate to agree that at 1 o'clock on Monday next an hour be given for the consideration of unobjected pension cases on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and that will be the order for Monday next at 1 o'clock.

IMPROVEMENT OF NEW BEDFORD HARBOR, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4127) to provide for dredging the channel in the harbor of New Bedford, Mass.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $34,122 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to dredge the channel in the harbor of New Bedford, Mass., leading to the bridge between that city and Fairhaven.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES DENNY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 4037) to correct the military record of James Denny.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to correct the military record of James Denny, of Company A, subsequently B, Twelfth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, afterwards Company L of the Third Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, by striking therefrom the words "dropped from the rolls by Capt. W. T. Leeper, December 10, 1862," and substituting therefor the words "discharged June 30, 1862," and to issue to him a discharge as of date June 30, 1862.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF BIRDS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4124) for the protection of song birds.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 2, to strike out the words "the importation of which is forbidden by the first section of this act" and insert "to be used or sold;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the transportation of birds, feathers, or parts of birds, to be used or sold, from any State or Territory of the United States, to or through any other State or Territory of the United States, is hereby prohibited. Whoever shall violate the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction in the district where the offense shall have been committed, be punished for each such offense by a fine of $50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following as a new section:

SEC. 3. That the sale, keeping, or offering for sale, within any Territory of the United States, or within the District of Columbia, of birds, feathers, or parts of birds for ornamental purposes, except such as are excepted in the first section of this act, be, and the same is hereby, prohibited. Whoever shall violate the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction, be punished for each such offense by a fine of $50.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of the bill. I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the title of the bill. It is entitled "A bill for the protection of song birds," and there is not in the body of the bill a solitary provision with reference to a song bird. It refers to birds of all kinds.

Mr. HOAR. The object of the bill is to protect what I am sure every Senator desires to protect, the song birds which give so much of the charm to life and which are being destroyed all over the world. They are imported into some foreign countries by millions for the purpose of ornament. That is the main object and purpose of the bill. But for the description in the text the term "song bird" is rather vague and indefinite, because there are some food birds that have beautiful song. The woodcock, for instance, is a fine singer. Therefore that phrase was not used in the description in the text of the bill, but the importation of birds or parts of birds for mere ornament is prohibited except as to feathers which are taken from living birds without injury.

I do not wish to debate the bill, because it will be understood in the Senate generally. There is a Southern bird, the heron, one of the most exquisite of birds, from which an aigrette is taken which has become a fashionable article of human wear. It is the bridal ornament of the female heron. It can only be taken from the living bird, and it is taken by the destruction of the living bird. It is upon the female white heron in the nesting season, so that ordinarily one of those feathers costs the life not only of the mother, but of an entire brood, which is left to decay and to starve.

A very eminent gentleman, well known to my friend from Missouri, told me last winter that two ladies came to his rooms to call on one of his family here in Washington, wearing on their bonnets, each of them, seven of these exquisite ornaments; so that the gratification of the vanity and the taste or desire for ornament of those two people alone had cost the lives certainly of fourteen female birds and probably of fourteen broods.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that a song bird?

Mr. HOAR. I can not answer as to whether it is a song bird, but that is the reason why the text of the bill aims at the slaughter of all birds for ornamental purposes, although the title was limited to the principal object.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems to me that the bill is going a long way when it proposes to prohibit the importation of birds.

Mr. HOAR. This is a bill which has been passed in several of the States. It has been passed in Colorado, it has been passed in Massachusetts, it has been passed in other States over the country, and it is desired by the Natural History Society. I hope the Senator from Missouri will see his way clear to let it pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not going to delay its passage, except to state my objection. The provision—

That the importation into the United States of birds, feathers, or parts of birds for ornamental purposes be, and the same is hereby, prohibited—is an actual prohibition of the importation of any kind of feathers of birds.

Mr. HOAR. With the exception stated, "of feathers taken from living birds without injury to the bird."

Mr. COCKRELL. I can not agree to the bill, but I am not going to object to its consideration.

Mr. BACON. As was stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, a similar bill has been passed by the legislature of the State of Massachusetts and by the legislatures of other States. When the bill was before the Massachusetts legislature there was a very beautiful address made in the name of the birds advocating the passage of the bill, which address was written by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I desire to submit the same as my remarks in support of the pending bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to have those remarks read.

Mr. BACON. Of course, the address will be read. That is my purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the great and general court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, we, the song birds of Massachusetts and their playfellows, make this our humble petition:

We know more about you than you think we do. We know how good you are. We have hopped about the roofs and looked in at the windows of the houses you have built for poor and sick and hungry people and little lame and deaf and blind children. We have built our nests in the trees and sung many a song as we flew about the gardens and parks you have made so beautiful for your own children, especially your poor children, to play in.

Every year we fly a great way over the country, keeping all the time where the sun is bright and warm; and we know that whenever you do anything other people all over the great land between the seas and the great lakes find it out, and pretty soon will try to do the same thing. We know; we know. We are Americans just as you are. Some of us, like some of you, came from across the great sea, but most of the birds like us have lived here a long while; and birds like us welcomed your fathers when they came here many years ago. Our fathers and mothers have always done their best to please your fathers and mothers.

Now we have a sad story to tell you. Thoughtless or bad people are trying to destroy us. They kill us because our feathers are beautiful. Even pretty and sweet girls, who we should think would be our best friends, kill our brothers and children so that they may wear their plumage on their hats. Sometimes people kill us from mere wantonness. Cruel boys destroy our nests and steal our eggs and our young ones. People with guns and snares lie in wait to kill us, as if the place for a bird were not in the sky, alive, but in a shop window or under a glass case. If this goes on much longer, all your song birds will be gone. Already, we are told, in some other countries that used to be full of birds, they are almost gone. Even the nightingales are being all killed in Italy.

Now we humbly pray that you will stop all this, and will save us from this sad fate. You have already made a law that no one shall kill a harmless song bird or destroy our nests or our eggs. Will you please to make another that no one shall wear our feathers, so that no one will kill us to get them? We want them all ourselves. Your pretty girls are pretty enough without them. We are told that it is as easy for you to do it as for Blackbird to whistle.

If you will, we know how to pay you a hundred times over. We will teach your children to keep themselves clean and neat. We will show them how to live together in peace and love and to agree as we do in our nests. We will build pretty houses which you will like to see. We will play about your gardens and flower beds—ourselves like flowers on wings—without any cost to you.

We will destroy the wicked insects and worms that spoil your cherries and currants and plums and apples and roses. We will give you our best songs and make the spring more beautiful and the summer sweeter to you. Every June morning when you go out into the field, Oriole and Blackbird and Bobolink will fly after you and make the day more delightful to you; and when you go home tired at sundown, Vesper Sparrow will tell you how grateful we are. When you sit on your porch after dark, Fife Bird and Hermit Thrush and Wood Thrush will sing to you, and even Whip-poor-will will cheer up a little. We know where we are safe. In a little while all the birds will come to live in Massachusetts again, and everybody who loves music will like to make a summer home with you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the question may be put on the passage of the bill which has been under consideration, to which I understand there is no further objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will first be laid before the Senate, and then the Chair will submit the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2680) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside, continuing the unfinished business for the balance of the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BATE. In this connection I beg to state that I shall call up the resolutions as a tribute to the memory of the late Senator HARRIS at half past 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary to the bill (S. 4124) for the protection of song birds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. COWLES.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2673) for the relief of William A. Cowles.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to William A. Cowles $1,000 in full for his services as an employee of the United States from March 1, 1878, to November 1, 1878, in the geographical surveys west of the one hundredth meridian, under the direction of Lieut. George M. Wheeler.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALABAMA RIVER BRIDGE, NEAR MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3871) to authorize the Montgomery-Elmore Bridge and Improvement Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River, near the city of Montgomery, Ala.

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the amendments of the committee be acted upon as the bill is read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Alabama, the amendments will be reported and acted upon as the bill is read. The Chair hears no objection to that request.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, line 11, page 1, before the word "company," to strike out "such" and insert "said;" in the same line, after the word "company," to insert "and approved by the Secretary of War;" on page 2, line 7, after the word "route," to strike out "and the same is hereby declared to be a post route" and insert "upon which no higher charge shall be made for transportation over the same of the mails, troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroad leading to such bridge;" so as to make the section read:

That the Montgomery-Elmore Bridge and Improvement Company, a corporation created and existing under an act of the general assembly of the State of Alabama for the purpose of constructing and maintaining the bridge hereinafter mentioned, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a wagon, foot-passenger, and railroad bridge, or a bridge for any one or more of such purposes, across the Alabama River at such point as may be selected by said company and approved by the Secretary of War, between the junction of the Coosa and Tallapoosa rivers and the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, said bridge to be so constructed as not to obstruct the navigation of said river, and to be provided with a suitable draw: Provided, That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known and recognized as a post route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for transportation over the same of the mails, troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroad leading to such bridge, and the United States shall have the right of way for a postal telegraph across said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 25, after the word "the," where it occurs the first time, to strike out "surroundings" and insert "sounding;" and in line 7, page 3, after the word "construction," to insert "or after completion;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be located and built under and subject to such regulations for the security of the navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the proposed bridge and a map of the location giving, for the space of one-half mile above and one-half mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War no work upon the bridge shall be commenced, and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction or after completion such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 16, after the word "impediment," to strike out the semicolon and insert a period, and to strike out the remainder of the section in the following words: "And if, upon reasonable notice to said bridge company to make such change or improvements, the said company fails to do so, the Secretary of War shall have authority to make the same at the expense of said company, and all the rights conferred by this act shall be forfeited, and Congress shall have power to do any and all things necessary to secure the free navigation of the river;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time; and that if at any time navigation of said river shall in any manner be obstructed or impaired by the said bridge the Secretary of War shall have authority, and it shall be his duty, to require the said bridge company to alter and change the said bridge at its own expense in such manner as may be proper to secure free and complete navigation without impediment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 23, after the word "draw," to strike out the words "provided for" and insert "of;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the draw of the bridge herein authorized to be constructed shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passing of boats; and said company or corporation shall maintain at its own expense, from sunset till sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 4, after the word "That," to insert "all railroad companies desiring the use of any railroad bridge constructed under this act shall have equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of trains and cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use, and in case of any disagreement between the owners of the bridge and any railroad company desiring its use, regarding the compensation to be paid or the conditions to be observed, all matters at issue shall be decided by the Secretary of War after a proper hearing; and;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That all railroad companies desiring the use of any railroad bridge constructed under this act shall have equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of trains and cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case of any disagreement between the owners of the bridge and any railroad company desiring its use, regarding the compensation to be paid or the conditions to be observed, all matters at issue shall be decided by the Secretary of War after a proper hearing; and all telephone and telegraph companies shall be granted equal rights and privileges in the construction and operation of their lines across said bridge; and if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized shall not be commenced within one year from the passage of this act and be completed within three years from same date, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall cease and be determined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. BROWN.

Mr. WILSON. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 3474) granting a pension to John C. Brown.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has given notice that on Monday the pension bills will be called up and all of them will be acted upon at that time.

Mr. WILSON. I thought the proposition was merely to take up House pension bills on Monday.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; all of them.

Mr. WILSON. Very well, then.

THE MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. CHARLES, MO.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4206) extending the time for the construction of a wagon and motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDUSTRIAL AND SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4154) to amend an act approved August 30, 1890, entitled "An act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, entitled "An act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862," be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows, namely: That whenever there shall be a less sum of money received from the proceeds of the public lands than is required by the terms of the act aforesaid to be paid to each of the several States, any deficiency shall be paid from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill was reported a day or two ago, and when its consideration was requested, I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] asked that it be passed over.

Mr. MORRILL. I think not; I do not think there will be any objection to the bill from any quarter.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read, subject to objection.

Mr. MORRILL. It has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to have it read again?

Mr. MORRILL. The bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is something else involved in the bill besides the public lands.

Mr. MORRILL. Nothing at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it had better retain its place until I can look into it a little. I know that there was objection made to it the other day, and I prefer that it should go over, not losing its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, under the objection of the Senator from Missouri, without losing its place on the Calendar.

RED RIVER BRIDGE AT GRAND ECORE, LA.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5865) to authorize the Monroe Railway and Construction Company to construct a bridge across Red River, at or near Grand Ecore, La.

Mr. McENERY. Mr. President, I rose to submit the same request which has been made by the Senator from Arkansas. I hope the bill referred to by him may be considered at this time, and put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BURTON PACKARD.

Mr. TURNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1354) granting a pension to Burton Packard.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Burton Packard, late sergeant of Company C, Sixth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, at $50 a month, in lieu of the pension of $24 a month to which he is now entitled by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH P. PATTON.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 1803) for the relief of Joseph P. Patton.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to correct the record of the War Department in the case of Joseph P. Patton, late first lieutenant of Company C, Fifth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, by revoking the order of his dismissal and granting him an honorable discharge to date September 21, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FARNHAM J. EASTMAN.

Mr. TURNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1353) for the increase of pension of Farnham J. Eastman.

Mr. COCKRELL. Probably the Senator was not in when notice was given that the pension cases on the Calender would be called up regularly at 1 o'clock on Monday next. They will all be taken up and considered at that time.

Mr. TURNER. I was not aware of that arrangement.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator's colleague [Mr. WILSON] asked for the consideration of a pension bill a few minutes ago, and I objected to it on the same ground.

Mr. TURNER. In that case I will withdraw the request for the consideration of the bill at this time.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business having been laid aside informally, the Calendar under Rule VIII is now in order. The first case on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 3365) relating to the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company was announced as first in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that objection was made to the bill when it was under consideration heretofore, and it will be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar, if there be no objection. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

HOME FOR AGED AND INFIRM COLORED PEOPLE.

The bill (S. 2821) to provide a home for aged and infirm colored people was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over without losing its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

SCHOOLS OF MINES.

The bill (S. 2911) to aid the public-land States to support schools of mines was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that this bill has heretofore been read at length as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over informally, in the absence of the Senator reporting it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without losing its place.

DISAPPROVAL OF A TERRITORIAL ACT.

The bill (S. 3051) to disapprove an act passed by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, approved March 17, 1897, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill has been reported adversely. Let it go over under Rule IX.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR HARRIS.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, the hour set apart for the Senatorial ceremonies in memory of my late colleague, Senator HARRIS, has arrived, and I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO). The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Tennessee will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS, late a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute of regard to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect, the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, to my late distinguished colleague on this floor all the honors due to the most illustrious citizen have been paid by the officials of Tennessee and by the spontaneous affection of the citizens of the State. His body, by general and public request, lay in state in the capitol of Tennessee, escorted and guarded by old ex-Confederate soldiers, who stood sentinel around his bier under the two flags—Confederate and Federal.

The memorial services on a later day at Memphis, the home of the late Senator HARRIS, were of that character which attest the love and esteem in which he was held by the people of Tennessee. On that occasion the drapery of woe gave place to the beauty of flowers, and the vast auditorium bloomed and blossomed with the festoons of smilax and chrysanthemums, while palms of ancient and sacred memory vied with roses in giving grace and beauty to a scene which bore evidence of a purpose on the part of the whole community to unite in a grand testimonial to the honored dead.

Representative men, the rich and the poor, were there, and every creed in religion as well as every division in politics united in one testimonial to the memory of the citizen, the "war governor," and statesman who had passed away. Nothing which affection could suggest or pride propose was omitted by that community which he had served and in which he had so long resided.

The glimmer of the old gray uniform on the Confederate veterans on this memorial occasion recalled the glory of the past without in the least derogating from the duties of the present. He had worn that uniform with honor in the camp, on the march, on the battlefield, and it was appropriate that a conspicuous place should be filled by it in the memorial service of his past life. The proud emblems of the Federal Union were not absent, but floated gracefully along with the modest little ensign that bore the cross of St. Andrew, with its stars and bars.

It was a fit occasion for intertwining the two flags, and it was tastefully and gracefully done. Notwithstanding these honors so profusely paid by the authorities of Tennessee and of the city of Memphis and of all classes of the people, an honored custom of this Senate invites further posthumous ceremonies within its historic walls which have so often reverberated his voice. This Chamber for more than twenty years was the theater of his usefulness, the same in which he played that conspicuous part in the public history which will be forever associated with his memory. It is appropriate that here, then, in this Chamber official recognition of his prominent services to the Union and to the State should have voice and recognition.

I ask the attention of Senators while I briefly relate the story of a man—their fellow—who is gone.

Mr. President, ISHAM GREEN HARRIS was born in Franklin County, Tenn., on the 10th of February, 1818, and died in this city on the 8th of July, 1897, having attained the ripe age of 80 years, fulfilling the words of the psalmist that "the days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away."

Little did the neighbors and friends of the Harris family, who lived in an unostentatious but independent way among the plain and patriotic people of Franklin County, Tenn., dream that on the 10th of February, 1818, there was born in their midst a child who was destined to be a leading factor in stirring events that were to come to our country's history—one who was to organize troops to fight great battles—was three times to occupy the executive chair of our great State and sit twenty years in the chief council chamber of our great country as one of its advisers and leaders. There was no special announcement of his birth by the parents or any special recognition of it given by the neighbors or the church. It nevertheless was one that has gone into history and will live beyond the present generation into the far future.

Isham and Lucy Harris, the father and mother of this the youngest of nine children, were North Carolinians and of Revolutionary stock. Isham's grandfather was an officer in the Revolutionary war. The father and mother, leaving the Old North State, seeking fresher fields in which to better their fortunes, journeyed westward over the mountains and settled where the waters of Elk River flow through a beautiful valley overlooked by the western range of the Cumberland Mountains. It was here, on a farm in Franklin County, Tenn., that these pioneer parents in a plain and frugal way reared and educated their children.

The log-house home and country schoolhouse were familiar features in that day, and to-day Tennessee points to them, through the brightest pages of her history, with greater pride than can any king point to his palace or any scholar to his university alma mater, for these unpretending homes and schools were the sources of that great intellectual, moral, and political strength that made heroes and statesmen of her sons and gave an unsurpassed charm to her womanhood.

But this monotonous and narrow sphere of social and business life, though with many attractions, was too circumscribed for young ambition to vault itself, and the subject of this tribute, at the early age of 14, with only a country-school education, full of manhood and self-reliance, with a heart throbbing with courageous impulses and a brain restless and full of resources—this boy-man, ISHAM GREEN HARRIS, with the consent and blessing of his father, for whom he was named, launched his little lifeboat, freighted with his hopes and fortune, on the uncertain sea of the future.

Leaving home at this unripe age, he went west to Paris, Henry County, Tenn., which became his future home. By way of being independent of the assistance of friends, he hired himself as a merchant's clerk, beginning at the bottom with a small salary. By strict attention to business, performing every duty with alacrity and guided by that conspicuous executive ability that characterized all his life, he soon found himself at the head of an establishment of his own and conducted it with eminent success.

After having undergone varied fortune in the commercial line, meantime having matured into manhood, he entered upon the profession of the law, and soon showed his aptness in and his adaptability to his profession. But while he was successful in securing a clientage and was strict in attention to the business intrusted to him, he was dreaming of the future, and saw, as in an apocalyptic vision, another field of service in which distinction united with destiny.

His taste and capacity fitted him preeminently for this new field, and his natural political sagacity and patriotic fervor beckoned him on. The gate opened its portals, and ambition, as a seductive siren, drew him in her charmed circle of delirium as naturally as iron filings are drawn to loadstone. Henceforth the political field was to him most congenial, and it became the arena in which was performed the life drama of ISHAM GREEN HARRIS. Six years of successful practice of law brought unto him not only a handsome income, but established for him a reputation as a lawyer, and more especially as an advocate. This threw him actively into the political world, and in 1847 he was honored with a seat in the senatorial branch of the Tennessee legislature.

There his aptitude for successful management in political matters entitled him to leadership, which brought him so conspicuously before the public as a Democrat that in 1848 he was selected as the Democratic elector for the Ninth Congressional district, to be followed in 1849 by his election from that district to the United States House of Representatives. After serving that district through two successive Congresses, and being renominated the third time, he declined to accept the nomination and moved to Memphis, where he was recognized as a lawyer and advocate of ability, and as such took high rank at that bar, then, as now, distinguished for the ability of its members.

But political preferment and leadership being his ruling passion, and politics being the natural field for the exercise of his fine powers, he again, in 1856, came to the front as elector at large for the Democratic party. Those who recall that exciting political campaign and the issues involved, and remember that his immediate opponent was the able and distinguished Governor Neil S. Brown, a foeman worthy of any man's steel, will recognize it as a gladiatorial contest between evenly matched knights, and which attracted the attention of the whole State.

His speeches on the hustings were plain, clear, and cogent, severely without ornament, and no strain at eloquence or display, but always sensible, strong, attractive, and sometimes dramatic. In delivery he was earnest and forcible, and alike emphatic in expression and gesture. Indeed, this grew upon him with age until the emphatic seemed the dogmatic. In speaking he always had a definite point to drive to, and he let you know what it was, and generally got there in good time and in good order.

With the triumph of his party in that campaign, Tennessee took rank among Democratic States, and his rich reward was a nomination and election, in 1857, as governor of the State. In this, his first canvass for governor, he had for his opponent Hon. Robert Hatton, the nominee of the opposing party, who was young, active, and talented, and it being the custom of Tennessee to have joint discussions between opposing party candidates, they canvassed the State together. HARRIS was elected. He was renominated in 1859, with John Netherland, a bright, talented man and famous stump orator, as his opponent. HARRIS was again elected.

His third election as governor was in August, 1861, after the State had united her fortunes with the Southern States and war was flagrant. Under the constitution of Tennessee the governor is elected for a term of two years, and remains in office until his successor is inaugurated, and this inauguration is required to be at the capitol and in the presence of the legislature. At the expiration of HARRIS's third term the capitol was within the Federal lines—hence there could be no inauguration, and HARRIS held over to the end of the war.

These renominations and successful canvasses show the hold he had gained and retained in the confidence and affection of the people of the whole State. His three canvasses for governor, together with performing the duties of the office, brought out those remarkable traits of character which made him conspicuous among the leaders of his party. He had by nature fine executive ability, which was strengthened by culture and habit. This executive quality was aided by an unflagging energy, which in turn was driven by a force of will that often overcame obstacles that were hard to remove.

Along with those, he had another gift or quality that was in evidence all along his line of life, and which contributed largely to his success. It is a species of diplomacy called in common parlance "tact;" that is, he instinctively knew better when and how to accomplish an object than other men. This was to a great extent the result of his thorough and accurate knowledge of human nature. His great lever power, however, that sustained him in seeking official preferment and maintaining himself was his Jeffersonian faith in the people—faith in their doing right when the right is understood by them—and his undeviating adherence to what he believed to be their rights and interests.

Governor HARRIS belonged to the strict-construction school of politics. That school of construction was originated by Jefferson and Madison as a counterpoise to the growing tendency of Federal consolidation and as a force to bring back the Government from the centralization of the alien and sedition acts to the original object of its creation, the Federal agent of the sovereign States that created it.

It was afterwards illustrated by the genius of Calhoun and adorned with the abilities and virtues of Southern statesmen, and for many years had a grasp upon the people of the South which only the mailed hand of fratricidal war could tear away.

To that school of construction Governor HARRIS conscientiously attached himself.

Whatever others may think of that theory of our Government, to ISHAM G. HARRIS it was the gospel of his politics, the creed that formulated his political convictions, and to it he was as true as the needle to the pole.

State sovereignty and its resultant, the right of secession, were with him conscientious convictions, as sacred and binding as his belief in human existence. As governor it was his duty to take care that the State suffer no detriment, and to that end, when trouble and danger were in sight, he summoned the legislature in extra session, that a convention of the people of the State might take such action as their wisdom should dictate. It would serve no good purpose to review in this place the able messages in which he discussed the public conditions, the attitude of sections, and the ultimate purposes of political parties.

It is sufficient to say that he was no fanatic, but a calm, resolute, earnest, and honest man in a place of great responsibility; and with the courage of his convictions he met the public conditions by which his State was menaced with the only remedy that was provided in the theory of Federal Union as he understood that theory. Yea, many will say he and those of us who sustained him were wrong; but there can be none who knew him as I and those who stood by him in that great crisis did who can truthfully assert that he was not honest in his convictions and earnest in his work.

In the days of 1861 public events shaped themselves with a rapidity and suddenness which it is difficult to comprehend now, and not edifying to review on this floor. There is one incident, however, that occurred at this juncture between the governor of Tennessee and the President of the United States that can not with propriety be omitted in giving the leading features of Governor HARRIS's life.

Excitement for weeks over the whole country had been intense, and culminated in the fall of Fort Sumter, whereupon President Lincoln called for 75,000 troops to coerce the seceded States, and in the call designated two regiments to come from Tennessee, and asked Governor HARRIS to furnish them. The reply was promptly returned by the governor of Tennessee to the President in the following words:

> Tennessee will not furnish a single man for the purpose of coercion, but 50,000, if necessary, for the defense of our rights and those of our Southern brethren.

There are many personal and official incidents connected with Governor HARRIS that would be interesting to know, but I forbear giving them, except the following one, illustrative of his high appreciation of the duty of an official in caring for the public interest intrusted to him: There was a large sum of money, nearly a million dollars in gold, in the custody of the State, known as "the school fund, when, on the approach of the Federal Army to the capital of Tennessee, Governor HARRIS had this fund, among other effects of the State, sent south. He regarded it as a sacred fund, and on no account would permit it to be used. Under his orders it was moved from place to place as military lines shifted, and kept secure. When war scenes were dissolving and he going into exile, he directed its honest keepers to return it to the State authorities, which was done without the loss of a dollar.

It is my purpose only to present Governor HARRIS in his true character, that of a resolute, firm man, discharging every duty from a high sense of responsibility to the State and her people, indifferent to every personal consequence and solicitous only for the safety of the State and the protection of her people. To that end, when all hopes of continued peace vanished before the President's call for troops to invade the Southern States, Governor HARRIS bent every energy of his character and exerted every resource of the State to the organization and equipment of her volunteers; and so well did he work in those precarious days that by July, 1861, he had organized and equipped thousands of troops, turning them over to the Confederate authorities.

He relaxed no effort in the defense of the State, but with untiring energy continued his efforts to place the State in a condition to be defended by her own people as well as by the armies of the Confederate States. His example as governor was inspiring to all the people, infusing energy everywhere and bringing order out of confusion, until under his administration, which was during the entire war, over 100,000 Tennessee soldiers, as gallant and patriotic troops as ever mustered under battle flag, had enlisted and had been as well equipped as could be under the existing conditions and completely organized in the armies of the Confederate States, and thus he earned the well merited, and to him the most highly prized, sobriquet of the "War Governor of Tennessee."

When driven by the events of the war from the State and it was no longer possible for him to discharge the duties of the exalted office, he rested not, nor sought easy berth, but immediately entered the field on the staff of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, and was with him on the field of Shiloh and personally assisted that great chieftain at the time he received his death shot.

With the Army of Tennessee, under all its commanders, he served through all the years of the war, exerting every effort to mitigate the hardships of the soldiers, to supply the necessities of their daily life, and sharing with them the sunshine and the storm, the heat and the cold, the joy of victory and the sting of defeat.

Though not technically in the Confederate army, for he could not be, as he was governor of Tennessee, but he was in fact its inseparable companion from beginning to end, and heard its first reveille and its last tattoo. He was emphatically the friend of the soldiers and omitted nothing that could contribute to their comfort or increase their efficiency. After the war, with all its disappointments, losses, and distress, the people of Tennessee still treasure in their hearts the sacred memory of their heroic soldiers.

When all the blandishments of life are gone,
* * * the brave live on.

All else seemed gone, under the inscrutable wisdom of an all-wise Providence, but the manhood of those four years. In all the noblest acceptation of that word, it is a precious heirloom to Confederates, to be transmitted from sire to son. Of that manhood Governor HARRIS was a living example, in its administrative feature, in its brave devotion to duty, in its unselfish attention to the wants of others, and in its bravery and endurance on the field of battle, and also in exacting demands in bivouac, march, and hospital.

The history of ISHAM G. HARRIS is inseparably connected with our war period. He was then in the prime of life and in the zenith of his power. He was governor during the entire time, from 1861–1865, of a sovereign State, mighty in those effective elements of war, men and resources. It was an ill-starred destiny that came upon our country and brought a four-years carnival of suffering and death.

When the bloodshot eye of Mars looked down upon the scene, it was "red with uncommon wrath," and the smile of mercy appeased it not. Ours was then a land of armed men, brothers fighting each other. Destruction and death was the order of the day. Every march was to a battlefield, and every battlefield was a graveyard. Defeat of to-day gave earnest of victory to-morrow, while victory to-morrow meant defeat the next day. It was a struggle between giants, as fierce and unrelenting as that between Saracen and Crusader over the Holy Sepulcher when the battle-ax of Cœur de Lion found its death-producing counterpart in the magic blade of Saladin.

It was in these times that the subject of this tribute was at the helm, steering a mighty State through the crimson tide of war. But with peace there came not rest to his weary spirit. The triumph of the Union Army admitted of no magnanimity for him. The fierce passions of politics interposed to drive him into exile. The trumped-up charge of treason to the State, the State he had so courageously defended, was set in motion, and, with a reward for his capture, he was driven to seek safety in Mexico and there await a returning sense of shame to his persecutors.

From Mexico to England was for him a change from enforced idleness to that business activity so necessary to his energetic and ever-working nature. One year in business in Liverpool completed the two and a half years of exile, during which all charges were abandoned and rewards withdrawn, and he was free to return to the State and people he had served so faithfully and loved so well. A period of eight years followed with a successful practice of the law, during which the clouds of political animosities were being gradually dispelled and the people had become free to exercise their right of selecting their Representatives and Senators.

Governor HARRIS became a candidate and was elected by the legislature to the Senate of the United States, where from 1877 to 1897, a period of over twenty years, he was the zealous and faithful ambassador of Tennessee to this Amphictyonic Council of sovereign States.

This Senate too well remembers my colleague for me to recall the weighty words, the impressive manner, the forcefulness in colloquy, the ready retort, the executive ability, tact, and discretion, the parliamentary management, the courtesy that ever characterized him in the chair—for he had been chosen its temporary presiding officer—the firmness with which he maintained his convictions, and the triumph he won.

His was a green and fresh old age. His eyes were not dim and lusterless, nor was his natural force much abated. He was never a better or more useful Senator nor more attentive and efficient to his duties than in the later years of his life. Age seemed only to have brought ripened experience with its advantages which he made available.

He was generally in his seat and always a watcher, even in weary nights when obstructive legislation was rampant. When younger men were inattentive and sought sleep, he, regardless of age, was awake and vigilant and ready for any turn in the game of political diplomacy that was going on, and generally took on such occasions a leading and effective part in all discussions pertaining to the rules of the Senate and parliamentary proceedings. Indeed he felt, and it came to be so regarded in the Senate, that debate on parliamentary proceedings was his fight, for he was the admitted authority on parliamentary law in the body.

Mr. President, Governor HARRIS lived in an eventful age. No eighty years of human action has brought to light so many useful discoveries and such great results. The map of the world has been changed during the period of his life. Empires have appeared and passed away like bubbles on the surface of the lake.

Continents that were comparatively vacant have become the abode of powerful States, peopled by intelligent inhabitants that enjoy all the advantages of a high civilization. At his birth this Republic was all east of the Mississippi; at his death the tide of population had crossed the Rocky Mountains and built powerful States and splendid cities on the Pacific. What at his birth was the American desert has become the abode of freemen, and enterprising communities now cheer the dreary wastes.

No railroad was then found on this continent, nor was it traversed by thousands of miles in which the traveler scales the lofty mountains and passes over the great rivers in splendid parlor cars, where his meals are served and he reposes on his downy bed while he spins along over wonderful scenery at the rate of 40 miles an hour. At his birth no scientist dreamed that each day's proceeding would be distributed through the world with a speed that far outstrips the earth in her daily revolutions around her axis. Yet the lightning has become the great agent of humanity to distribute its messages, propel its cars, and heat its habitations. The telephone is the faithful agent that repeats the human voice scores of miles.

The year after his birth the first steamship crossed the Atlantic. Now every ocean is stirred by the swift messengers of nations in peace and war. The world of mind and morals has been evolving new theories of thought and new rules of social and spiritual life. The activity of human genius has brought out new creations in every department of utility. Ancient institutions have given place to new and more refined and delicate ones.

The wonders of art have outstripped the wildest visions of dreaming fancy and given to human achievement boundless possibilities, that may cover the earth with charities and blessings, that will wipe away all tears and lull into sweet harmony the sighs and sorrows of the human race.

Amid this wonderful impulse of human action this distinguished man has lived and acted and enrolled his name.

Mr. President, when the end came to those eighty years of arduous life, when the golden bowl was broken, and the silver cord was loosed, and the pitcher broken at the fountain, it could be truthfully said of my colleague that "he died at his post." If not like Chatham falling on the floor of the House of Lords, or John Quincy Adams sinking in the House of Representatives, yet he succumbed from the exertion and the labor of his Senatorial duties like the great English leader and the exalted American ex-President.

The unswerving patriot, ISHAM G. HARRIS, whose long life had been devoted to his country, had striven to the end, and his last days were his best days.

He is now in his grave—

After life's fitful fever he sleeps well.

Neither the call to the hustings, the concourse of admiring friends, the contests in the Senate, nor "the rapture of the fight" shall again summon him to duty. His repose is tranquil in the sacred precincts of Elmwood, overlooking in its beauty and silence the Mississippi as it swells in majestic flow at the base of Memphis, the beautiful city of the valley. Peace to his ashes.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, generally members of the Senate when first elected are no longer young, and their early departure to "the silent land" is in accordance with nature. Within the past year the decease of Senators and of ex-Senators has been unprecedented. The list of ex-Senators includes twelve—Voorhees, McPherson, Doolittle, Cameron, Dolph, McMillan, Coke, Dixon, Jones, Robinson, Clingman, and Paddock; and the seats here of three Senators were also made vacant, or those so recently occupied by Earle and George and by Senator HARRIS, of Tennessee, to whose memory the Senate to-day offers its tribute of respect.

All of these men possessed some characteristic and prominent merits which were appreciated by their people at home, as well as by their associates here, who knew them at close range. McPherson, Voorhees, and HARRIS were all recent members of the Committee on Finance, and whatever differences on political and economical questions may have existed, the committee, I feel authorized to say, were personally all friends, and the survivors are here to-day as mourners.

Our late and long-time associate, Senator HARRIS, of Tennessee, was born in the State he represented, where, as it may safely be assumed, his political influence was probably never surpassed, except by that of General Jackson, whose wide national renown served to gild and expand his local influence at home. Nearly fifty years ago ISHAM G. HARRIS served in the Thirtieth and Thirty-first Congress as a member of the House of Representatives, then for six years as governor of Tennessee, and during the last three years of the rebellion he was a volunteer aid of the "Confederate Army of Tennessee," as he preferred to state it himself in the Congressional Directory. It may be inferred that as a stanch partisan of the State-rights doctrine and a veteran supporter of the Virginia resolutions of 1798 he rather preferred to be a volunteer aid to the Confederate Army of Tennessee than of the army under the direct control of Jefferson Davis.

Not obtrusively aspiring to be a national leader, yet he was a leader, and often consulted by his friends and his party. While always courageously stiff in his opinions, these were usually found to be safely behind the political breastworks of the Democratic party.

Tennessee was the home of Senator HARRIS and also of John Bell, who in 1860 received the vote of Tennessee for the Presidency as the candidate of the so-called "South American" or Union party; but Tennessee would hardly have been induced to join the Southern Confederacy in 1861 solely because of the Republican election of Mr. Lincoln to the Presidency but for the potential influence of Governor HARRIS.

Near the close of the rebellion, having been a Confederate with many conspicuous proofs, he deemed it wise to leave the country, lest the exigencies of peace might prove more portentous than those of war, and at once departed for Mexico, taking with him, for safe-keeping—whatever Parson Brownlow may then have erroneously supposed—$60,000 belonging to the State, but which was safely brought back by him and returned to the State treasury.

After a brief sojourn in Mexico, he went to Great Britain, and there finally concluded, after all his recent experience, there was no place so dear to him as his old home in Tennessee, and to that he returned in 1867.

In 1877 Mr. HARRIS was elected to the United States Senate, where he was for twenty years a very prominent and useful member. As the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, its various duties were discharged with ability and with nearly universal approval. He was long a valuable member of the Senate Committee on Finance, always in attendance at every meeting of the committee promptly on time, and bills submitted to him for examination and report were sure of early attention. He rarely made what are called prepared or set speeches; but, as long as health permitted, when the Senate was in session, he was here in daily attendance.

Senator HARRIS was a radical adherent to his party, and when he felt it as his sacred duty to denounce the measures of his political opponents, it was apparent from the unction of his accentuation and his dramatic gesticulation that he was ready to strike, if not with the sword of the Lord, certainly with nothing less than the sword of Gideon.

Early becoming familiar with the parliamentary rules of the Senate, Senator HARRIS, as the President pro tempore or when invited to the chair by the presiding officer, discharged its duties not only with excellent ability and absolute impartiality, but with extreme brevity.

Socially he was not egotistical, and never by his conversation made a darling of himself. Even his age was long kept as a personal secret about which the public had no business to inquire.

For many years, in my absence, Senator HARRIS was my standing pair, and it was very scrupulously observed.

He was a frank, outspoken man, and did not hide his opinions by silence or by a forky tongue. His integrity appeared to me absolute and unimpeachable. Here he was respected as well as esteemed—certainly he was esteemed by me—and had I preceded him—

> To the undiscovered country from whose bourne
> No traveler returns—

as perhaps from seniority of age might have been expected, I do not doubt he would have tendered a just and kind word in my behalf. But it was long ago written, "There shall be two men in the field; one shall be taken and one is left."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I first saw ISHAM G. HARRIS near Nashville, in Tennessee, when he was governor of that State and had been driven from his capital by the Federal Army under General Buell. He came to the head of a column I was leading in a reconnoissance under the orders of General Forrest.

He came as an aid-de-camp of that distinguished officer, bearing orders for my execution.

In that brief interview I saw a characteristic display of the intrepidity of the man.

The action was perilous and the governor went into the fight with the dash and resolution that plainly revealed his character as a soldier who rejoiced on the field of battle.

This gallant soldier passed out of my observation into the high career of splendid service in which he won great distinction as the honored adviser of the eminent men who led the destiny of the Confederacy. No true soldier ever failed to recognize in him a brother in arms, and a brother in every emergency.

When that war had ended, the people of Tennessee conferred on him the highest honor in their gift by choosing him as a Senator of the United States. It was my fortune to meet Mr. HARRIS the second time on the floor of the Senate, as a Senator from Alabama, on March 4, 1877, and we took up the grave duties of that office on the same day, he representing my native State.

I had not seen him since the morning of our brief association on the field of battle.

Henceforth our efforts were to be devoted to the service of the country in fields where peace harvests "her victories more renowned than war."

It is a cause for deep pride to me that in the twenty years of our service in the Senate we never differed on any great leading question of public policy that involved a question of the proper construction of the Constitution of the United States, for he was a true and wise man, whose matured opinions were carefully formed and were always presented with the emphasis of profound conviction and maintained with unflinching courage.

No name in the annals of the South is more honored in the esteem of the people than that of ISHAM G. HARRIS as a statesman and wise legislator. His fidelity to every public trust became a standard in the minds of the people for the highest duty of an American Senator, and in the Senate that standard is recognized as being worthy of the best men of the best days of the Republic.

The history of this noble and genuine man can not be stated in a single address, nor, indeed, in any single statement of tongue or pen. There are treasured in the hearts of millions of people the legends of ISHAM G. HARRIS, that are kept fresh and green by the pulsations of gratitude. These are often repeated at the fireside and to listening groups of children as proofs of the qualities that they should prefer to all other attributes or accomplishments.

His life grew to full development in an atmosphere of immaculate honor until it became a noble structure to stand for all time as a high model of the typical Southern man. I feel intense pride in the privilege of referring to ISHAM G. HARRIS in this splendid attitude in which he is placed by the universal opinion of the Southern people. It is descriptive of their sentiments on all great questions and of their manner of dealing with matters of public concern with honest directness of purpose and action.

It is well for us and for our successors in the Senate that we have his record as a guide to correct and just action in the great questions that we must deal with in this great Forum.

In this hour of suspense and anxiety that clothes the whole body of the people with a deep spirit of inquiry as to our duty to the honor of the Republic and a deeper resolve to protect and defend it to the uttermost, it would give me the most sincere satisfaction if we could invoke the advantage of his wisdom and his true and courageous sense of duty to advise the Senate as to its course, now pressing for determination.

His counsels would not be rash, but they would be just and courageous, and his advocacy of a righteous line of action would give to our resolution the confidence of worthy motives and assured success in a new and delicate line of duty to which we are impelled by the claims of humanity upon the heart of the great and magnanimous American people.

I can pronounce no higher eulogium upon the character of this great Senator than to voice the wish of the Senate, if it could be so, that he could now be with us to advise us with his counsels.

It is in such moments that we miss great leaders and learn to value their worth to the country. No question was too high or too broad for the grasp of his intellect, and no matter engaged the attention of the Senate to which he refused to give his attention.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the great career of Senator HARRIS is well known to his countrymen. He has been for more than a generation a striking and conspicuous figure in our public life. His colleague, his successor, the men of his own political faith, the people of the great State which he served and honored and loved so long, will, each in their own way, portray his character and record their esteem and affection.

My tribute must be that of a political opponent. So far as I have been able to exert any influence upon the history of my country during the long conflict now happily past, it has been in opposition to him, to the party to which he belonged, to the opinions which he held, I am sure, quite as zealously and conscientiously as I hold my own.

We entered the Senate on the same day. He was a Southerner, a Democrat, and a Confederate. I was born and bred in New England, a Republican, and an Abolitionist. We rarely spoke in the same debate except on different sides. Yet I have no memory of him that is not tender and affectionate, and there is nothing that I can honestly say of him except words of respect and of honor.

He was a typical Southerner. He had the virtues and the foibles that belonged to that character in the generation the last of whom are now passing from the stage of public action. He was a man of very simple and very high qualities; he was a man of absolute frankness in public behavior and in private dealing. The thought that was in his heart corresponded absolutely with the utterance of his lips. He had nothing to conceal. I was about to say he was a man without the gift of diplomacy; but he was a man with the gift of the highest diplomacy—directness, simplicity, frankness, courage—qualities which make always their way to their mark and to their goal over all circumlocutions and ambiguities.

He was a man of brief, clear, and compact speech. He would sum up in a few vigorous and ringing sentences the argument to which other men would give hours or days. He had an instinct for the hinge or turning point of a debate.

He was a man of absolute integrity and steadfastness. What he said, that he would do. Where you left him, there, so long as he lived, you would find him when you came back. He was a man of unflinching courage. He was not afraid of any antagonist whether in the hall of debate or on the field of battle.

He was an acknowledged master of parliamentary law, a system upon which not only the convenient procedure of legislative bodies largely depends, but which has close relations to constitutional liberty itself. How often a few simple and clear sentences of his have dispersed the clouds and brought order out of confusion in this Chamber.

His great legislative experience made him invaluable as a servant of his own State, of the country, and as a councilor to his younger associates.

He was a pleasant man in private intercourse. He had great sense of humor, a gift of portraiture, a good memory. So he brought out of the treasure-house of his varied experience abundant matter for the delight of young and old. There is no man left in the Senate who was better company in hours of recreation.

His influence will be felt here for a long time. His striking figure will still seem to be hovering about the Senate Chamber, still sitting, still deliberating, still debating.

Mr. President, it is delightful to think how, during the lives of the men who took part in the great conflict which preceded and followed the civil war and the greater conflict of the war itself, the old bitterness and estrangements are all gone. Throughout the whole land the word "countryman" has at last become a title of endearment. The memory of the leaders of that great conflict is preserved as tenderly by the men who fought with them as by the men who followed them. Massachusetts joins with Tennessee in laying a wreath on the tomb of her great soldier, her great governor, her great Senator. He was faithful to truth as he saw it; to duty as he understood it; to constitutional liberty as he conceived it.

If, as some of us think, he erred, his error was that of a brave man ready to give life and health and hope to the unequal struggle.

> To his loved cause he offered, free from stain,
> Courage and faith; vain faith and courage vain.

And, Mr. President, when he returned to his allegiance, he offered to the service of his reunited country the same zeal and devotion he had given to the Confederacy. There was no reserved or half-hearted loyalty. We could have counted on his care for the honor and glory of the country, on his wise and brave counsel, in this hour of anxiety with an unquestioning confidence. So Massachusetts to-day presses the hand of Tennessee and mourns with her for her great citizen who has departed.

Mr. WALTHALL. Mr. President, when the people of a Congressional district, after a public servant has been tried and tested in other positions of responsibility, elect him two terms to Congress and offer him a third, it is but a just recognition of his fidelity and usefulness by the beneficiaries of his service.

When later the people of his State, with the record of his public service before them, elect him their governor three times in succession, these added honors attest their appreciation of his growing capacities and prove his increased popularity and influence.

When the representatives of the same people, voicing their will, after a great war had intervened and their favorite citizen had rendered three years of military service in a conspicuous position, at a trying time summon him from private life to accept the highest trust his State has the power to bestow, electing him four times consecutively, twice after he had passed the age of 70, to the Senate of the United States, then all has been done that the people of a single State can do to honor and glorify a public servant, whatever his merit and ability.

And when the same people who had thus honored him in life lament his death as a personal bereavement and a great public misfortune alike; when the State clothes herself in mourning and throughout all her borders the population, in vast assemblies, in church and court room and in the market place, everywhere, in public and in private, manifest their devotion and their grief; when Congressmen in both Houses and officials in all departments of the Government bear witness to his worth; when from no quarter of the Union comes a harsh word of criticism upon any feature of his eventful career—when we have seen all this, we feel that what came after death was but a natural sequence and fit complement to all that went before; but we wonder that a long career of active, positive, forceful, uncompromising leadership should be followed by such universal tributes of approval and respect. Yet these honors and these tributes were bestowed upon the late Senator HARRIS, living and dead, and how well they all were earned is known of all men familiar with the history of his life, which has been so admirably outlined to-day by the senior Senator from Tennessee, for many years his coworker and associate.

For a young man of limited means and with but a slender educational groundwork to fit himself for the practice of a learned profession in the intervals of the employment by which he earns his living is but the story of many a brave-hearted American's early life. But when such a man makes his way from the starting point of a country merchant's store through other places of distinction up to the Senate of the United States and promptly becomes an acknowledged power here, and for twenty years holds high rank among the foremost members of the body, we must look elsewhere than to mere diligence and positive capacity, or to scheming, or to some accident or freak of fortune which sometimes thrusts mediocrity into temporary prominence, in searching for the secret of such remarkable success.

From causes like these men without aptitude or merit may occupy high places for a time, but without proven fitness for usefulness in some form, turned practically to some valuable account in which the public is directly concerned, a public man's hold upon the confidence of his own people and that of his associates in service can never long endure. When it lasts, as the late Senator HARRIS'S did, through a half century marked by stirring and trying events and the shifting fortunes of other men, and as time advanced grew firmer and stronger, the secret must be found in some of those rare attributes which in such combination and degree are denied to men in general.

After cordial personal intercourse and intimate party association with him for many years, through which I closely observed his dealings with both men and measures, my belief is that force and faith were the powers which chiefly contributed to his achievements in life.

Force of intellect, supported by the force of a vigorous physical organism equal to any strain, mapped out his plans and purposes with steadiness and continuity; the force of a clear, sententious, and incisive style of argument urged them and impressed them, and force of character, will power that would not be thwarted and could not be subdued, impelled them with persistency and power to consummation and conclusion.

Faith in himself, in his own powers and purity of motive, gave him strength and independence and made him aggressive, persistent, and well-nigh irresistible in the pursuit of all his purposes. He had faith in our form of government, in the permanence of our institutions, in the masses of the people, and in their capacity to govern themselves; faith in his own construction of the Federal Constitution, from which he never swerved, and in his own ideals, which were exalted, of justice and duty, of manliness and honor.

He was faithful to principle and to every trust, however great or small; to State, constituents, and friends, and to every obligation they imposed upon him. Stern, direct, incorruptible, and resolute, he encountered enmities and was sometimes a mark for slander; but the charge was never made that he failed to keep faith with any of his fellow-men.

If, as I believe, the faculties and sentiments I have attributed to our late associate belonged to him, we need search no further for the secret of his successes and his long career of usefulness and honor, for the results were no more than the causes deserved. If they did not, I have misconceived his character, although, with excellent opportunities, I have studied his life with interest and have much reason to lament his death sincerely.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the full and interesting sketches of Senator HARRIS'S life and character to which we have listened leave me little to say beyond testifying my personal regard for him. I congratulate myself that what I had previously intended to say coincides so well with the observations of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. HARRIS was a man of strong convictions—frank and brave in setting forth and defending them. He was always ready for combat, prompt in repartee, skillful in attack and defense. He sometimes struck heavily, but never with personal malice, and no man remembers him unkindly. He was a master of parliamentary law, and in his frequent occupancy of the chair he knew well how to keep the true question before the Senate and how to preserve order.

He was a gallant and chivalrous man, a foremost champion of what he desired to promote. His bearing is well remembered, but can not be described. He differed at one time from many of us on great issues, but none doubted his sincerity and courage.

In private life he was a cordial, genial, hospitable, and typical gentleman of whatever school.

Tennessee honors herself in honoring his memory. The Senate records its affection and respect, and will not forget him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, ISHAM GREEN HARRIS, to whose imperishable memory the Senate of the United States pays this last memorial tribute, was born in Franklin County, Tennessee, on the 10th day of February, 1818, being the youngest of five sons and four daughters born to Isham Harris and his wife, Lucy Davidson Harris, and died in this city on the 8th day of July, 1897, in the eightieth year of his age.

He was endowed with a strong, vigorous constitution and a clear, active, quickly-grasping intellect, and was reared amid rural scenes and healthful surroundings.

His education was limited, and only such as a newly-settled country afforded. He attended Winchester Academy, and at the early age of 14 years his untiring energy, indomitable will, independence, and self-reliance carried him away from home to engage in the active affairs of life.

He went to Paris, Tenn., and began his eventful career as a clerk in a mercantile establishment, and by his energy, intelligent devotion to his duties, and strict economy was in a few years enabled to engage in business on his own account in Ripley, Miss., and proved a successful merchant.

This avocation was not the goal of his aspirations and laudable ambition. While successfully conducting his mercantile business he was studying law at night and preparing for a broader field of action. Having accumulated sufficient means to enable him for a time to devote his whole time to the study of his chosen profession, he returned to Paris, Tenn., in 1841 and began the practice of his profession in the office of an elder brother, an able and learned jurist. He applied himself to the study and practice of the law with his characteristic zeal, industrious application, and devotion, and quickly acquired a lucrative practice and professional reputation which attracted public notice seldom attained so early in life in his profession.

In 1846 he was elected as a Democrat from his senatorial district to the general assembly of his State, and declined a reelection.

In 1848 he was chosen a candidate for Presidential elector in his Congressional district, and in the canvass displayed an ability for popular debate which secured for him the respect, admiration, and confidence of the people, which were never betrayed nor shaken in all the long years of his public career.

In 1849 he was nominated by a Democratic convention as a candidate to represent his Congressional district in Congress, and was elected by a majority greater than that of his party.

In 1851 he was renominated and reelected, and in 1853 was renominated, but declined to accept.

He then removed to Memphis, Tenn., and resumed the practice of law, and at once took rank with the leading lawyers and secured a lucrative share of the legal business.

In 1856 he was Presidential elector for the State at large on the Democratic ticket. His competitor in this canvass was the distinguished Whig, ex-Governor Neil S. Brown, a worthy foeman in public debate. In 1857 he was nominated and elected governor of his State; was reelected in 1859, and again in 1861.

His position in public affairs was never equivocal. As governor of the State and commander in chief of her military forces from 1861 to the close of the war, he did all that was in his power to secure the success of the Confederacy by organizing his State troops, going with them into camp and battle, and remained with the army to the close of the war, and served on the staff of the successive generals commanding the Army of Tennessee. He was at his post of duty and danger through heat and cold, rain and sunshine, in camp and on battlefield, in advance and retreat, in victory and defeat.

When the war closed, on account of the surviving passions and fierce prejudices aroused by the severe conflicts in Tennessee, he went to Mexico and remained there for eighteen months; and then went to Liverpool, England, and engaged successfully in mercantile business for one year, and then returned to Memphis and resumed the practice of law, and closely applied himself for ten years.

In 1877 he was elected a Senator from the State of Tennessee in the Senate of the United States; was reelected in 1883 and in 1889, and in 1895 for the term ending March 3, 1901.

By this brief sketch of his illustrious life we may profit, as well as the young men of this and coming generations of our great country, to whom we present him as an example, not to deter, but to follow. From his fourteenth year of age to his eightieth—sixty-six years—he was in active life; not a drone, but emphatically a busy bee, neither losing nor wasting time.

In whatever avocation or position he engaged or accepted, he was preeminently successful and useful. To the discharge of all the duties and obligations of his avocation or position, however humble or exalted, he devoted his whole time, energy, attention, and abilities closely, industriously, and intelligently.

He was truly the "architect of his own fortune." His example proves that success can be achieved by great labor, and that life gives nothing worthy of a noble manhood without such labor. As a State senator in the general assembly of his native State he was laborious, useful, and ranked among its ablest members, and acquitted himself to the entire satisfaction of his constituency, and was tendered and declined a renomination. As a Representative in the Congress of the United States, although one of its youngest members, he quickly won a high position as a practical legislator, a sound lawyer, and an able debater, and so acceptably to his constituency discharged the duties that he was renominated and elected and tendered a third nomination, which he declined.

He was three times nominated and elected governor of his State, which fact attests his fidelity and efficiency. As a Senator, for punctuality and promptness in his attendance upon the sessions of the Senate and the meetings of the many committees of which he was a member he had few equals and no superiors. From his entrance to the close of his life he was continuously a member of the District of Columbia Committee and chairman when his party was in control. He was a member of the Committee on Finance during the Forty-ninth to the Fifty-fifth Congress, and served during the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses on the Committee on Claims, and was most useful and laborious.

He served as a member of the Committee on Rules during the Forty-eighth to the Fifty-fifth Congress. He was a member of many other committees and gave close attention to his duties on each.

When his party was in control he was unanimously chosen President pro tempore. As a parliamentarian he had no superior in the Senate, and presided with dignity, marked courtesy, and unquestioned impartiality.

Of the 76 members of the Senate when he entered upon his duties on March 4, 1877, the Forty-fifth Congress, only 6 Senators are now members.

During his entire service in this Chamber it was my privilege to be on terms of the closest intimacy and warmest friendship with him. I respected, honored, and loved him for his nobleness of character, his sound judgment, his wise and judicious counsel, and his unquestionable integrity.

Without any disparagement or reflection upon the valuable services of any other members of this Senate, during his long service here I can frankly and truthfully say that in my judgment he had no superior in discharging the varied duties, responsibilities, and obligations devolving upon Senators.

Few men in public life have had intrusted to them the duties and responsibilities, the trusts and the honors assigned to him by the good people of his State. At all times and under all circumstances he fully met the expectations of his constituents, and to the last enjoyed their respect, confidence, and admiration.

In this Chamber we have lost an able, earnest, efficient, incorruptible, and wise Senator. Full of years, full of honors, he has gone, to return no more, leaving to his family, his State, and his country a character, a record, an example worthy of the emulation of all.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the character and career of Senator HARRIS inspire the strongest faith that can possibly be afforded in the perpetuity of our institutions. Rising, as he did, from the ranks of the people by his own unaided exertions, and accomplishing the great results which he did during a long and eventful life, he presents to all young men the great possibilities for advancement which exist in this free country. In no other country on this globe and in no other age could such a career be possible.

When we behold the great and good men which this country has produced and continues to produce, when we find men on all occasions equal to the great emergencies which are presented, no matter how overwhelming they may appear, we feel more and more confidence in the future of our country, for we know that these examples will inspire those who come after us as the examples of the great men who have preceded us have inspired this generation.

Senator HARRIS was a remarkable man. He had a grasp of intellect which condensed volumes into sentences. He had a fidelity to truth which never allowed him to swerve or go back from it. He remained throughout his long and illustrious life in touch with the people amongst whom he had lived and with whom he had always the warmest sympathy. It was manifest to those who associated with him that in all he did his inspiration was a desire to benefit and serve the people of the United States.

It is not strange that such a sentiment on his part was appreciated by the people of his State and all who had the honor of knowing him. That, sir, was the secret of the confidence which was reposed in him. His confidence in and his reliance on the people inspired them with confidence in return, and so they trusted and honored him. He has furnished an example which gladdens the hearts of all who love their country and who desire to improve the condition of the people.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, while I did not know Senator HARRIS with the intimacy of long personal association, I have since a boy been familiar with his writings, speeches, and public conduct.

The State in which I live has been supplied abundantly from the great State of Tennessee. Many of our best citizens emigrated to Texas from that Commonwealth; and I have noticed that they all seem to know and to love ISHAM G. HARRIS.

So when I first came to the Senate for a short term by appointment of the governor, more than six years ago, I felt that curiosity about Senator HARRIS which always animates younger men to know the actors in great events, sharpened by the recollection of stories told concerning his achievements by those who had long been his personal friends.

When I first saw him, in 1891, he was well-ripened and probably at his best.

I have often watched him, in the cloakroom, in his Senatorial seat, in the chair of the presiding officer, and he always seemed the same. I do not remember ever to have heard him laugh aloud. There was the twinkle in the eye, the manifest enjoyment in the general merriment, but he never appeared to "turn himself loose."

I picture him as he would come into the Senate Chamber. There, in his familiar place on the right of the Vice-President, in the front row, he would take his seat. He hardly seems to say anything as if by previous design. He seems never to make an occasion, but to find it in the current proceedings as set on foot by others. He seems to spy out that something is taking an irregular direction and that he must set it right. He first asks a question or calls for the reading of some document, as if he imperfectly understood it. Then he proceeds to clear up all doubts. First emphasis, then gesticulation—no, not in succession, but an indescribable combination of emphasis and gesticulation.

Attention has often been called to his absolute primacy in the Senate on all questions relating to parliamentary law. Up to the very hour of his last appearance here he was so clear and so magisterial that he never lost his authority in that field.

As has been stated, his service in Congress began in the House of Representatives at the session which convened in December, 1849, and in that, his first session of service, he exhibited that peculiar interest in questions of legislative practice which marked his long Senatorial career, for the reporter makes the following observation touching the proceedings of a particular day:

> Some conversation followed on points of order, in which Messrs. HARRIS of Tennessee, White, Disney, Rumsey, Wentworth, and the Speaker participated.

During his four years in the House I find that he made only one set speech. The Wilmot proviso, with all its exciting incidents, was then the subject of consideration. In that speech we find the same principles, the same habits of thought and manner which marked his life fifty years afterwards. There was brevity, for though the contest was prolonged and the temptation to digress great, he spoke but an hour. There was the strict construction of the Constitution, for he dwelt on the rule that Congress possesses no powers except those expressly delegated by the Constitution or necessary to the exercise of some expressly delegated power; and he, who rarely ever quoted, repeats in that speech the words of another great American in protest against those "vagrant, wandering powers that find no congenial spot on which to rest upon the broad face of the Constitution of the country."

This was his chart of political action in every place of duty. He followed it after leaving Congress in 1853, and it governed his action during all those stirring years which led up to the civil war.

Perhaps the most eventful part of the life of Senator HARRIS was that which related to the great organization of secession. The governors of the Southern States in 1861 were almost without exception men of strong character and ability. The most remarkable of these governors were Brown of Georgia, Letcher of Virginia, Sam Houston of Texas, and HARRIS of Tennessee.

In the difficulties of their surroundings and in vigor of intellectual comprehension, the Texas and Tennessee governors stand highest among this group.

Sam Houston was a strong Union man. The whole secession movement was resisted by him, but, notwithstanding his extraordinary power in Texas, he found himself gradually submerged by a rising wave of public sentiment which finally reached the velocity of a torrent, drove him out of the governor's chair, and took the State out of the Union. There was the spectacle of a man who had been strong in the affections of his State overridden by an excited and determined people, and unable, with all his popularity and influence, to make the slightest headway. He stood almost alone, a Unionist and a conservative, in the midst of organized, indignant, irreconcilable revolution.

The situation of Governor HARRIS in Tennessee was quite a different one. He sympathized with secession, he wanted to take his State out of the Union, and he used his powers and his influence to accomplish the very result which Sam Houston had endeavored to obstruct in Texas. His task was not like that which fell to the hands of the governors in States like South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, where both the people and the executive, with common impulse, hailed the banner of a new confederation. On the contrary, a powerful section of the Tennessee people, led by Andrew Johnson, a great Senator belonging to the same party, confronted Governor HARRIS in his policy of secession.

We need not dwell upon the details of that struggle, but it is enough to say that the courage, tenacity, and generalship of HARRIS prevailed against the combined efforts of Whig and Democratic Union leaders in Tennessee and added that State to the number of those which constituted the Southern Confederacy.

ISHAM G. HARRIS was one of the few public men of whom the people never seemed to tire.

Ordinarily popularity is fleeting. The remarkable changes which come over the House and the Senate in the course of a single decade attest the instability of official tenure; but a few men seem proof against all disfavor; if they are ever criticised their critics are forgotten; if condemned for a vote they are forgiven. To carry opposition to the point of actually defeating their reelection would be considered at home a sort of high treason. So strong is the general confidence in their high purpose and right judgment that it always prevails over minor difficulties when election day rolls around.

Senator HARRIS was one of these rare characters. He was the hero not only of Tennessee but of Tennesseeans scattered throughout the Union. He grew, in their estimation, to be a sort of lineal successor to Andrew Jackson. His name and life and peculiarities always touched their enthusiasm.

To me the most impressive thing in his strong individuality was his willingness always to take responsibility and his absolute unconcern about results—that cheerful faith that the right will take care of itself and that there need be no anxiety on the part of a public man except the anxiety to be right.

I have seen men whom God had blessed with conscience and courage, but not with equanimity, so that, knowing the truth and voting the truth, they were still nervous that they should not be misunderstood and fidgeting about consequences which they were determined to face.

Not so with Senator HARRIS. He seemed to think that a man who acted truly upon his convictions of right held an absolute insurance policy against all disaster at the hands of the people.

What a great life may be worked out on that sort of logic. You may put a small man in Congress, and if he looks at every question as it arises with a heart single and an eye single to finding out the right, in a few years such a dignity will be given to his apparent mediocrity that he will gradually emerge above the level of his fellows and assume a consideration in the country which will make men wonder at the secret of his rise.

If men of moderate mind can be thus lifted by the practice of simple straightforwardness, how splendid becomes the principle when it acts on a man of native intellectual power and force of character? This was the combination in the case of ISHAM G. HARRIS. He was always clear, always firm, always true, always great.

Mr. TURLEY. Mr. President, for more than fifty years the name of ISHAM G. HARRIS has been a household word and a tower of strength in the State of Tennessee. Probably no other man in the history of the State has exercised so potent an influence upon its fortunes and its destiny. Once he served it in the legislature, twice as Presidential elector, twice in the House of Representatives, three times as governor, for four years in war, and four times in the Senate of the United States. Every honor that the people of Tennessee could confer was bestowed on him. Other of her sons may have served her longer in particular departments, but no other one has served her in so many ways or so long and so faithfully as he did.

His power and influence in his native State may be illustrated by the political change brought about by him in 1856. From 1832, the year in which Andrew Jackson was elected to his second term, to 1856, when James Buchanan was the Democratic candidate—a period of twenty-four years—the State of Tennessee had been a Whig stronghold. In 1856 ISHAM G. HARRIS was an elector at large on the Buchanan ticket. The Whigs selected ex-Governor Neil S. Brown to uphold the principles of their party. The canvass made by those great sons of Tennessee is historic in our State. In the judgment of a people who had been accustomed to listen to such men as Grundy, Gentry, Andrew Johnson, Cave Johnson, Polk, Jones, and others of that class, it was pronounced the most remarkable and profound discussion of great political questions which had ever occurred in the State, and all felt that for years it would settle and control the political character and policy of Tennessee.

Governor Brown was a man of great intellect and matchless powers of oratory. He was a man of winning and popular manners; and he had behind him a compact, powerful party, flushed with a quarter of a century of continuous victory. But nothing could resist the earnestness, the force and power of ISHAM G. HARRIS. The campaign was a death blow to the Whig party, and from that time forth Tennessee has been a Democratic State.

Senator HARRIS was one of those rare men who seemed fitted physically, mentally, and morally for every phase and condition, every changing emergency of life.

His appearance was pleasing and impressive. Above the middle height, his figure was well proportioned and compact. His eyes were piercing and full of intelligence. His features were strong and framed to express and portray every feeling and sentiment of his mind and soul. With an iron constitution, which defied fatigue and disease, he possessed a vitality which seemed inexhaustible.

No one faculty of his mind was unduly developed, but each was fitted for its special functions, and all went to make up a well-rounded, perfect intellect. While he was a man of action rather than of books, yet his information was varied and accurate. He never entered upon the examination of any subject without exhausting all the means of information at his command. Men and affairs he studied well and accurately.

He was both passionate and impulsive; but his impulses were high and honorable, and his fiery passions were controlled by his indomitable will and his strict sense of justice. He was fluent and brilliant in conversation; courteous and gallant in bearing and demeanor. Possessed of an undaunted courage that knew not fear, he had at the same time as kind and sympathetic a heart as ever beat in human bosom. His life was one long series of kind deeds and concealed charities. He was the genius of forceful action, of industry and work. He never tired.

Of his rugged honesty and his unspotted honor I need not speak. They are known of all men. He was ambitious of fame, character, distinction, and achievements; and, while he was aggressive and impatient of opposition, yet no man was ever more thoughtful and considerate of the rights and feelings of others.

There have been greater orators than ISHAM G. HARRIS, but few greater debaters; men more learned in books and theories, but few better versed in all the practical affairs of life. There have been lawyers more distinguished, statesmen more renowned, men better equipped in special fields and for particular work, but it is hard to conceive, take him all in all, of a more forceful and efficient man, a man better qualified to impress himself upon his life and times, than was ISHAM G. HARRIS.

We can see this from his long, adventurous, and remarkable career. A penniless youth, he became a successful merchant before he was 21; a lawyer of prominence and distinction before he was 25; a member of the legislature before he was 30; a member of the House of Representatives at 31; governor of his State at 39; an exile from his country at 47; reduced again to poverty before he was 50, he became once more a merchant, and then a lawyer, and finally a Senator in the Congress of the United States—equally great, forceful, and self-reliant under all these conditions and in all these places and positions.

The universality, if I may so call it, of his character and mind especially marked him as a lawyer. He was equally strong and vigorous in every branch of his profession. His practice embraced all the courts. Those who were thrown with him could scarcely tell when he appeared at his best. Sometimes it seemed in the heat and fire of a great criminal trial, when the life of a client hung on the issue, and again when he was bringing the strength of his intellect to the elucidation of some intricate principle before a learned chancellor or the highest tribunal of his State.

No lawyer in Tennessee ever had greater power and influence on its courts and juries, and I may add here that no client who had a just cause was ever turned away by him because he was unable to bring with him a fee. His services were always open to the poor and distressed without fee and without price.

He could and would go to any just length in behalf of what he believed to be right, but at the same time he was practical and conservative. This latter phase of his character is shown by his conduct after his return to Tennessee from his exile in Mexico and England. The South was in the throes of the reconstruction period; negro suffrage had just been established; passion ran riot; and the feeling of hostility against the General Government was, if possible, more intense than during the time of flagrant war. All eyes were at once turned toward him. By his example, by his conduct, and by his advice he counseled moderation and a dignified acquiescence in the new order of things—the inevitable. And no man in Tennessee or in the South did more to bring about that era of good feeling which now exists between the two sections and to revive in the Southern heart that sense of loyalty to and patriotism for our common country which had been stifled by the fierce strife of civil war.

His fairness, his justice, his frank, outspoken, upright character are evidenced by the strong hold he always had on his political opponents. In his hottest political battles he commanded the respect, the esteem, the admiration of those with whom he contended.

His long career in this body is a part of the history of our country. Of his services here others are better qualified to speak than am I.

I can not recall the time when I did not know him. His older sons were my schoolmates and friends. I was raised to respect him as the greatest of living Tennesseeans. From my earliest manhood up to the time of his death our relations were most intimate and confidential. I can say of him what Judge Haywood, the early historian of our State, said of Gen. James Robertson, one of its noblest pioneers:

> He was a man who by his actions merited all the eulogium, esteem, and affection which the most ardent of his countrymen have ever bestowed upon him. Like almost all those in America who have attained eminent celebrity, he had not a noble lineage to boast of nor the escutcheoned armorials of a splendid ancestry; but he had what was far more valuable, a sound mind, a healthy constitution, a robust frame, a love of virtue, an intrepid soul, and an emulous desire for honest fame.

Mr. BATE. I ask that the speech made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] on the occasion of the memorial at Memphis, Tenn., the home of Senator HARRIS, as a representative of the Senate, having been selected by the committee, be printed in connection with the proceedings here to-day. He made a speech, and one would know what it was from the man—a very able effort and especially an analysis of Mr. HARRIS as a Senator. It was brilliant, beautiful, logical, and all that can be said about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SPEECH OF HON. DAVID TURPIE AT MEMPHIS, TENN.

In the midst of the dearth and dryness of mind, the mere inertia and indifference that have so much beset our age, save upon the subject as to how riches may be gotten and profits may accrue, it is a goodly relief as well as a wholesome solace to recall the memory of one who chose and cherished an ideal, a standard of life more noble than this—one who devoted his labor, his attention, his time, his great abilities, with incessant diligence, with unfaltering fidelity, to the public service of the people.

ISHAM G. HARRIS, President of the Senate, for more than twenty years a member of that body, was not born in the purple. He was no favored son of wealth or fortune. The circumstances of his early years were undistinguished by any prestige of superior advantage or opportunity. His education was that of the common school and the academy. For the rest he was well taught, being self-taught. He did not disparage the learning or knowledge of the schools, but he gathered wisdom yet more abundantly. Nature had so richly endowed him for the whole course of the journey of life that he needed not to tarry long by the way for other assistance.

He was a man of manifold gifts, and so truly many-sided that it would be presumption in anyone to attempt to describe him except under those aspects in which he came under his observation. In the later years of his Senatorial service he was very often engaged in the discharge of the duties of the Chair. He presided with much dignity, with equal impartiality and decision. His long experience with legislative bodies, his thorough acquaintance with the rules of the Senate, and his thoughtful study of the general principles of parliamentary law had qualified him in the most eminent manner for the position to which he had been elected by the free choice of his colleagues. It was well worth a journey to Washington to see him in the chair in a full Senate at some period of lively colloquy or exciting debate.

Order reigned first in silence save as to the member who was speaking in his place. And this condition was unbroken, undisturbed, continuous; yet as President of the Senate he seldom used the gavel. The face, the figure, the whole demeanor was such as to require and enforce respect and attention. Questions of recognition were instantly decided. Interrupting messages from the House or from the President were smoothly announced and dispatched with all due celerity and the regular course of discussion was resumed. If a knot or tangle, perchance, occurred in the day's proceedings, it was untied by an explanation from the Chair so succinct in statement, so clear in its tenor and effect, so absolutely fair and candid in its purpose, that all acquiesced therein.

Sometimes near the close of a long and tedious sitting a question of order was raised which required a review of the former proceedings of the Senate for the whole day, or perhaps longer. This review, in his terms and language, was a plain, clear narration of events in the precise order of their occurrence; no step was omitted; nothing forgotten. Every amendment and modification was noticed and the time of its offer. Even the motions that failed—the unsuccessful motion to adjourn, to refer, or to reconsider—were not overlooked. His opinion was an oral transcript of the record during every hour up to the moment when the question in argument arose. It was delivered without note or memoranda, and then followed the final ruling. Such a passage in parliamentary procedure showed beyond question the most retentive power of memory, intellectual acumen and discernment, an accurate knowledge of precedent and practice, a comprehensive grasp of the present and actual condition of affairs so much required in the Presidency of the leading parliamentary body of the world.

Now and then a new Senator, unacquainted with the rules, would take the floor with an impossible motion, one out of time, out of place, contrary to rule. Such an occasion afforded an opportunity for a study of the manner of the President worthy the closest observation. With the shadow of a smile, almost suppressed, upon his face, the Chair, having heard the motion, stated that in his opinion the same could not just then be entertained, always in such an instance giving the reasons for his action, briefly, but firmly, and accompanying the ruling with a suggestion to the honorable Senator of another way in which he might probably accomplish his purpose. This was done not after the fashion of a master toward his pupil, but rather in the tone and manner of civility with which a gentleman engaged in conversation with another upon a topic of some moment, in which both were interested, would remind his friend of a circumstance which he knew quite well, but had for the moment forgotten. Yet he could administer a rebuke when reproof was necessary in the most courtly phrase and with great severity, but the occasion of this exercise of discipline must have been plain, apparent, salient. It must have been some action of the offender in violation of the ordinary rules of decorum and propriety so marked as to overcome, for the time being, the natural kindness of heart and the habitual suavity of the presiding officer. For no man ever participated in the deliberations of a legislative assembly who had a more particular regard or a more considerate deference for the rights, the opinions, the feelings, and sensibilities of others.

His excellence as a presiding officer, his studies and research in the annals of Congress and in the history of precedents in free representative assemblies, caused him for many years to be consulted as an arbiter upon these subjects. It was no uncommon thing for him to be called upon in the open Senate by Senators of either side, sometimes by the Vice-President or other occupant of the chair, to deliver from his seat an opinion in regard to some disputed question of order which was at the time pending.

When he spoke thus in response to an inquiry from his seat, there was quite a difference in his tone and conduct from that which accompanied his utterances when in the chair—a difference easily observed by one accustomed to note his manner. It was seldom expressed in words, always implied by the most courteous but constant intimation. It seemed the result or effect of the change in his position. There was in both instances the same lucid statement of the point in difference, the same temperate, careful, and thoroughly rational discussion of the diverse sides of the controversy, followed by his own conclusion and the course of argument which led him thereto. But in the chair he spoke always as one having authority, an authority derived from the Constitution, vested in him as such by the suffrages of his fellow-members.

When he spoke from his seat upon like questions, his demeanor, his language, and action were no longer those of command, but of advice, of counsel. He was now the elder brother in consultation with his peers. In every mode of implication, by the tone and rhythm of the voice, by gesture, always significant and picturesque, it was made apparent that another now occupied the chair, upon whom devolved the duty of deciding, and those who had honored him by asking his views of the case were alike responsible—answerable for the action which the Senate might take, not at all bound by any judgment of his any further than reason might show its propriety.

This delicacy of adjustment to change of position was one of the most singular characteristics of his whole course. I do not suppose that he was at all conscious of it, or that it was in any wise premeditated. It was in the nature of the man. He was one of those lofty spirits who could afford not only to recognize but to defer to his associates, having such rare and absolute toleration for the freedom of speech and opinions that he declined, in such case, to dictate to others, as he would have spurned dictation to himself.

Too much praise can hardly be given him for the sedulous care, the uninterrupted regularity, with which he performed the duties of his office and of his position as a Senator. He recognized in the most practical way the several obligations which were due from him to the country at large, to his own beloved State, to the Senate, to the committees of that body, to his colleagues in both branches of the Congress, to his very numerous correspondents in all parts of the country. He seemed to have made an allotment of his time to each of these acknowledged claimants, and with respect to an engagement concerning his official action he was of all men the most precise in terms and the most punctual in performance. This regular performance of daily duty had become with him habitual—as manifest in the last days of his active service as in the beginning.

He participated very often in the debates of the Senate, but he seldom spoke at much length, insomuch that those who heard him wished most heartily, not that he had said more—for few could say as much in less compass—but that he had spoken longer. He was very forcible in colloquy, rapid and keen in retort, very able in reply. When he addressed the Senate at greater length, upon some measure of national or general concern, he used great care both in preparation and delivery.

Fact followed fact, statement succeeded statement, argument, with the reasoning in its support, was presented in the most perfect symmetry and order. If a good style has to be defined, as it has been by a high authority, "as the use of proper words in proper places," he had a style most excellent. His voice was a full tenor, clear, musical, resonant; the sound of it lingered in the ear after the words had ceased. To this was added a certain demeanor of the body only partially described in the term gesture, since the whole person seemed to be informed with the spirit of his utterances, and when he kindled into enthusiasm, as he sometimes did, the effect was in the highest degree impressive.

He was by nature an admirable actor, without the slightest trace of art or affectation; yet, in the ordinary course of events, when he rose and addressed the Chair, although something was always said, it was more especially looked for that something was to be done. His executive force, tact, and discretion were well known and highly appreciated, so that it frequently occurred that he was designated by unanimous consent to assume the parliamentary management and conduct of the most important measures. This took place with reference to the revenue bill of 1894. After its introduction and second reading, and toward the close of the general debate, he was selected to take charge of its further progress.

The measure was at that time yet in most perilous case. It was threatened with a deluge of adverse amendments, it was encountered by the sharpest and most capable opposition, it was endangered by the cold indifference of some of those who had voted in support of it, but the Senator from Tennessee did not decline the task thus given him. He was even then well stricken in years, but he was a friend of this measure. He and many others of his side earnestly desired its passage. Under these conditions his eyes were not dim, nor was his natural force abated. Through the prolonged hours of that laborious session, day and night, whenever the Senate convened, during the repeated periods of delay, obstruction, and postponement, he was always in his seat or in his place on the floor.

If any had grown weary, he was always on the alert; if some were even inclined to slumber, he was always awake upon the watch. Those present he encouraged, the absent he chided—he chided, but he sent for them. Message after message, written and verbal, with his compliments, with his regards, with assurances of his highest consideration, only they must come—the absentees must attend. It was hard to decline an invitation from Senator HARRIS. It was usually more effective than a summons from the Sergeant-at-Arms.

One of the most remarkable of his varied accomplishments was that of felicitous importunity, an importunity full of ease and elegance, not discouraged by refusal, biding time in courteous patience, not to be gotten rid of either as to the man or his subject. The eye, the touch, the tone of wistful entreaty, stirred the living, and would, were that possible, have raised the dead into action in behalf of the cause for which he pleaded. The act of 1894 could hardly have failed with such an advocate. He had announced soon after taking charge of the bill that it was possible to pass it. What was possible was accomplished. The measure became the law of the land; and this result was largely due to his parliamentary tact and judgment—his patient, persistent, unwearied assiduity.

And again, at a later period in his life, when the weight of years must have pressed still more heavily upon his power of endurance, he took upon himself, at the request of those near him, the labor and duty of organizing and uniting those inside of his own political household in favor of the policy of bimetallism—a policy which he always declared involved neither change nor innovation, but was as to our law restoration, as to silver itself restitution, and a safe return to the ancient, long-tried, and well-established usage and practice of our fathers. With what success he prosecuted and completed his portion of this great design the official record of the late national convention specially discloses, and we all are witnesses.

It must have seemed even to his ardent zeal in the beginning a work of mountainous difficulty and of much uncertainty in the event. It involved a correspondence under his direction and supervision with persons residing in every State and Territory and Congressional district of the United States. It required a daily comparison of part with part, a summary of very numerous details, sudden and constant resort to the best method of answer and reply, information wide and accurate, with ceaseless vigilance and circumspection to the close. Such were for many months his labors, worthy of the man and of the cause.

Those versed in modern mechanism and invention have furnished us with a phrase now become quite familiar—"applied science." Called upon to designate in the briefest terms the controlling, guiding principle of a career so greatly prolonged, so highly distinguished, we might justly name it "applied common sense" in its broadest significance and in the most active development.

Action was a necessity of his being. He was as prone to take the initiative, and to keep it, as the sparks to fly upward. Some one, now many years ago, in Washington, spoke to him once about accepting a position upon the Federal bench. "No," he said, "I desire no such position. I do not wish to be tied up like a log in a raft with nothing to do but to float or to drift at the end of a line. My boat must be in the moving current. I must feel the gale; should it come, I must ride out the storm, if I have nothing left but the rudder in my hand."

This readiness to participate actively in affairs was not exercised without care or caution. He was neither rash, reckless, nor indifferent to consequences. His vision, his view of men and events, was clear. He was subject to no delusions. He sometimes failed, as men must who will act while others wait, but he was of valiant heart, strenuous will, and of that fertility in resource which either eluded or defied disaster. Failure, with him, was no finality—rather a cause and occasion for further endeavor.

His life was so crowded with action that it is not known that he had the leisure, even if he had the inclination, to have left behind him a single line of personal history or reminiscence. Moreover, he was a man of strong attachments; in friendship, earnest and sincere. How he loved Memphis, the city of his home and residence! He delighted to speak of its thrift and progress, of its harbor and landings, of its public buildings and other improvements, all of which had felt the fostering hand of his care and solicitude. How inseparably his name is connected with the magnificent transit-way of commerce and travel which, hard by, spans the broad current of the Father of Waters. Often he spoke of his State, always in the language of the warmest affection—his native State, whose great and generous constituencies had so long and so bounteously given him their support and confidence.

The faculty of almost instant adaptation of himself to circumstances of whatever exigency, his manner of molding men to his side and way, his steady advance against insurmountable obstacles, his survival of the rudest shocks of adverse fortune were as manifest throughout his whole course as they are indescribable.

Witness his departure to Mexico at the conclusion of the great civil war, his adventurous sojourn within the domain of that Republic, his voyage to England, for he crossed the ocean not in quest of ease, but of fresh fields of new enterprise; his return to Tennessee and to this city, the reentry upon the business of his profession, his continuous and very successful practice in the courts, the canvass for his first election to the Senate, his successive reelections to that position—these are testimonials written at large to the genius, character, and conduct of one destined to so conspicuous a career.

Last scene of all—his death at the capital—at his place and post of duty, the obsequies in the Senate Chamber, the funeral cortége thence bearing his remains to their final resting place, a whole city in mourning to receive them, a State—the whole sisterhood of States—in sorrowing sympathy with you for a loss so irreparable, commemorating with you, my hearers, also to-day the demise of a great statesman whose course, with all its vicissitudes, has been in the end so grandly crowned with years, with honors, and with the just fame which follows a life so useful and beneficent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The ceremonies having been concluded, by virtue of the last of the series of resolutions heretofore adopted the Senate stands adjourned.

The Senate accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, March 28, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 24, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the naval establishment for the next fiscal year.

STATISTICS OF LAKE COMMERCE.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to make a report.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yield to the gentleman to make a report.

Mr. PERKINS. The Committee on Printing makes the following report, and asks its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa submits a report from the Committee on Printing, for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution No. 23.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed by the Public Printer 10,000 copies of House Document No. 277, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, entitled Statistics of Lake Commerce, 4,000 of which shall be for the use of the Treasury Department.

Mr. PERKINS. There is an amendment to the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Commerce," in line 5, and add: "4,000 copies for the use of the House, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 copies for the use of the Treasury Department."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to know, if the amendment is agreed to, how the resolution would read?

Mr. PERKINS. It makes another division of the number of copies.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, but you strike out a few words. I understood the Clerk to read——

The SPEAKER. A change of number.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand; but I thought the Clerk read strike out the two words, "vital statistics."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, what I asked was that the Clerk report the resolution as it would read when amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has so reported the resolution.

Mr. PERKINS. I can tell the gentleman.

Mr. BAILEY. It is utterly impossible to know how it would read by what the Clerk has read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as it would read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

So as to read: "4,000 copies for the use of the House"——

Mr. BAILEY. I want the whole resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas wants to hear the resolution read as it would read after it is amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed by the Public Printer 10,000 copies of House document No. 227, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, entitled Statistics of Lake Commerce, 4,000 copies for the use of the House, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 copies for the use of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen this document. I presume that it relates to interstate commerce on the lakes.

Mr. PERKINS. It relates to the statistics of lake commerce. The request is from the Treasury Department. The resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]; and if the gentleman from Texas needs any further information, I have no doubt the gentleman from Ohio would be glad to give it.

Mr. BAILEY. I will not detain the House by asking that; but I am not perfectly sure that such a document should be printed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. FRANCIS RIVER, ARKANSAS.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask consideration for the bill (H. R. 5090) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Francis River, in the State of Arkansas, and ask to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, is this a request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will have to refuse the gentleman. Several gentlemen on this side have made similar requests and I have refused, and justice requires that I should treat all alike.

Mr. McCULLOCH. It is a little bridge bill, with Senate amendments, that can be disposed of in a minute.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have been asked by three or four different gentlemen, and have stated that I would be unable to yield; and it will be utterly unfair and unjust for me to do so now. I must ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be retained on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. It will lie on the table.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was then agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year 1898–99, and the gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, it is the very earnest desire of the Committee on Naval Affairs that this important bill may be acted upon by the House and sent to the Senate as speedily as possible. This bill is reported under somewhat extraordinary circumstances, and I therefore have no hesitation in calling attention to the fact that it has the most liberal provisions for the strengthening and maintenance of the naval establishment that has ever been reported to the House.

The reasons for this are too obvious to require mention from me. The committee to whom the House intrusted the preparation of this bill have not failed to be impressed with the circumstances that surround legislation at this session, and it has been their earnest desire to meet fully and speedily what they believe to be the expectations of the House and of the country in providing this great arm of our military service with all that it could reasonably require to meet every exigency of the public service and every demand for the maintenance of the public honor.

Necessarily, the bill has been somewhat delayed beyond the usual time, by the increased demands from day to day to meet the exigencies that were not foreseen at the beginning of this session, but we have reported our bill after the fullest consideration, after the most ample investigation, and we are confident to-day that the House will sustain the action of the committee in having provided, so far as in their knowledge it was possible, for every demand that could legitimately arise for the strengthening of this branch of the public service during the current fiscal year.

I may be pardoned, Mr. Chairman, for alluding to the fact that in these exciting and somewhat sensational times there have been directed toward the committee of which I have the honor to be the chairman various unjust and untruthful criticisms. I desire to say here to-day, in the only body to which either myself or the committee are responsible, the House of Representatives, which put this task of preparing a bill upon us, and to which we are by law and by right responsible for the report of our stewardship, that any and every intimation, from whatever source it may have proceeded, that this committee has for one instant lacked in a desire to meet the fullest requirements of the executive department in meeting every exigency that has come or may come upon us, is absolutely without foundation.

I have participated in a more or lese active way in the preparation of fourteen annual appropriation bills for the naval establishment, and I can truthfully say that upon all of the other bills preceding this, in the aggregate, there has not been expended a tithe of the thought and care and labor that has been given to this bill. The members of my committee have attended its sessions day after day when their physical condition required that they should have been at their homes.

We have been laboring in season and out of season to meet the extraordinary requirements that have come upon us, and the result is before you. We do not claim that this bill is perfect, but we do not know of a feature that it contains which in our judgment ought not to receive the approval of the House of Representatives and of the country. We have been, it is true, far more liberal with the requirements and estimates of the executive department than would ordinarily be the case.

Every member of experience knows how estimates are drawn, and what the usual course of legislation is in regard to the increased demands for expenditure, but we have recognized that we were preparing legislation under extraordinary conditions of public affairs; and this bill, which is now upon the desk of members, has not only responded to every legitimate requirement of the executive department, but in many of its features has gone beyond it, as in the judgment of the committee was demanded by the exigencies of the situation.

I presume, Mr. Chairman, that most of the members have read the bill, as well as the report of the committee, and I shall be exceedingly brief in the reference I make thereto. This bill carries an appropriation aggregating $35,683,058.68. The amount appropriated in the bill for the last fiscal year was $31,918,626.55. The estimate submitted by the Department for the coming fiscal year was $33,128,234.19. The appropriations carried in this bill exceed the appropriations for the last fiscal year by $3,764,432.13, and are $2,554,824.49 over the estimates submitted by the Department.

This increase extends all along the line. In the first place, we may properly mention the fact that we have again increased the enlisted force of the Navy. In the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy, citing the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, who requested an increase of 1,500 in the enlisted force, the report of the Secretary stated that an increase of 1,000 would, in his judgment, meet the requirements of the service.

Since that time circumstances have changed. The demands upon the enlisted force have increased; and your committee, acting upon their own responsibility and their recognition of the situation confronting us, have increased the enlisted force of the Navy by 2,000, adding 1,750 men and 250 apprentice boys.

Mr. CANNON. What is the total increase?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will state again that we have increased the total enlisted force of the Navy by 2,000. We have done this in view of the fact that for the first time in years it has been deemed essential to put into commission all of the vessels of our Navy; and, as is known by all, we have been purchasing additional tonnage abroad. So that the committee felt that it was not only their duty to meet the suggestion of the Secretary for a thousand more men, but to make additional provision for 1,000 beyond that to meet exigencies that have since arisen.

In regard to the officers of the Navy, while it was not originally, in December last when we took charge of this bill, the intention or the expectation to make provision for additional officers upon the appropriation bill, but rather to refer such propositions and consider them under the head of a general reorganization of the naval force, the representations that have been made to the committee recently of the absolute necessity for an increase in the corps of paymasters and an increase in the corps of surgeons were so effective upon the judgment of our committee that in response to the direct personal and official request of the Secretary and of the chiefs of those departments we have authorized an increase of 15 paymasters and 25 acting assistant surgeons of the Navy.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. With great pleasure.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman has said that this bill contemplates an increase of the force of the Navy. I wish to ask from what source that increase is to be taken—from the Naval Militia?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No, sir; the force to which I refer is the enlisted force of the Navy—the petty officers, seamen, landsmen, marines, and boys.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then this additional force is not taken from the Naval Militia?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Naval Militia to which the gentleman refers are not available for that purpose.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why not?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Because they are enlisted under State laws for specific service, and are not necessarily available for service on board men-of-war; they are not necessarily seamen, and not necessarily expert in the duties of seamanship. They are organized under State laws with certain aid from the Navy Department for certain specific purposes, among which I may state is the protection of the harbors and coast lines within their limit. But they are not available directly, as I understand, for service as seamen, landsmen, and marines on board our ships of war. The men whom we have authorized to be enlisted are men who are to become a permanent part of the enlisted force of the Navy.

Mr. Chairman, I had queried in my own mind whether I would make reference to another fact in this immediate connection. The suggestions of my colleagues on the committee have decided me that I should do so; and I do it more especially because the subject to which I am about to allude has been made the text of some very scandalous and mischievous criticisms, not only upon myself, for which I care little, but upon the legislation which is now presented to this House.

In a leading New York paper of yesterday I read a statement, the exact language of which I will quote, so that there can be no mistake. I want to say to my colleagues in the House that no criticism purely personal to myself could induce me to refer to a matter of this kind, for after fourteen years of public service, in the light of day, among my associates in this House, I do not feel called upon to rise on any occasion to vindicate my integrity or my patriotism.

I received yesterday through the mail a clipping from the New York Sun, a leading and influential paper, which is marked conspicuously with black pencil, "Shame," with three lines under it—"Shame to the M. C. from Maine." And then there is a big, black hand with a finger pointing to a certain paragraph, which is marked.

The editorial thus marked is largely devoted to eulogy—eulogy of good men, great men, patriotic men who have been laboring for their country in these days of trial. And then it goes on to refer to matters in this bill in this way:

So far as naval preparation is concerned, the report of the Maine inquiry board finds it as complete as Congress has permitted—

That leaves the brunt of the criticism on Congress. But the article goes on and becomes a little more concrete and individual—for here we are compelled to note with equal indignation and disgust that the engine rooms of this fleet are less than half supplied with engineers, many ships having but a quarter of their complement and a number of them less than a quarter. Let Congressman BOUTELLE of Maine answer it. The responsibility is his alone. And no one has charged him with being a knave. That a fool can do the more harm of the two is an old story.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to agree with the suggestion of some of my committee colleagues sitting near me that perhaps a few words from me in regard to that extraordinary slander are desirable for the enlightenment of the House. I am inclined to think that without some statement from me members of this House and others who should read such a declaration might be led to reflect not only upon myself, but upon the committee for failing to remedy a condition of things which the article sets forth; so I will briefly inform the House of the facts in regard to this matter.

As I stated to you some time ago, it was not the original intention of the committee to deal with increases or reorganizations in the force of naval officers in this appropriation bill. We can only do so by the indulgence of the House and by an elastic interpretation of the rules. We intended to deal with all of these matters in a comprehensive consideration of the various plans of reorganization of the various corps.

A little over a week ago, when my committee had assembled for the express purpose of closing up this bill, I found the Chief of Engineers waiting for me and for the committee, with a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, which, with the permission of the House, I shall put into the RECORD, commending especially to me and to the committee his representation of the absolute need of more engineer officers to run the engines of our ships. The letter was as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 12, 1898.

SIR: The Engineer in Chief, Commodore Melville, has presented me the accompanying statement, showing the absolute necessity of more engineer officers, especially in case of any emergency. The matter was fully treated in his annual report, and also urged upon the attention of Congress in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy.

As the Engineer in Chief says, the number of engineer officers now attached to various vessels in commission is barely enough to admit of the performance of their duty in time of peace, and wholly inadequate in time of war, when increased vigilance and constant presence of officers on duty in charge of the machinery will become imperative.

Will you permit me to commend his suggestions to your favorable consideration and ask you to give him an opportunity to lay the matter before you?

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. C. A. BOUTELLE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

Of course we gave the Chief of Engineers a full and courteous hearing. He stated his case, and he proffered to us a paragraph to be incorporated in the appropriation bill. The paragraph that he thus presented, with the indorsement of the Department, embraced a practical reorganization of the Engineer Corps—the active Corps of Engineers. It provided just how many of such a rank and just how many of such a rank that corps should be composed of, practically reorganizing it. This is the paragraph proposed:

Proposed amendment to the bill making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899.

Provided, That the active list of the Engineer Corps of the Navy shall be composed of 15 chief engineers with the relative rank of captain, 20 chief engineers with the relative rank of commander, 60 chief engineers with the relative rank of lieutenant-commander, 90 passed assistant engineers with the relative rank of lieutenant, 80 passed assistant engineers with the relative rank of lieutenant (junior grade), 50 assistant engineers with the relative rank of ensign: And provided further, That former engineer officers of the Navy who have resigned or been honorably discharged from the Navy with creditable records since January 1, 1882, and who are not above 45 years of age, may be placed on the active list of the Engineer Corps of the Navy in such place and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may approve: And provided further, That naval cadets of the engineer division now at sea, and naval cadets of the engineer division of the first class now at the Naval Academy, may, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, become at once eligible for commissions as assistant engineers in the Navy: And provided further, That vacancies in the lowest grade of the Engineer Corps of the Navy as above constituted, that may exist after the above provisions have been complied with, may be filled by graduates of recognized technological schools of the United States, subject to such restrictions and examinations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

I asked him what the effect would be in regard to increase, and I understood him to state that they wanted, and that this paragraph would provide, 110 additional assistant engineers. My committee gave him a cordial hearing, and after some conversation, as chairman of the committee I suggested that inasmuch as the Secretary of the Navy had recommended certain other increases in the official corps as essential, we would notify him to attend our meeting the next day, and to bring with him the Chief of the Engineering Bureau and the chiefs of the other bureaus, when we would arrange for legislation that would meet all the requirements for additional officers in the service.

The next morning the Secretary came in response to our invitation, accompanied by the chiefs of the Bureaus of Navigation, Steam Engineering, Medicine and Surgery, and Supplies and Accounts. These gentlemen and the committee discussed the situation. We considered the paragraph of the Secretary's annual report in which he had stated that we needed more line officers, more engineer officers, more surgeons, and more paymasters. The immediate and exigent requirement in the Engineering Bureau was stated to be so serious that we had two vessels at League Island that could not be moved to New York for lack of engineers to run the machinery. And in the course of that conversation it was suggested that in the proposed reorganization, known as the personnel bill, which is intended to compose the long-standing disputes between two of the corps of the Navy, the line and the engineers, there was a paragraph providing that 100 first-class machinists should be enlisted and appointed as warrant officers, to receive liberal pay, and those 100 men should be employed in handling engines, and thereby relieve that number of junior engineer officers.

The Secretary favored it as an excellent provision that, as was understood, would set 100 engineers free, supply their places with 100 of the most skillful machinists that $1,200 a year and warrants in the Navy could bring, and to make up the additional ten more that the Chief of Engineers said was demanded it was proposed that we should immediately commission the two classes of naval cadets who are now serving their two years at sea; that as to the present class in the Academy we should abolish the two years' sea service and immediately commission that class on their graduation from the Academy this summer, which would give eighty-two cadets to be made ensigns and assistant engineers; and in addition to that, that we could permit former engineers of the Navy who are now in private life, who have gone out of the service with honorable records, to be restored to the Navy to provide for all the requirements of the engineer service.

We then considered the question of the additional assistant surgeons and of the additional assistant paymasters, and the Secretary of the Navy was requested by me, speaking for my committee, to put into proper form these suggestions, which had received the tacit approval of the committee, and send them to us in such language as the Department thought would, when inserted in the appropriation bill, prove effective in putting into force its recommendation and wishes on the subjects named.

The next day I received the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 14, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith the draft of an amendment to the pending bill making appropriations for the naval service for the ensuing year, in which draft is embodied the matters orally agreed upon during my interview with the committee this morning, with the exception of that which relates to the reinstatement of officers late of the Engineer Corps who have honorably resigned or who have been honorably discharged in pursuance of law.

On further consideration, and after conference with the Engineer in Chief, it is hoped that with the additional engineers we shall get by shortening the course at the Naval Academy to four years, it will not be necessary to ask for a general law for reinstatement of such officers, but to leave the matter open for special legislation in individual cases as the committee may elect.

Permit me also to urge the great importance of taking up and passing the personnel bill, which is the work of a board representing the line and Engineer Corps, and which, for the first time in a long period, have, with some concessions on each side, agreed upon that measure, insuring a reorganization of the Navy and securing its efficiency and harmony. It seems to me that the time is very propitious for this enactment, when all parties are inspired by patriotic spirit, and that if the opportunity is now lost the result may be a renewal for years to come of the friction and antagonism which have for so long stood in the way of efficient harmony in the naval service.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG,
Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES A. BOUTELLE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

The draft of the provisions for insertion in the bill was as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act the students at the Naval Academy shall have the title of midshipmen, and on successfully completing the course at that institution each shall be commissioned in the lowest grade of the line, Engineer or Marine Corps, the two years' course at sea being hereby abolished.

That upon the passage of this act all the naval cadets of the line and engineer divisions who have completed the four years' course at the Naval Academy and are performing duty at sea shall be commissioned in the lowest grade of the line, Engineer or Marine Corps, and the members of each class shall take rank among themselves according to their graduating multiples as was determined at the end of the four years' course at the Naval Academy.

That upon the passage of this act the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint a board for the examination of men for the position of warrant machinists, 100 of whom are hereby authorized. The said examination shall be open, first, to all machinists by trade of good record in the naval service, and if a sufficient number of machinists from the Navy are not found duly qualified, then any machinist of good character in civil life shall be eligible for such examination and appointment to fill the remaining vacancies.

All subsequent vacancies in the list of warrant machinists shall be filled by competitive examination before a board ordered by the Secretary of the Navy, and open to all machinists by trade, who are in the Navy, and machinists of good character in civil life authorized by the Secretary of the Navy to appear before said board, and where candidates from civil life and from the naval service possess equal qualifications the preference shall be given to those from the naval service.

That the pay of warrant machinists shall be $1,200 per annum for the first three years after date of appointment, and $1,400 per annum thereafter, and they shall be retired under the provisions of existing law for warrant officers. Warrant machinists shall receive at first an acting appointment, which may be made permanent under regulations established by the Navy Department for other warrant officers. They shall take rank with other warrant officers according to date of appointment, and shall wear such uniform as may be prescribed by the Navy Department.

Mr. Chairman, I immediately laid this proposition before the committee. I was in favor of it then. I have been in favor of it ever since. I am in favor of every provision of it now, and without attempting to speak for the committee specifically in regard to this particular suggestion that I am about to make, I have the right to say here, personally, that while I was ready and am ready to provide any men, whether lieutenants or ensigns, engineers or machinists, doctors or paymasters, or any others who are needed to insure the efficiency of the naval service, I firmly believe, based on some experience on the water, or some experience in the Navy, and a considerable experience in naval legislation, that no addition of 100 men could be made to the force of our fleets to-day that would be more valuable to this country and to the service than the appointment of 100 of the first-class machinists of this country in positions of responsibility and rank which have never before been accorded in the Navy to our mechanics; in positions which recognize the dignity of skilled labor, the importance of mechanical proficiency, by awarding not only a high rate of pay for mechanical service, but an official status on board the ships of our Navy that would be honorable alike to themselves and their craft.

Now, what came of that? I do not propose to enter into any discussion of motives, but we all know the strong feeling that is excited in regard to public measures that affect the positions and interests of individuals. And perhaps it is enough for me to say that a desire on the part of a great many people to secure the immediate enactment of a measure affecting the rank and interests of two of the corps of officers in the Navy in some way seemed to become operative in antagonism to these propositions, which were originally formulated in my committee room at a conference of the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation and Detail, who is the Adjutant-General of the Navy, the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, the Surgeon-General, and the Paymaster-General, and subsequently forwarded to me as chairman from the Department in writing, with the request of the Secretary for its passage. Now, why is it not in the bill?

The New York Sun says that Mr. BOUTELLE is responsible for some alleged failure to provide for the engineer force of the Navy. My answer to that is that the absence of that legislation from the printed copy of our bill is due to the personal and official request of the Department, and I am not going to bear responsibility which does not belong to me.

The Assistant Secretary of the Navy came to the Capitol to request, first, that the committee should incorporate an entire code of legislation, reorganizing two of the branches of the Navy, into this appropriation bill, a legislative measure that by no stretch of parliamentary courtesy could be permissible upon it; and as the committee decided that we could not put that into the bill properly, and as everybody knew that it would be subject to a point of order, the committee were requested to eliminate these provisions from the bill, lest their enactment might affect in some way future possible action upon the matter of reorganization.

Naturally I insisted upon something more than a verbal withdrawal of these requests, and I received it, and I have it here to-day. I said to the Secretary that our committee would be guided by the wishes of the Department, because we were trying in every possible way to fortify and sustain them, but that with that legislation drawn up in specific form lying on my desk, with the official request of the Secretary of the Navy for us to incorporate it in the appropriation bill, I could not fail to present and press it, unless I had equally specific authority from the Department for its omission. On the 18th of March, 1898, I received the following letters:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 18, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith a letter from the Assistant Secretary, stating the result arrived at after his interview with you and with Speaker REED with reference to the personnel bill.

The arrangement is satisfactory to me, as it insures either the personnel bill in its entirety, which I believe to be a consummation vitally important to the service, or, at least, the provisions for warrant machinists and for the commissioning of naval cadets immediately upon the conclusion of the four years' course, so that in either event the additional force necessary by the increase of the Navy for the running of engines will be insured.

Please accept my acknowledgments for the consideration which you and the committee have given to the Assistant Secretary, and believe me,

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. C. A. BOUTELLE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 18, 1898.

SIR: I have been all day before the House Committee on Naval Affairs and in communication with the Speaker, and after much consultation have made them a proposition on which they acted, I stating distinctly that it had to be made on my own authority, and that you might repudiate it. I believe, however, that it is exactly in the line of the views you expressed to me this morning. It is this:

The committee have left out of the appropriation bill the provision for the hundred machinists and for the commissioning of the cadets, it being the understanding that immediately after the appropriation bill has gone to the House they shall take up the personnel bill and report either that bill or else these provisions that they have struck out of the appropriation bill, or whatever combination the committee decide, the Speaker saying that he believes without question that the Committee on Rules will provide for the immediate consideration of this bill, so that it will go through the House, in all probability, very close to the appropriation bill. I have the honor, sir, to recommend that you approve what I have done, and so notify Mr. BOUTELLE, stating to him at the same time that the paymasters and surgeons asked for by the Department should be provided for in the appropriation bill.

Very respectfully,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
Assistant Secretary.

The Honorable the SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

What the Secretary there refers to is the fact that we were urged to give some assurance that we would take up some other bill and pass it in such a way as to render the proposed amendments to the appropriation bill unnecessary. Of course, Mr. Chairman, nobody could give such a promise, pledge, or assurance as that. The only assurance that could be given, and it was given by courtesy and not by right, was that the subcommittee charged with this entirely distinct matter of legislation would bring it up as early as possible and press its consideration. If the bill referred to should not be passed, then no provision will have been made for this pressing want represented to me by the Chief of Engineers a week ago, and we will have to trust to some other legislation to secure it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think everybody here understands what I have stated. Such is the situation to-day; and the responsibility for the fact that the naval appropriation bill does not contain specific legislation providing for every alleged need of the Engineer Bureau and of every other bureau rests upon other shoulders than mine. I favored the legislation, and was reluctant to have it omitted from this bill. That is all I have to say upon the subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in other respects the committee have sought to meet every requirement, as I have stated before. We probably, at the outset of this session, would not have provided for so large an increase of the Navy as we have in this bill; but confronted as we are with the fact that the United States Government in a crisis has been subjected to the humiliation of raking over the shipyards of Europe to find vessels with which to protect our coast, we have taken the lesson to heart and felt that it was incumbent upon us to go forward with some reasonable degree of activity in making provision for producing our Navy through the labor and skill and impulse of our own citizens, which, if we had done for the last fifteen years in a greater degree, would have saved us the humiliation of hoisting our flag on foreign-built vessels to-day, and have given us the satisfaction of having our flag float over vessels that had been built in our own country, under our own flag, by our own skilled labor.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. If the gentleman will permit me, I desire to ask him a question. I notice that this bill provides for the building of three battle ships.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It does. I had just referred to that in an incidental way.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman tell us how long it takes to build a battle ship?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. One of the reasons, and one of the principal reasons, why we made this provision for three battle ships was the fact that it takes so long to build them.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. About how long?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. About three years.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. There is a considerable interest felt in the matter by various gentlemen, who have expressed a wish to know how long it took to build one of these vessels.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is a well-known fact.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. About three years?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. About three years, considerably less if under forced conditions working day and night.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. With an added force of men.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. With an added force of men. That is the reason we want to begin three, because it takes so long to build them.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. It might be possible to build one of them in two years?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not know whether we could build a first-class battle ship in two years. I suppose the gentleman is skirmishing around, basing an idea of some incompatibility of this provision with immediate prospects of war. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; I have been merely seeking information as to the length of time it takes to build these battle ships.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. All right; it is about three years, or two years and a half if in a hurry. We have provided for building three first-class battle ships. I believe we certainly have not overestimated the demand of the House in that regard. One of the most important factors in naval warfare to-day has become what is known as the torpedo-boat destroyer. She is larger than the torpedo boat, and can take the sea and eat up the small torpedo boats.

In the modern way of conducting naval warfare the small torpedo boat could, if it is not obstructed, destroy the battle ship, but the torpedo-boat destroyer can guard the battle ship to a great extent against them. I will say, briefly, not as an expert in naval warfare, but simply referring to that phase in the development of the torpedo boat, that the torpedo boat is quite effective, and in that regard has changed the methods of warfare to a considerable extent. Men-of-war no longer go into harbors and lie there to be blown up by torpedoes in time of war. They keep the sea. They are safer from attack of torpedo boats, and these small crafts labor with great disadvantage in great sea way.

But with the assistance of the torpedo-boat destroyer, he can keep off the torpedo boats and dispose of them or he can keep in motion at sea outside. With the search light and the rapid-fire battery and the added protection of the torpedo-boat destroyer, we made another stride forward in naval warfare. And so we recommend the construction of six torpedo-boat destroyers and six torpedo boats.

You will have noticed by the newspaper reports—and occasionally a true statement gets into the newspapers, although I would not want you to take it from that authority without looking at the headlines and seeing whether it was printed in yellow—that the Government has been purchasing a few of these torpedo boats abroad, because we believed we were somewhat short. We can build in this country the best torpedo boats in the world, and we ask you to authorize the building of six small boats and six of the large boats.

Mr. CANNON. These boats can be constructed in six to twelve months, can they not?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. These boats can be constructed in from six to seven months, I believe.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. We have all been interested in the description of the various classes of vessels by the gentleman from Maine, but there has been considerable discussion as to the value of the double-turret monitor as compared with the battle ship. I would be glad to hear the gentleman's views on that subject.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is entering upon a wide sea of discussion. I do not like to weary the House, and I will be as brief as I can. The House will acquit me of any attempt to speak ex cathedra upon any question. That is a controverted question. There are some of the best men of the Navy who insist that the monitor is a more desirable vessel than the battle ship; they are men of intelligence and experience, and I have great respect for them. I do not know that they are not right, but my impression, my judgment, or the conclusion at which I have arrived is that they are not justified in all of their assumption.

Mr. FOOTE. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am just answering the question put by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. FOOTE. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman to go a little into detail as to the relative cost of the two types of vessels.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will do so, and give my reasons. That the Ericsson monitor is a most formidable craft, no one can deny. The prime elements of her power are, first, the ability to build a tremendously fortified turret upon a floating platform, which can be made very thick, to resist the impact of shot.

The second prime quality is its very low free board, that presents so small a mark for the enemy's guns; we all recognize that. In making the report from the Committee on Naval Affairs that recommended the first of the seagoing battle ships, I called attention to the controversy between these two types of ships and recommended the battle ships of to-day, which were originated in that bill of 1890.

I recommended them on the ground that there was no essential or typical conflict between the two classes of ships; that the first-class seagoing battle ship recognized every point of excellence in the monitor; that we preserve the revolving turret, the nearly all-around fire, and made it all around as nearly as we could, and that we only sacrificed one principle, and that was the low free board—that is, the low side of the ship—and we sacrificed that solely to enable our ships to go to sea and successfully use the batteries outside the headlands of our ports.

Now, I think every gentleman will recognize at once the distinction. We will take New York Harbor, with a fleet of first-class double-turreted monitors with the same armament that we put on battle ships. In that harbor they would be magnificent powers of defense, but, in my judgment—and in this I reluctantly differ with not a great number, but a number of excellent seamen, whose enthusiasm I think may carry them away—the monitors can not steam out of New York Harbor in any ordinary sea way and successfully attack a fleet of vessels that have equally heavy guns and equally thick turrets and have the advantage of great speed and the ability to man their guns so high above the water that they are not obstructed by the sea.

Many years ago it was my fortune to be an officer aboard a gunboat in the Navy that had the duty of convoying a monitor from Hampton Roads to Pensacola, and my memory is very vivid as to that voyage. It was the Tecumseh, that ill-fated vessel that went down by a torpedo explosion in the gates of Mobile Bay, carrying all on board with her.

You all remember that marvelously tragic and pathetic incident when Captain Craven, the magnificent commander of that ship, with a chivalry that recalls that of Bayard in the past, when the explosion occurred and the men were rushing to the few apertures of escape, the captain and the pilot who was with him in the turret reached side by side that avenue of delivery, Captain Craven stepped back and said, "After you, Pilot;" and the pilot was saved and the gallant captain went down.

The vessel to which I was attached towed this monitor into port. And I remember distinctly how upon the very smoothest day, when the water was so glassy you could read a newspaper held over it,the ordinary swell—6, or 8, or 10 inches—when it would meet this inert mass of iron which moved steadily along through the sea, would roll upon the deck, roll forward till it touched the turret, and then break over it. I can not conceive, Mr. Chairman, that the monitors can prove very effective vessels in a sea way, for fighting purposes.

At any rate that is the belief of naval experts. And the fact that there is something in this opinion ought to be shown, it seems to me, by our experience. In improving upon our experience since we built the Indiana, the Massachusetts, and the Oregon, you will notice, if you visit our fleet, that the later ship, the Iowa, has been lifted still higher, and that forward her turret is on an elevation considerably above that of the afterdeck—all of which means that it has been found desirable to lift these vessels enough out of the water to enable them to train their guns and fight them even when there is a moderate sea.

Another thing should be considered in that regard. It is true that this method of construction exposes a larger surface of the broadside to the fire of an enemy; but if gentlemen will take the trouble to look over diagrams (which are easily accessible) of the naval ships of the world, and will take the skeleton sketches which have been made of them, which show where the belts of armor are, where the vital portions are, and leave in white those portions which are simply structural and not vital to the ship, it will be found that in eliminating all of that superstructure which enables the ship to be buoyant, to resist the water and keep it out—when you eliminate all of that superstructure which is not essential to the safety or formidability of the ship, you have a line of vital ship above water very little more than the exposure of the ordinary monitor.

My colleague on the committee [Mr. HILBORN] reminds me, in connection with what I said before, that of course we are bound to yield more or less, and more rather than less, to the consensus of judgment of those who have given most thought to the subject; and it is a fact that to-day the nations of the world are devoting themselves to the building of what we term to-day "battle ships." And when we consider that we are building these ships on our own soil, that every ounce of metal that goes into them comes out of American mines, that every rivet is made by the strong right arm of an American citizen, that even the armor plate has been forged in our own workshops, I think gentlemen will be proud, as I am proud, that I am ready to say without any hesitation, basing my statement not upon the flamboyant egotism of Americans or the exuberant patriotism of our own officers, but upon the calm, cold-blooded verdict rendered by the most expert naval architects in England itself, that to-day the first-class battle ship of the United States is the first-class battle ship of the world. [Applause.]

Of course a chance shot might disable a battle ship; but in all that goes to the constitution of impregnability and formidability British authorities to-day—and I could cite you their testimony if I wished to take the time—concede that a comparison of the three battle ships, the Illinois, the Alabama, and the Wisconsin, with the finest ships that England has under construction shows an immeasurable advantage for the American ship.

We have developed ourselves also in speed. The Columbia is "the gem of the ocean." She carries the world's record to-day for a war ship crossing the Atlantic. When we had the great naval review a few years ago in New York Harbor, and England sent some splendid specimens of her handicraft here with her admiral on board the Blenheim, the last and finest manifestation of European architectural skill, the admiral of the British navy came on board the New York, and as I was reminded only a few nights ago by the commander of our fleet on that occasion, that splendid and gallant officer, Admiral Gherardi, said the British admiral told him freely, "You have a far finer ship than ours." And that has been accomplished in a dozen years.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is the Columbia a battle ship?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; the Columbia is the very reverse of a battle ship; it is simply a commerce destroyer, built for the express purpose of developing speed—to see just how fast we could make a war ship go.

Mr. FOOTE. The gentleman has not spoken of the cost of the monitors.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, the cost of the monitor is considerably less than the cost of a battle ship.

Mr. FOOTE. About how much?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I can not give you a comparison offhand, because we have never built a monitor approaching the size of the battle ships. I do not know how you can make a comparison, because the monitor does not represent what the battle ship does. We have never built any monitor that comprehended any such expenditure as we put upon a battle ship.

Mr. FOOTE. This bill provides for no monitor?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. For no new monitor, because the consensus of judgment is that the battle ships are the vessels required.

I will state to the gentleman one fact. I am not speaking now as an expert; I am not a great naval commander; I had a little personal experience in the Navy for a few years, but that does not count. Let me state the fact that the naval contests of the world in my judgment have been decided by what is known as the line-of-battle ships. All governments have had large ships and small ships, but the great naval battles of the world have been fought by the heavy line-of-battle ships, and in my judgment they always will be.

Mr. FOOTE. Does the chairman of the committee believe that the torpedo boat and the torpedo-boat destroyer provided by this bill are sufficient in number?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is a question purely for the House.

Mr. FOOTE. I was asking the chairman of the committee in his official capacity.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman understands perfectly that we do not suppose that three battle ships will be all that this country needs, but it was a question with us as to how much we should provide for in this bill and ask the House to appropriate for at this time; and I will say that until within the last two or three weeks we should have felt a great deal of apprehension of failure in undertaking to get the House to do as much as we do in this bill.

Mr. FOOTE. I suppose we should all have a good deal of apprehension, if we had not more than we used to build.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I meant apprehension as to the result of our effort in the House. I will state to the gentleman from New York that we are not recommending that Congress shall not provide for any more, but we are asking them to provide so much.

Mr. DRIGGS. I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the monitors are practically only fitted for harbor defense and not for the outer line of defense or, in other words, open-sea defense?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I agree to that entirely.

Mr. DRIGGS. I thought that was so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to ask the gentleman if there would be any objection on the part of the committee to the incorporation of an amendment to this bill providing that one of these battle ships be named the George Washington?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That will come up under the five-minute rule. That is a proposed amendment. The gentleman knows very well that we do not consider amendments at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was asking the gentleman whether he would be willing to consent to such an amendment at the proper time.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. George Washington himself would not be in order at this stage of the bill. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That is good for home consumption in the gentleman's district just the same.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not a case for home consumption. I think it is a very proper thing that one of these battle ships be called the George Washington.

Mr. FOOTE. I should like to ask the gentleman one more question, for information.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. FOOTE. What are the recommendations from the Department in regard to the battle ships and torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I suppose the House knows perfectly well that when the Secretary's report was made, he suggested one battle ship; but if the gentleman from New York had received as many communications from the Department since then as I have, he would be aware that the Department is looking at things through a very different kind of binoculars from what they did at that time.

Mr. FOOTE. That is the kind of glasses I want to find out about—the kind through which they are looking now.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, the gentleman knows what the change has been in the situation.

Mr. FOOTE. Is there any reason why the information should not be given to the House?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I thought I gave it.

Mr. FOOTE. No; I asked how many battle ships the Department now recommend. You told me how many they recommended a few weeks ago.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Department has made no specific recommendation since then, but it has done something that I felt, and my colleagues felt, and this House will feel obliged to take cognizance of. It has sent men over to Europe to buy from European shipbuilders ships that we ought to build in this country.

Mr. FOOTE. We are sadly aware of that, but I wanted to know whether they had made any recommendation to the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not remember that there has been any specific recommendation. I suppose that the Secretary of the Navy took it for granted that the committee of the House of Representatives would adjust itself to the situation as it developed; and we have attempted to do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to ask the chairman of the Naval Committee what prevented the Naval Committee from making these recommendations last year or in the last Congress?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If you will resolve yourself into a Committee of the Whole on the last Congress and make the inquiry, you may be able to find out. We are legislating for this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to observe that the gentleman has made a criticism on a committee of this House of which he has been chairman for a great many years, on account of its inaction, and that is not a proper answer.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Would the gentleman like about a minute and a half more?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not care to interrupt the gentleman at this time, but I call the attention of the House to his own answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has expired.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Maine be extended without limit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Maine be extended without limit. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am humiliated to find that I have occupied the attention of the committee for this length of time, when I only intended to speak a very few minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I perhaps ought to make a reference to two other features of this bill. One of them is the matter of dry docks. The Secretary of the Navy in his annual report made certain specific recommendations of the very great importance of additional dry-dock facilities. In my own judgment there was some exaggeration in the statement that found utterance in the press last year as to the failure of Congress in the past to do its duty, because if the great docks that we had authorized had been properly constructed certain difficulties that did arise would not have occurred.

But it is too late to go back now and hunt for last year's birds' nests. The Secretary of the Navy has earnestly recommended the authorization of additional docks. That those docks will be required in the future is more obvious now than it was six months ago. There are a great many more people in this country to-day who are reconciled to the idea that we must maintain a reasonably strong Navy than there were a year ago or perhaps six months ago.

The Committee on Naval Affairs have taken under consideration all of these recommendations, and after a long period of hearings by the subcommittee, of which the gentleman from California [Mr. HILBORN] is the chairman, they have recommended to the full committee and the full committee indorsed the provisions which are now in this bill for the erection of a dry dock at Portsmouth, N. H., where there is no dock now; for the erection of a new dock at Boston, where there is only an inferior and undersized stone dock; for the erection of an additional dock at League Island, Pa., our only fresh-water yard, unless Mare Island is called a fresh-water yard—the only fresh-water yard on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. BUTLER. The only fresh-water yard on any coast.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My friend from Mare Island will not admit that the water is brackish there, where they have not a dock large enough to take in our largest battle ship. Mare Island is 900 miles from Port Orchard, where we built a dry dock some years ago; and for the construction of a steel floating dock at Algiers, La., opposite New Orleans, there being no facility of the kind now anywhere along the Gulf coast.

Members will find the recommendations of the Department in the annual report, and the committee have deemed it wise to make to the House these recommendations for additions in that regard.

Mr. BROMWELL. Are all of these proposed docks of sufficient capacity to dock our largest war vessels?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say to my friend from Ohio that we have been somewhat disappointed in the construction of some of these docks in the past, and that we labored to get the wording of this bill in such shape that it will prevent the possibility of building a dock anywhere hereafter that shall not be calculated to meet the requirements of our largest vessel. The wording in the bill is:

Said dry docks to be not less than 700 feet in length, and of other dimensions sufficient to meet the present and probable future requirements of the largest vessels of the Navy and auxiliary fleet.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will answer one gentleman at a time. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Was the recommendation of the committee appointed by the Navy Department a short time ago to report to Congress on the selection of location of dry docks—was that taken into consideration by the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I understand it was exhaustively considered by the subcommittee and the full committee.

Mr. BENNETT. Were any of those places selected by the Naval Committee?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Why, yes; nearly all of them. The only one, I think, was League Island——

Mr. BENNETT. What was the recommendation of the board?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In regard to League Island?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They made no recommendation.

Mr. BENNETT. They made no recommendation for the Pacific coast?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. But the gentleman must understand we were not necessarily governed by that report. It was purely advisory.

Mr. BENNETT. I was simply asking for information, to see whether that report had had any weight with the Committee on Naval Affairs or not.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My understanding is, I will say, that every one of these docks except one has been authorized in this bill according to the recommendations of the Bunce board.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I will suggest to the gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio asked whether these docks will accommodate the large war vessels we have.

I desire to remind the honorable gentleman that the dry dock at Port Orchard, within my district, is able to accommodate the largest vessels we have in the Navy. It has lately accommodated the Oregon with perfect ease and complete facility. I take the liberty to make the suggestion lest it may have escaped the honorable gentleman at the time the question was asked.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am simply speaking of the additional docks.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I thought it might have escaped the gentleman's attention.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The dock at Port Orchard is a large and admirable dock, and further provision is made for it in this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. And it is in the gentleman's district.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. And an additional recommendation is the fact that it is located in the gentleman's district. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I have no doubt that that dock has derived much benefit from the fact that it is in my district. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, there is one other topic I wish to refer to. That is the matter of armor. We have debated that——

Mr. ROBBINS. Before you leave the question of dry docks, I desire to ask you a question.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This whole matter will be discussed under the five-minute rule on these items.

Mr. ROBBINS. I know.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am only making a preliminary statement.

Mr. ROBBINS. What I wanted to know is the necessity for the dock at Portsmouth, so near the dock at Boston?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Great Britain has a dozen docks in one yard. The reason that place is provided is because we have a very extensive plant of over a million dollars invested in machinery and facilities for complete repair of ships that has been invested during the last fifty years, and that a dry dock is an essential part of a navy-yard; and also, I presume, more or less based on the fact that experts in strategy have held for many years that the seat of a foreign war on the ocean would be likely to locate itself somewhere off the New England coast, or between Gardners Bay and Halifax; and also that there is a great depth of water there.

You must remember that the United States coast is of a very peculiar conformation. I do not know how many gentlemen of this House may have had themselves brought into a recognition of the fact that from New York Harbor, from the Jersey beach, Long Branch, and all the way along the coast of the United States to Galveston Harbor there is such a uniform conformation of the shore that a man would have to be very expert when landed in the night to be able to tell where he was. From Bascom down to near Galveston it is a shoal sandy beach all along our coast, and our harbors as we go south suffer in depth of water.

The deepest water is off the coast of the Northern States where the coast is rock bound and the openings to the harbors deeper. In my district, which runs down toward the Bay of Fundy, we have a rise and fall of tide, in some places, of 30 feet, which furnishes harbors that can give any depth required. Portsmouth has more depth of water, and Portland, Me., gives an unrivaled harbor as to depth. As you go south, the depth of water decreases.

I want to say just one word about the matter of armor. As you know, this subject was discussed very thoroughly. A great indisposition was shown on the part of Congress to pay more than $300 a ton. Various propositions were submitted, and finally Congress decided that no armor should be provided at a cost greater than $300 a ton. Under the operation of that limitation it has proved impossible to obtain armor for the three ships now under construction.

I will remind gentlemen that the armor for the Kentucky and Kearsarge, presumably launched to-day, had already been provided; but these other vessels had no other provision made for their armor except that the builders had themselves supplied that diagonal armor which had to be built in the ship, and are taking chances as to what they will get paid for it. The consensus of judgment in the Department and many with whom I have been able to confer has been that we must raise the limit of cost of this material. I do not want to get into any argument about it, because the facts are plain and clear.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question there?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Can the gentleman furnish to the House or to the Committee of the Whole any information as to the actual cost of the production of that armor? We have had a great deal of controversy over it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will state to the gentleman, in answer to that, that there was an exhaustive inquiry made by the Secretary of the Navy in the last Administration, Secretary Herbert, by order of Congress. He went into the matter with all possible effort to obtain the best information, and, in my judgment, exhausted the sources of information. The result of his investigation of the matter was to recommend to Congress that $400 a ton would be a fair price. That is the most authoritative information we have ever received.

Of course, there was discussion, there were suggestions that somebody was ready to make this armor for $250 a ton, but when the test was applied, it proved that no bids were made along that line. The parties who were expected to do that, made an informal proposition that, if the Government would make a contract for twenty years to come, and would agree to buy 6,000 tons of armor a year for twenty consecutive years, they would supply it at a less price, I think $340 a ton.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. I was one of those who voted for cutting down the price of armor in the last Congress. I voted against the payment of $400 or $500 a ton for the armor and in favor of limiting it to $300, I think it was.

I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine whether or not the company which was represented on that occasion as being willing to furnish this armor did not make that offer, through the gentleman who represented them on the floor, without any qualification as to any subsequent contract; whether or not it was not stated that they were willing to furnish such armor as was needed for the supplying of these vessels at $300 a ton, or less, without any qualification?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that that will lead to or excite discussion, and I do not want to bring up any of these old matters. I do not want to be discourteous to my friend, but he knows that at times, under the strain and the representation of certain phases of party matters, gentlemen will take certain positions and may afterwards revise their judgment. I think, for the interest of the House and of the service, it is better for us not to enter upon those questions. I do not want to taunt anybody for not fulfilling their promises.

Mr. BROMWELL. It was not for that purpose that I interrupted the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I know that.

Mr. BROMWELL (continuing). It is to put those of us right before the House who voted for reducing the price of the armor.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have no doubt whatever in my own mind that the vote of the House limiting the price of armor to $300 was very largely influenced by the statement made here that there was a responsible company that would be glad to furnish it at a less price. But it turned out afterwards that there were certain conditions, as I thought there were at the time, to that offer that made it impossible for the Government to accept it.

Perhaps, for the purposes of this discussion, it will be all that is necessary to state that the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to advertise for proposals for armor not to exceed $300 a ton, and the official report made to this House was that he had received no bid whatever that the Department was authorized to entertain under the law.

Then he went on to state that the Carnegie Company had written them that they did not care to compete, that the Bethlehem Company said they did not care to furnish armor at that price, and that the other company had written an informal proposition that if they could have a contract for twenty years and the Government would buy 6,000 tons of armor a year from them for twenty years, they would built a plant and have it ready within eighteen months, and furnish the armor for $240 a ton. The Secretary of the Navy reported to Congress that that was not a proposition that he had any authority under the law to consider.

Now, we have gone on in that way through two Congresses, and we have got no armor to-day. The fact remains, whatever else may be said, that we never paid any more for our armor than have other governments of the world, and it is to me an astonishing thing that we have been able to build up a plant and get it as cheap as England, France, and Germany. I was reminded by my friend from Ohio that the statement has been made in the newspapers that recent contracts have been made by the American manufacturers to furnish armor to Russia for $525 a ton.

In that connection, I do not want to impress any of my views on the House, but if we are going to build three more battle ships, we are going to complete those on hand, and if we are going to complete them we are going to buy the armor in this country. We are not going abroad to buy it, because we have to pay more for it abroad than we pay here.

I want to inject right here, not in the spirit of "I told you so," but merely to remind gentlemen that we sometimes strain at a gnat and swallow a camel; that while we have for two years prohibited the Department from making contracts with American citizens for the product of American labor, because we thought we could not get it cheap enough, we the other day appropriated $50,000,000, with which the President of the United States has gone abroad and bought ships, paying for them at a rate which would make the price of armor plate much higher than we were paying for it, and gave a bonus of $108,000 on the ship besides that. I do not believe we can afford to do that.

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman from Maine yield to me just a minute or two on that point?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman wants to ask a question, I will.

Mr. GROW. I want to say a word just upon that point.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman can do that when we come to the debate under the five-minute rule. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want it to be distinctly understood that the armor for the three ships provided for in this bill is to be purchased at a price not exceeding a certain sum, computed accurately on the specifications, not to exceed $400 a ton.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman state for what ships that armor is to be purchased?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Illinois, the Alabama, and the Wisconsin, one in California, one at Cramps, and one at Newport.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. We have three war ships now being built for which there is no armor?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. For which there is no provision for armor for the reason stated.

Mr. CANNON. But provision is made in the bill for the armor?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We do not appropriate for the whole amount because we can not expend it all in a year; but we have appropriated for the amount estimated by the Department as necessary for the coming year for the ships under construction.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says, "for the ships under construction."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Yes, we make no provision for armor plate for the three to be authorized, because there will be no need of armor plate for the coming year; but there is incorporated an amount based upon the estimates of the Department for money to buy that portion of the armor for these three ships that will be completed during the coming year.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I see that these three ships are to cost three millions exclusive of the armor, and I presume the armament.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The armament.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Is it within the gentleman's information as to what the ship will cost when completed?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We have not the full estimate, but they would cost about two millions and something additional. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that they are to cost very much less than they would have cost two years ago. When the first battle ships were built, or authorized, they were authorized at a cost of four millions. We have reduced that since to three millions, and the battle ships now under construction will cost about $2,640,000.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I have seen an estimate that the Maine cost five millions.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It cost about $4,600,000 when she was built.

Mr. BROMWELL. What is the state of completion of the three battle ships for which we are providing in this bill? Are they so near completion that the armor plate will be needed for them before next July, when this appropriation becomes available?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No, it will not be needed before that time. But I will say to the gentleman—I am glad he reminded me of it—that in another feature of this bill, in recognition of the exigency now upon us, we have asked the House to pass a provision at the close of the bill that whenever the President in his judgment may deem that any public exigency demands it, each and every provision of the bill may be made immediately available.

We have made more liberal appropriation for the first year on these ships authorized than we ever did before. There is naturally a tendency not to make the bill over and above large, but we have been more liberal because we did not want to run the risk of delaying the work, because we thought under the phases of the situation there might be a disposition to force work more rapidly than usual. We have provided for building the torpedo boats and very liberally for the battle ships.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I care to say anything more at this time. I thank the Committee of the Whole very much for its kind consideration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like—although there is some embarrassment in making the suggestion to limit debate immediately after having occupied the time of the House so extensively myself—yet I think everybody will recognize it is of very great importance to get this bill through to the Senate and the President as rapidly as possible, especially in view of the fact that more or less of the generous provision which was made in the $50,000,000 bill, so far as it affects the Navy, can only be available under provisions of law contained in this bill.

I repeat, it is important to get the bill to the Senate as rapidly as possible, and I would like to reach some agreement as to the time for general debate. If the committee will only charitably consider that I, in a certain sense, have been occupying time which would naturally belong to the fifteen members of the committee, I should be very glad to have their charity in that regard.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] make any request?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I should like to ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. MEYER of Louisiana] what his judgment is as to the amount of time which will be necessary for general debate. Of course the bill must afterwards be debated by paragraphs.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. It seems to me that the most judicious course would be to permit the general debate to run along during to-day without limit, and at the expiration of that time we could agree on some limitation. There are a number of gentlemen on this side who desire to speak on the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am willing to be governed by the wish of the House. My judgment is—and I think I can not err on this point—that the will of this House will be to fix a limit to this debate. We can afford to talk on almost any other subject with greater or less limit, but we ought to put this bill through with all the rapidity consistent with a reasonable discussion of its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine make any motion or request?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My judgment, when the consideration of the bill began, was that four hours' debate, two on each side, would be ample—I mean from the beginning, including my own remarks. I did not intend to occupy so much time myself.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to occupy ten minutes; but I think I can get that time under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In reply to the inquiry of the Chair, I suggest that general debate be closed at 4 o'clock. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas, who has been unavoidably called away, requested me to make a statement to the House. He informed me that quite a number of gentlemen had spoken to him asking him to secure time for them to speak in the general debate on this bill. There is no disposition on this side to occupy unusual time in debate, but it is impossible to accommodate gentlemen who desire to speak on this side in so short a time as has been suggested by the gentleman from Maine. We would be very glad indeed if there could be a limit fixed which would be satisfactory, giving us four hours on this side. If gentlemen on the other side do not wish to occupy four hours, they need not take it. The gentleman from Maine has suggested two hours on his side, and allowing us four hours, that would be only six hours for general debate, which I submit to the gentleman is not extravagant.

As the gentleman from Maine will remember, under the five-minute rule we are held to a very rigid account in conducting any discussion. I am not complaining of it; but that being so, it becomes the more important that we should have a little more time in the general debate.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Does not the gentleman believe that the time I have suggested would more than cover all the time that would be occupied in discussing the merits of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not think so.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do. I have received hardly a request for time from anyone who wishes to speak as to the merits of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I approve the course of the gentleman from Maine in occupying the time that he did. I would have been glad if he had occupied more, because he understands this measure. But he will readily admit that there is no more important bill than this before the House, and none more likely to come before it at this session. Our situation is such that there ought to be discussion of a matter so important as the naval defense of the country.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I say to the gentleman with absolute candor that I shall be glad to consent to the occupation of all the time that can be legitimately occupied in discussing the merits of the bill. But I have had no intimation that would lead me to believe that more than the time I have indicated would be so used. Members desiring the floor want to talk, as a rule, on other subjects. I may be wrong about that. But the matter is in the control of the Committee of the Whole or the House. But it seems to me this bill ought to be put through on its merits as speedily as possible.

Mr. McMILLIN. Yet the gentleman has realized in his own remarks how impossible it is for a member to discuss fully the merits of the bill in even one hour.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hoped I had made some contribution to a lucid understanding of it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am sure the gentleman has.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Maine is that all general debate close at 4 o'clock.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We hope he will not insist on that.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will 5 o'clock be satisfactory?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will say to the gentleman that gentlemen on this side who have made requests for time want to occupy four hours. Now, that is reasonable.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, we are proposing to give you until 5 o'clock. Do you mean four hours on that side?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is what we want.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I shall have to test the judgment of the House on that. That would be eight hours.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the gentleman says he only wants two hours on that side.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to misrepresent the gentleman, but he said four hours, one-half on that side.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I said I thought that would be enough time in which to discuss the merits of the bill, but if gentlemen on the other side are going to indulge in four hours of oratory on all imaginable subjects, we have orators here. [Laughter.] "If there be lords in the southland, there be chiefs in the north." I ask that general debate may close at 5 o'clock.

Mr. LOW. I hope the gentleman will extend that beyond that time. There are a great many gentlemen on this side who would like to speak.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It is all in the hands of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Maine is that by unanimous consent general debate upon this bill close at 5 o'clock to-day. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that the committee rise and fix a time for closing debate on this bill.

The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 84, noes 71.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. RICHARDSON demanded tellers.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope no gentlemen will insist on filibustering.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine and Mr. RICHARDSON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 88.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 9378), and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill all general debate be closed at 5 o'clock to-day.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to amend by inserting 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move the previous question on that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is too late, after my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion should be that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and pending that, that general debate be limited. The gentleman from Maine moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and pending that, moves that all general debate be limited to 5 o'clock, and on that he demands the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I moved an amendment before the gentleman from Maine moved the previous question.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I had the floor to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman from Tennessee was not recognized to move the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the gentleman from Maine had not made the motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that he intended to make the motion for the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not hear that.

Mr. OGDEN. He had not made it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman from Tennessee is too good a parliamentarian to make a suggestion of that kind——

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Tennessee recognizes that the gentleman from Maine could make the motion, but he did not make it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It was my privilege and my duty as chairman of the committee in charge of the bill to make the motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the gentleman did not make it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I never had left the floor at all. The gentleman knows that he can not inject motions into another gentleman's time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know the gentleman had not sat down——

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make this suggestion: It will not be denied that the gentleman from Maine had a right, in connection with his motion to limit debate, to call for the previous question upon that motion; but not having done so and another gentleman rising and moving to amend his motion, that second motion has to go in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine states that he rose for the purpose of making that motion.

Mr. McMILLIN. But he did not do it.

Mr. OGDEN. He did not do it.

The SPEAKER. But he did do it before any other gentleman was recognized.

Mr. McMILLIN. But there was a lapse of time, so that any gentleman might presume that he did not intend to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman removed that doubt by saying that he did intend to do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We made no point of order on the form of the motion——

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that the matter is entirely within the control of the House, and if the House desires it can vote down the previous question, in which case the matter will then be open for amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; but if the Chair will indulge me for a moment, the gentleman from Maine did not even make his motion in order; but I make no point on that. He did not move to resolve the House into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes, he did.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, he did not, and the Speaker corrected him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair corrected him without objection on the part of any member.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not object to it, but the Chair put the motion into order and made the gentleman's motion in order. Now, I do not think the Chair is safe in assuming that the gentleman intended to make his motion for the previous question. I have not heard the gentleman make the statement that he intended to move it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What did the gentleman from Tennessee think I intended when I took the floor? [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know, if I may be pardoned. If the Chair will allow me to answer that question, which is a reasonable one——

The SPEAKER. Will the House please be in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. If the House will be in order, the Chair will endeavor to facilitate what the gentleman from Tennessee desires; but he must have silence in the House in order to do it. It is impossible to administer the law or the business of the House unless we can have order so that we can hear what is going on. Will gentlemen have the kindness to take their seats—all gentlemen.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee desires to ask the gentleman from Maine a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wanted to answer his question as to what I supposed he intended to do. That I am not able to answer, but I am able to say, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman did not move the previous question before I made my motion to amend. Now, if he says——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I say most decidedly that I made the motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If he says he intended to make the motion, we always accept that, when a gentleman makes that statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Maine to say that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not go back of the statement of the gentleman from Maine, if he says he intended to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If I were you——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Maine stated that he intended to move the previous question, and had the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I never left it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is the statement of the Chair correct?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The statement of the Chair is absolutely correct.

Mr. OGDEN. Has the gentleman from Maine the floor still?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine for the previous question.

Mr. OGDEN. I have taken my seat at the request of the Chair, and all other gentlemen have done so except the gentleman from Maine, and he seems to hold the floor even against the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine took the floor to answer a question of the gentleman from Tennessee. The question now before the House is the previous question, asked for by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 92.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The SPEAKER (interrupting the call). The Chair desires the attention of the House. At the request of gentlemen from both sides of this question the Chair will submit a proposition for an agreement, which is that debate shall continue until 6 o'clock this evening, and from 12 to 1 to-morrow, and then the bill proceed under the five-minute rule. The gentlemen on the other side to receive three hours of what remains.

Mr. MAHON. I will not object if the House will agree, as to-morrow is Friday, private bill day, to give us next Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be considered in the agreement.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What day?

Mr. MAHON. Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What is that as to Tuesday?

Mr. RICHARDSON. For the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAY of New York. I desire to understand whether that carries over the Friday night session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it will carry over the Friday night session. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection; and if there be no objection, the Clerk will not further proceed with the call of the roll.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The time to be divided by the Chair according to the understanding.

The SPEAKER. The roll call will be vacated, and the question will be put on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year 1898–99.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the introduction and consideration of the annual naval appropriation bill at this time is, I can not but feel, invested with unusual, I might say with extraordinary importance.

Only a few days ago the two Houses of Congress, departing from the customary precedents of legislation, passed after a brief debate, without cavil or a single negative vote, a measure appropriating $50,000,000 "for the national defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended at the discretion of the President, and to remain available until January 1, 1899."

The President had sent no message to Congress asking for this large appropriation, but it was well understood by us all that he desired it and deemed this step to be absolutely necessary. Had twice this sum been estimated to be proper, it would have been voted without hesitation, regardless of party lines. Fifty millions being the sum indicated by the special representatives of the Executive, it was freely given.

This was no mere personal tribute. Had Mr. Bryan been the President instead of Mr. McKinley, it is safe to assert that our opponents would have acted as did those who are opposed to the domestic policy of the Administration.

Mr. Chairman, from every section of our wide country has since then come the approval by the masses of the action of the people's representatives. From millions of our countrymen came shouts of applause, whose echoes sent warning to our enemies that our nation is united to a man in defending the honor and glory and integrity of the Republic.

LOUISIANA'S GREETING.

From my own State of Louisiana comes the greeting of its sovereign people, in convention assembled, which I am proud to submit to this honorable House, and which represents so truly the universal sentiment all over this broad land:

Resolution No. 102, by Mr. Castleman.

Resolved, That the people of Louisiana, in convention assembled, hereby indorse and commend the action of our members of the House of Representatives in voting $50,000,000 to be placed at the disposal of the President to sustain the national honor and enable the proper authorities to place our coast defenses in such condition that they may successfully resist any attack that may be made upon them by any foreign power.

Resolved further, That the secretary be required to forward to each of our members in the House of Representatives a copy of this resolution.

A true and correct copy.

[SEAL.] ROBT. S. LANDRY, Secretary.

Attest:

E. B. KRUTTSCHNITT, President.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, why, may I ask, do we behold this extraordinary concord of public men of both parties and of the people of every section of the Union? It is due to the fact that we stand confronted with a grave public exigency and a great peril, which to most men was an entire surprise. We are at peace nominally with all countries, but are liable at any moment to be involved in a war with Spain.

WAR NOT DEPENDENT ON ONE SIDE ONLY.

It is true that by the Federal Constitution the power of declaring war is confided exclusively to Congress, and Congress is in session and is likely to continue in session for some months to come. But war is not dependent on one side alone, and very often it is not preceded by formal declaration of war on either side. It comes "like a thief in the night," often without note of warning; yet we have had many people in this country who have argued and acted upon the assumption that a foreign war was out of the question—an utterly impossible contingency. They have scouted the idea that any military or naval preparation for a possible war was necessary.

Looking to the eastward they beheld 3,000 miles of salt water lying between us and the armed camps of Europe. Invasion was impossible, and therefore they inferred that no foreign fleet would ever bombard our cities, or ravage our coasts, or harass our commerce. All we had to do was to cultivate the gentle arts of peace at home and be good. Foreign nations would respect our weakness and our inability to deliver a return blow. They would be merciful. History would be reversed the laws of human nature and human passion be suspended.

Even the fate of China, caught suddenly some years ago, and without preparation, lying prostrate, after a very short war, before an athlete nation having less than one-tenth of her numbers, carried with it no lesson, no moral, no warning to this class of men. Mr. Chairman, the theater of war, if such must come, will be not on the land but on the sea.

SUFFICIENCY OF OUR ARMY.

So far as our Army is concerned, I freely concede that it requires no addition to place us in a position of defense. It is large enough for peace purposes and can easily and quickly be expanded in event of war. We have a large body of the best officers, trained at West Point, and at the State military schools, and in the war between the States. Our citizen soldiery would make a large force. With a good supply of skillful officers, it requires but a short time to make a good soldier of an American citizen. He is apt, quick, and intelligent. We could soon have a large and effective force.

We have no invasion to fear on the southward; our relations with Mexico are most cordial and sympathetic, with an annually increasing intercourse of trade and commerce binding us together. In fact, we have taken the Republics of the western world under protection and friendship, and have come to the belief that our chiefest honor, not to speak of advantage, lies in an emphatic and honest assertion of the Monroe doctrine, to the author of which, a Virginian, one of the South American States has reared a monument. [Applause.]

With the Dominion of Canada we have, unfortunately, far more friction, but we have with her a very large and growing trade, and there is little prospect of conflict. I see, therefore, no reason for the increase of the Army unless war should become flagrant, and I do see many strong reasons to the contrary. The defense of our cities by proper fortifications is a necessary step that requires no increase of the Army beyond what has already been done, and ought to have been completed long ago.

CAN NOT IMPROVISE A NAVY.

But, Mr. Chairman, you can not improvise a Navy, even with fifty or one hundred millions placed at the discretion of the President. You may have an ample supply of officers, yet even these require experience in the handling of ships and in habits of command. Nor can you make a sailor as quickly as you can a soldier. Still less can you improvise a man-of-war's crew, with a thorough knowledge of all they have to do and possessing the discipline and training needed to make them efficient in sea service and in battle.

But, sir, even if you had a good supply of officers and men, an ample supply of guns in service and in reserve, and other articles needed for equipping or refitting your battle ships and cruisers, there would still remain the necessity for an immediate force of ships, not of commerce but of war ships. A battle ship or an armored cruiser is not built in a day any more than Rome was—not even in the old days of wooden ships could a war fleet be improvised or built expeditiously. The nation that was caught by a war unprepared was bound to suffer, and did suffer severely.

And now, with the development of naval construction, the building of a war vessel, with her complicated machinery, is a gigantic and tedious undertaking. In every country, even with skilled mechanics, the best dock yards, and ample material, it takes a year to build a battle ship. Our battle ships, both of the first and second class, have occupied over two years in construction, sometimes three. So that if war should come upon us suddenly, and we should be overmatched by our enemy in naval force, we would have to suffer all the evils of being driven from the sea for one or two years at least, and the consequent injury to our commerce and to exposed points on the coast, while in our dock yards we would be trying to catch up and remedy the disparity of naval force.

There would still remain the serious problem of making a union or concentration of the new and the old fleet in one force capable of regaining our lost control of the sea.

Our situation is not at all like that of Great Britain and France, each of which has one or two great naval stations, where naval construction and repair on a large scale can be conducted and a fleet built. We have no such stations, as we all know. They remain to be built up and developed in the future.

In view of these facts, which are known not only to the naval expert, but to every intelligent man, it is obvious that to wait for a war and to await naval preparation until war actually arrives, in the hope that a disparity in naval force can be speedily corrected, is an idea unworthy of rational and patriotic men. It is the very acme of human folly.

What has been said in respect to war vessels applies with nearly equal force to the dock yards and dry docks, which are absolutely needed for the cleaning and repair of our war vessels. These dry docks do not, perhaps, demand the same length of time for their construction as battle ships, but they do require many months and careful skill in order to fit them for the uses of the Navy.

The truth of this fact is found in the report of the Secretary of the Navy.

DOCKING THE INDIANA AT HALIFAX, NOVA SCOTIA.

In August last it became necessary to dock the battle ship Indiana. It was found that we had no dry dock on the Atlantic or Gulf coast adequate for this purpose, and thus we presented the humiliating spectacle before the world of having to send our grand battle ship on a voyage to a dock yard of a foreign government with which but a few brief months before we were on the brink of a hostile collision, and this for the simple cleaning and repairs for which we should have been prepared in our own yards on the instant.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I would like to correct the statement just made as to the fact that we have no dry dock on the Atlantic coast in which one of the first-class battle ships can be placed, by the statement that the battle ship Indiana, on the only occasion that she has been docked in this country, was safely put into the dock at Port Royal, thoroughly cleaned, and was safely taken out without the slightest difficulty whatsoever, and there is no sound reason that can be given why that battle ship should have been sent out of this country to be docked in August last.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to enter into a discussion as to the merits of the Port Royal dock. I have always been its friend; but the fact exists and has been demonstrated that at the period named it was inadequate and incapable of docking the Indiana, and this only accentuates the need for the additional docks provided in the bill.

I feel assured, Mr. Chairman, that the Secretary of the Navy would never have sent the Indiana to a foreign port to be docked without actual necessity. He is a prudent, thoughtful, and able official, and acted in the matter with great reluctance and only from the stress of the situation.

NAVAL PREPARATION AND CONSTRUCTION URGED.

But, Mr. Chairman, on all these questions I take no new position. I merely stand where I have stood ever since I have been in Congress, and especially as a member of the Naval Committee have I urged in season and out of season prompt naval preparation and construction, which shall bear some proportion, at least, to our extended coast and commerce, our vast wealth and resources, our population and our dignity as a Republic, and the great interests, present and prospective, which we may be called on to defend.

I presented these views at more length than I shall to-day in speaking to this House on the naval appropriation bill in February, 1895. On that occasion I gave some brief view of our naval history, and of the achievements of the Navy, and of the progress made in the construction of the new Navy under Secretaries Chandler, Whitney, Tracy, and Herbert.

But, sir, I strongly urged going on with the good work that had been begun. I pointed the danger of foreign complications in the future, and that while we had the wealth and resources which enabled us to become a leading naval power, if we desired, we were then only the seventh of all the nations in naval strength. I made a partial comparison of the additions Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, and Russia were then making to their armament. All these facts had been stated time and time again by the heads of the Navy Department, but they failed to lead Congress to realize the obvious duty of putting the country in a proper state of defense.

I repeat what I said then, and the years that have elapsed only accentuate the force of my statement, that there is a great misapprehension in the public mind touching the actual and relative strength of the Navy.

OUR "NEW NAVY."

So much has been said in the press and on the stump about the "new Navy" that the public have grossly overestimated its fighting capacity. True, I may assert that the ships we have are of the best, and our personnel active, keen, and equal to the highest traditions of their predecessors.

It is indeed a powerful Navy, compared with the best fleet of wooden ships that the United States or any other nation ever possessed, but it is far inferior to the present navies of France, Germany, and Russia. It is a very small Navy compared with that of Great Britain. It is inferior to that of Italy, a country nearly bankrupt, with about one-third of our population, and still more inferior in wealth and the interests she may be called on to defend.

The able report of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Long, gives us the present strength of our Navy. There are only four battle ships of the first class and two of the second class. One of these, the Maine, now lies at the bottom of Habana Harbor, the victim probably of an assassin's foul act, whose instigators, whoever they may be, evidently took no thought from the words of the English statesman, that "assassination has never changed the history of the world." [Applause.]

The loss of one or many American battle ships can not, shall not obstruct the march of events nor stay the progress of a people aspiring to be free from the thraldom and cruelty of a nation once powerful, once great, but now reduced by her own misconduct to a struggle for her own political existence.

So, then, we have only 5 battle ships left. We have 5 more of the first class now being built, and these, the Secretary tells us, will not be ready for service before the latter part of 1899, say eighteen to twenty months from now. Even the torpedo boats—an essential part of our system of coast defense—will not be ready for a considerable time to come.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION ABROAD.

In the same report the Secretary tells us of the progress of naval construction abroad.

England leads with appropriations for the year 1897-98 amounting to $26,500,000. Including new work, she will complete or have under construction during the year 15 battle ships—equal to three times our existing force, in addition to the great number she had heretofore—12 first-class cruisers, 9 second-class cruisers, 10 third-class cruisers, 56 torpedo-boat destroyers, and other boats, a total of 117 vessels under construction.

France is building 17 vessels, at a cost of some $16,000,000. Japan, a nation newly born, with a very small territory and not half our population, comes next, with a construction of 4 large first-class battle ships, 4 armored cruisers, 6 protected cruisers, 9 torpedo-boat destroyers, and 13 torpedo boats. This construction of Japan is going on with the greatest rapidity. She will soon become the first in naval strength on the Pacific Ocean, and greatly superior to the United States in that quarter.

Germany, Russia, and Italy are building war ships readily.

Spain has increased her naval power during the year by the purchase of 1 and the completion of 2 first-class armored cruisers, 1 protected cruiser, 2 gunboats, and 6 torpedo-boat destroyers. She is also building 4 armored cruisers, 4 protected cruisers, 4 gunboats, 4 torpedo ships, and 3 battle ships, to be fitted with new boilers and guns in France.

The facts stated by the Secretary of the Navy in this report are highly suggestive. It is well to bear in mind that these programmes of naval construction are carried on far more rapidly in Europe than in this country.

This is particularly true in respect to Great Britain, which is building war vessels not only for her own navy, but in her private shipyards for other countries.

I believe it is true that a first-class battle ship, which in this country can not be built in less than two years or more, can be completed and equipped in a single year in Great Britain. It is said that we can build in this country war ships equal to those of any other country in the world.

Doubtless this is true, but there remains an important question worthy of study by our naval experts and by all persons responsible for the conduct of public affairs, and that is, Can we build these war vessels in case of emergency as rapidly as European countries—for example, Great Britain—and if not, how can this deficiency be best and most promptly supplied?

I may add here that the prompt and convenient docking and repair of our war vessels is fully as important as the rapidity of their construction and of their necessary armament.

Mr. Chairman, since the date of the Secretary's last report we have seen a number of newspaper publications, which go to show that in the last few weeks very considerable additions have been made by Russia, Germany, and other nations to their programmes of naval construction.

In some of these cases, as I understand, the money invested is not doled out from year to year in an annual appropriation bill, but is given in a lump sum, or in a mode resembling the contract system which obtains in our important river and harbor work, with the results of increased expedition and greatly increased economy.

I have felt that a full comparison of the fighting strength of our Navy as compared with other countries, and what each country is doing in the way of naval construction, is so important, in order that we may see exactly where we stand, what our danger is, and what our duty is to the people whose honor and security we have in charge, that I have sought and obtained from our Naval Intelligence Bureau—

RICHARDSON CLOVER,
Chief Intelligence Officer.

FEBRUARY 24, 1898.

It is not necessary for me to comment upon this table. It tells the story of our lack of naval preparation and backwardness as compared with the other great powers of the world far more eloquently than any words of mine could. It may be said that we have been only a few years at work reconstructing our Navy on the lines of modern science and development; but, sir, this work was begun at least fifteen or sixteen years ago, under the Administration of President Arthur, and I do not think the public can be convinced that much greater progress could not have been accomplished.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. How many ships does this new bill propose?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Three battle ships and 12 torpedo boats.

Mr. GAINES. Not taking into consideration those now in course of construction?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. No, sir.

Germany is ahead of us. She began after we did. She has only half our population, far inferior wealth and resources, a small coast line, and, until the North German Canal was lately built, no direct and easy communication with the sea.

Her armies have for centuries been prominent in history, but practically she has not till this generation possessed a navy. With a bound she goes to the front. She has a colonial system, and is able to defend it.

Holding these views as to our duty and the public necessities, I welcome even the exceedingly modest and reasonable addition of 8 battle ships and 6 torpedo boats and 6 torpedo destroyers proposed by the bill.

ALGIERS DRY DOCK.

With equal satisfaction do I hail the step which proposes to give our war ships adequate docking and repair facilities upon the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Gulf coasts.

I have steadily favored and urged this general policy. I have especially urged the reasons which recommend and make necessary a dock at Algiers, a part of New Orleans and opposite its main environs. In February, 1897, I discussed this subject in the debate upon the naval appropriation bill. I treated the question from no sectional standpoint, for I favored suitable docks at Puget Sound, New York, Portsmouth, Norfolk, and the New England coast; but it became my duty to present with special emphasis the great importance of going on with the dock at New Orleans, which had been recommended by two separate and successive naval commissions as combining in the highest degree the requisites for a dock upon the Gulf coast.

Unfortunately, nothing was effected at that session, and this year, as I have already stated, we found ourselves without a single dry dock on the coast of either the Gulf or the Atlantic capable of accommodating the battle ship Indiana, so that she was obliged to be sent to the port of Halifax, Nova Scotia, a long voyage to a foreign shipyard.

THE COUNTRY AROUSED.

This incident aroused the country. The Secretary of the Navy very properly appointed a special board last August to examine the matter, and upon the reception of its report he strongly presented the subject in his annual report. It is a valuable feature of this document that it gives the comparison of the docking facilities of the principal maritime powers. It presents a melancholy exhibit for this country, but it is well to know the whole truth, so as to be able to provide for the emergency.

DRY-DOCK PROVISIONS IN NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill of the committee has provided for five dry docks, to be constructed at Portsmouth, N. H., Boston, Mass., League Island, Pa., Mare Island, Cal., and Algiers (New Orleans), La., and makes an adequate appropriation for beginning the work. It is possible, indeed, that one or two other places might have been provided for, but it can not be doubted that the points chosen will result in the public good.

This is unquestionably true in regard to the selection of New Orleans, for a dock on the Gulf coast is indispensable in the opinion of naval officers, and naval experts say emphatically that New Orleans is the true point to locate it.

At one time a timber or concrete dry dock was favored for this place, but the naval board recommended in lieu of this "a double-sided steel floating dock of the type known as the combined floating and graving self-docking dock, to be capable of lifting a war vessel of the largest size and deepest draft of water."

Mr. DRIGGS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. DRIGGS. I want to ask if these steel floating docks have been tested until they have been found satisfactory?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. For many years docks of this character have been in use in this and other countries. I am informed that the floating dock passed through the same development of material—wood, iron, and steel—as ships, and has kept pace with their development.

A floating steel dock of 17,500 tons is now in operation in Hamburg. In England this development has been especially rapid, and many of them are in successful operation.

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. With pleasure.

Mr. HILBORN. I will say that the floating dock has been thoroughly tested and approved. It is a modification of an American invention. It has been adopted and improved by the English, and England on her foreign stations, notably at the Bermudas, uses a floating dock. And Spain has now in the harbor of Habana a floating dock that has a battle ship on it to-day.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I thank my friend.

Mr. KING. Does not the gentleman from California know that the floating dock to which he refers, in the harbor of Habana, has been sunk and disabled? It was sunk when I was there.

Mr. HILBORN. Oh, no; the gentleman has been misinformed, because to-day it has a battle ship on it.

Mr. KING. I was there and know that it was sunk.

Mr. HILBORN. You saw it at a time when it was crippled; but to-day it is floating a battle ship.

Mr. DRIGGS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana another question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. DRIGGS. I desire to ask him in relation to the number of dry docks. Last summer, as I remember it, there was a commission appointed and each denomination of docks was considered, and they provided for a certain number of docks. Does this bill provide for a less or a greater number?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. The bill provides for a smaller number of docks than the commission recommends. Their report sets forth six docks at various points as "urgently necessary" and five as additional "to place the docking facilities of the country on an adequate footing."

Mr. HILBORN. And one of them a floating steel dock.

Mr. DRIGGS. Thank you.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. The reasons assigned by the board for preferring the steel floating dock are:

1. Changes in water level from high and low river do not affect its operation.

2. It is located in fresh water, and expense of maintenance will be small.

3. Great depth of water within mooring distance of wharf.

4. Rapidity with which a floating dock can be constructed to meet the urgent need for a dock on the Gulf of Mexico (ten months being the time estimated for its construction).

The necessity for pushing work of this character is manifest. At the date of the Secretary's report there was no dock on the Atlantic coast capable of accommodating a great battle ship. A few days ago a New York journal which pays close attention to such matters stated that unless the two docks on the Atlantic which are large enough to serve the Iowa and Massachusetts will soon be ready, it might become necessary to send these ships to Halifax for cleaning.

I trust there will be no opposition to this policy. The entire expenditure, either in construction or maintenance, will not equal the cost of one battle ship with her armament, and it will render our naval establishment efficient both in war and peace. It is a measure of economy at all times.

UNCERTAINTY OF OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.

In urging as I do and have done the duty of making adequate naval preparations I have not felt it necessary to discuss the Cuban question or the issues now existing or that may arise between this country and Spain.

I trust that peace may be preserved. I value its inestimable blessings. But it is enough for my argument to point out the uncertainty and insecurity of our foreign relations. The lightning's flash of the cables encompassing the world, the speed of steam propellers, and all the agencies of our nineteenth-century progress and wonderful inventions bring the nations of the earth in close and hourly contact with us, and much as we may endeavor to observe the wise advice of the great father of our country, "to extend our commercial relations with foreign nations, but to have with them as little political connection as possible," modern conditions may prevent us. A country great as we have grown to be must take its part and share in the activities and humanities of the civilized world. It is inevitable; no mere theories can avert it. [Applause.]

The fifty-million appropriation unanimously voted by Congress was not only a declaration of our purpose to stand by the country in time of war; it was also a confession by Congress that we are lacking, sadly lacking, in preparation for war, and that whatever money, freely voted, would do to atone for our past neglect and want of foresight would be cheerfully, promptly given.

How much better it would have been if three or four, or better still, six years ago we had put ourselves in a condition of military and naval preparation which we would be only too happy to have to-day.

Such an act, such a wise policy, would have been the surest agency for peace that we could possibly have employed.

A weak and unprotected coast and commerce are always an invitation to aggression by foreign powers.

One of our earlier Presidents—John Adams—observed in one of his messages to Congress—

A mercantile marine and a military marine must grow up together; one can not long exist without the other.

If we are to have an extended commerce, rich and thriving cities on the seaboard, with vast wealth, as we have, or a foreign policy that takes care of our interests, as we ought to have, we must be prepared to defend what we have got, and to enforce our just demands.

Acting on this line, we can not only hold our place among the nations of the earth, but we can preserve "peace with honor." [Applause.]

SEA POWER ESSENTIAL TO NATIONAL GREATNESS.

Mr. Chairman, I trust it is needless for me to enlarge upon the value and importance of sea power. No nation can be complete or great without it. It was sea power that gave preeminence to Athens, Carthage, and Rome in ancient days. The lack of it, as compared with England, enfeebled France in her long struggle with Great Britain from 1792 to 1814, and not even the genius of Napoleon was able to surmount the difficulties growing out of the immense superiority of England on the sea.

The victory of Trafalgar over the fleets of France and Spain balanced that of Austerlitz, and left England free to exert her arms, money, and vast resources with the certainty that her own soil and industries would be secure against interruption or devastation. Our success over Mexico from 1846 to 1848 was mainly dependent upon our command of the sea to transport armies and their supplies. Even in the hour of peace we find a continual demand for the services of our small Navy.

Mr. Chairman, I have consumed more time than I desired to do, and yet have hardly glanced at the important question before us.

I beg to conclude with a quotation from a letter of John Adams, written in the year 1802. It contains words of wisdom, and if penned with special reference to present conditions it could not be more true and appropriate than it is after the lapse of near a century. It is reenforced by every page of modern history:

> The counsel which Themistocles gave to Athens, Pompey to Rome, Cromwell to England, De Witt to Holland, and Colbert to France I have always given and shall continue to give to my countrymen—that as the great questions of commerce and power between nations and empires must be decided by a military marine, and war and peace are determined at sea, all reasonable encouragement should be given to the Navy.
> The trident of Neptune is the scepter of the world.

[Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to my colleague the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] thirty minutes, or so much of it as he may desire.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this bill now presented for the consideration of the House increases appropriations something more than $3,000,000 over the bill of last year, it is well for the House to clearly understand the provisions that make up that increase. Generally stated, three items constitute it.

First, the increase of the force of 2,000 men and boys, made necessary by the manning and putting into actual service of the ships; second, the increase in the number of vessels that shall hereafter constitute our Navy and provided by this bill, viz, the 8 battle ships, 6 torpedo-boat destroyers, and 6 torpedo boats. In addition to this, the bill has provided for the rebuilding of a gunboat to take the place of the one substantially disabled upon the lakes. The third principal item which has helped to make up this increase is the provision of the bill for the five dry docks that it has been deemed necessary to build at Portsmouth, Boston, League Island, Algiers, and Mare Island.

Mr. Chairman, every thoughtful citizen of the Republic will agree with the Secretary of the Navy that this country is to be congratulated upon the fact that we do not need either the vast military or naval armament required by the other great powers. Our forefathers, chastened by the deadly and protracted struggle of the Revolution, builded better than they knew, and when by the Monroe doctrine they established the principle as one of fixed national policy that we would not allow ourselves to become entangled in the meshes and network of European politics, but that our interests and our action should center alone in the Western Hemisphere, we made way for the dismissal of armies and gave full sweep to the tide of development and national progress that has come to us beyond the wildest dream of one hundred years ago.

Separated as we are by vast seas, we can rest in security and tranquility, notwithstanding the "armed peace" of Europe, with its Franco-Russian alliance, its triple alliance between Germany, Austria, and Italy facing each other, while England, with her characteristic energy, maintains singly and alone a naval armament equal to and able to cope with that of either of the alliances in case it shall become necessary.

We need no navy to protect foreign colonies or to enforce our rule in distant empires. We are not interested in the questions of the East, nor will we be affected if China in the future shall seek to revenge her recent humiliation at the hands of Japan.

But, Mr. Chairman, while we may rejoice in our favorable location and conditions, this sense of security should not cause us wholly to overlook the wise truth proclaimed by the great German chancellor, the man of "blood and iron," Count Bismarck, that the best means of securing and maintaining peace is being prepared, in a measure at least, for war. We must not forget that while oceans intervene between us and other great nations, those oceans are now underlaid with strands of cabled steel, by which communication can be had in a few minutes, and that we are, therefore, necessarily in much closer touch with foreign powers than in years gone by.

We must not forget, either, that the obligation is upon us, not alone from considerations of national pride and the maintenance of the American spirit of self-respect, but also from that of the proper protection of our citizens abroad, to not wholly ignore our naval armament. I am fully persuaded of one thing, and that is, constituting, as we do, a body of 70,000,000 brave, self-reliant, and intelligent people, wholly wedded to the principle of self-government and having proved beyond peradventure that such government can be, and by us is, made as strong, stable, and enduring as any other on earth, we need have little fear of hostile invasion.

Exercising the intelligent freeman's right to agree and disagree upon questions of internal policy, but always ready, when danger from outside threatens, to bury on the instant all differences, to respond with one voice, to follow one flag, to know but one tie—that of American brotherhood—I say, under such conditions as these we need have little fear of being assailed at our own firesides. Too many self-constituted "minutemen" and sentries will spring up to allow that.

I submit, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that any future danger must be met almost altogether by naval forces and naval defenses, and that it is therefore wise policy for us to be liberal to our naval establishment and respond promptly and effectively to its needs and requirements. I submit further, Mr. Chairman, that it is also wise for us as an original proposition, wholly independent of present emergency necessities, to establish a fixed policy of increasing our Navy to a point where we will not be ashamed of it, or, in case of necessity, be compelled to scamper over the globe to buy vessels to meet it.

Mr. Chairman, that being true, I hope—especially after having devoted these long weeks to consideration of the subject—that no one will be misled by the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Navy that we should build but one coast-line, first-class battle ship. The committee must understand that that recommendation was made under other than present circumstances; and I here state, personally, that the Secretary of the Navy is in entire accord with the committee in the recommendation that there shall be three instead of one. I have made this statement after a personal interview with him in regard to the matter. I have made it, too, in order that the three (it seems to me) important features in this bill may not be assailed here upon the question of economy, which is sprung so often in this House.

Mr. Chairman, the other subject, that of dry docks, has been considered long and thoroughly by the Committee on Naval Affairs. Its consideration has been based not only upon the recommendations of the Department, not only upon the report of the board appointed to ascertain and determine how many of these dry docks should be built, but it has been based upon the independent examination made by the committee itself from other and outside sources.

A very strange thing has occurred in this House in the sessions that have gone by. It is to my mind a remarkable thing that heretofore we have been retarded in building dry docks by the fact that points of order have been made against this provision as being new and independent work, and therefore outside of the provisions of the regular appropriation bill.

I sincerely hope and believe that when this measure comes to be considered upon its several provisions there will not be a man in this House who will attempt to raise this point of order and place himself in the strange position of saying that we are authorized to build new battle ships, to build new navy-yards, to build new tool houses and machine shops, to purchase the machinery necessary to build ships, but we are not authorized to erect, as it were, the scaffold upon which they are to be built, repaired, and cleaned. It seems to me that the day for that kind of economy has passed and that the time has come when we must not only furnish our Navy with the navy-yards, tools, and material necessary to repair our vessels, but must also furnish them with the docks to dock them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I insist that the necessity for this increase in our Navy has been made thoroughly apparent, not only by the incidents and facts which have been transpiring within the last few years, but that the necessity is emphasized by a comparison of the Navy of this great nation of ours, the proudest, the noblest, the most civilized nation of the world, with the navies of the powers. This comparison emphasizes the fact I am insisting upon, that it is wise for us to pass, it is good policy for us to pass, and we shall not be true to the American spirit unless we do pass, almost, I might say, without question, the reasonable, prudent increase authorized by this bill.

I have also a statement—slightly different, I think, from that filed by my colleague from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER]—in regard to the naval equipment of the world. Gentlemen will understand that naval vessels are divided into different classes according to the different uses to which they are to be put. First, as to battle ships and other vessels that are capable for the line of battle.

While England has 75 already built and 13 building of these that can go out into the broad sea to furnish the line of battle; while France has 46 built and 11 building; while Russia has 30 built and 10 building; while Italy has 20 built and 6 building; while Germany has 22 built and 4 building, the United States has 13 built and 5 building. Of the commerce protecting and scouting vessels that are designed to protect commerce, England has 119 built and 17 building; France, 51 built and 8 building; Russia, 23 built and 2 building; Italy, 17 built and 1 building; Germany, 18 built and 7 building; the United States, 27 built and no others building.

Take it all the way through. Take the coast-defense vessels: England has 60; we have 13; France has 26; Russia, 34; Spain, 13; Germany, 13. Of the torpedo boats, England has 308 built and 12 building; France has 257 built and 36 building; Russia, 161 built and 14 building; Italy, 192 built and 16 building; Germany, 151 built and 1 building; Spain, 60 built and 3 building; Japan, 29 built and 22 building, and we have 8 built and 15 building.

The total navy of England includes, of all these different kinds of vessels, 632 built and 48 building; France, 482 built and 57 building; Russia, 303 built and 26 building; Italy, 266 built and 13 building; Spain, 189 built and 13 building; Japan, 74 built and 13 building; United States, 85 built and 20 building. I insist that when it is stated publicly—and I get this information from reliable sources—that in this coming year England proposes to spend $127,000,000 in the increase of her Navy, Russia will spend for ships alone $83,333,000, Germany will spend $95,000,000, while France will build one battle ship, 8 cruisers, 8 destroyers, and 6 torpedo boats, and Japan will build 3 battle ships, 5 first-class cruisers, 6 second-class cruisers, 3 torpedo vessels, 8 destroyers, and 12 torpedo boats, every self-respecting American citizen must desire that we shall not be so far behind even Japan as we are in this work. [Applause.]

Other important information is contained in this statement. I have not time to read, but will incorporate it in the RECORD, by the leave of the House, for the consideration of the committee, as a part of my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, a few more words, and I am done. I have always deeply deplored the custom so much indulged here, under the license of general debate, of discussing questions foreign to the bill under consideration. I would not for one moment express myself as I am about to do if I did not believe that not only the argument in behalf of the increase of our Navy but also other extraordinary and exceptional reasons justify me.

It is needless for me to call attention to the fact that we now have one less battle ship than when we last discussed in this House a naval appropriation bill. This bill provides for a new Maine, but the American heart has not ceased to thrill with horror because the original Maine lies a wreck in Habana Harbor with 266 of her brave men buried beneath her. We can not, no matter how hard we may try, believe otherwise than that it would have been impossible for this condition of things to be a stern reality confronting us in any other harbor in the world.

We talk as we will about an accident, and yet the time when and the place where it occurred brings the full realization that there is one nation, or at least one individual, who would destroy us if possible; and while I am in entire accord and sympathy with the wise and patient, yet prompt and patriotic, course pursued by the President in this matter; while I rejoice that nothing has been done in anger and haste, but a full investigation has been ordered by a board selected from the best, bravest, and most sensible body of naval officers to be found on earth, one member of which board I am proud to count as a constituent of mine, nevertheless, while our hearts may be full of sadness and indignation over this Maine tragedy, let us not for one moment forget that it is but an incident in a greater and more horrible tragedy transpiring daily before our eyes, and which, I insist, this great, enlightened, Christian nation must stop. [Applause.]

Two hundred and sixty-six brave men are dead to-day as a result of the Maine tragedy. Over 200,000 are dead in Cuba and 255,000 more, largely helpless women and children, are being held in imprisonment and starved to death there to-day. We do not know as yet that the Spanish authorities blew up the Maine and destroyed the lives of our seamen, but we do know that Spanish authority is responsible for this wholesale deadly murder in the first degree going on within a hundred miles of our shores. [Applause.]

And do not forget, Mr. Chairman, that the only cause for this—the only crime that these pitiful dead and dying have been guilty of—is that, inspired by our example, they have longed and sought for free self-government. And do not forget also, Mr. Chairman, that when this House, almost by unanimous vote, followed by the Senate, declared in favor of belligerent rights for this distracted isle, had Mr. Cleveland acted promptly, at least 100,000 lives would have been saved, Cuba would have been free, and in all human probability the Maine would not be to-day a dismantled wreck, but would be peacefully cleaving the sea, manned by men now dead, and flying the proud American flag. [Applause.]

Do not spare in our remembrance, too, Mr. Chairman, that other fact that when the question of belligerent rights was discussed in the Senate, by far the strongest, most earnest, and affecting words in behalf of such recognition came from the lips of the noble, venerated statesman who stands to-day at the head of President McKinley's Cabinet.

Let us look at this question fairly and squarely. Under the Monroe doctrine, if Eastern powers should seek to settle the affairs of Cuba, we would regard it either as humiliation or an affront. The obligation is upon us. In this case we are our brother's keeper, and the blood of dead thousands cry aloud to us out of Cuba's ground.

I do not want war if it can be avoided. I want peace, but with honor and with a sense that I can look my wife and boy at home in the face and feel I have some heart and humanity left in me. I do not want them to think that I can stand by and see other wives and children starved and strangled without a word of protest. With food and raiment in one hand and with its strong power backed by the righteous will of 70,000,000 of freemen, this Administration must intervene, stop this horror, and give Cuba her freedom.

This intervention may be done, I hope, peacefully. If so, God be praised; but if not, and it can only be done by war, let it come. Humanity, mercy, charity, and all the attributes of God Himself will be with us, and Cuba will be free. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ARNOLD].

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, we stand to-day on the verge of an armed conflict, and it were well that our actions be justified by the facts and approved by honorable men everywhere. It is clear that the Maine was in a supposedly friendly harbor, and was anchored in a particular spot by direction of the Spanish authorities. Our naval court of inquiry, composed of men of unsullied honor and sterling integrity, it is believed, found that the vessel was blown up by some external force—a mine or torpedo.

As to what particular persons were the active agents we may not be informed directly, but we do know that the only party interested, and the only party which hates the United States and which was in a position to accomplish the cowardly and infamous act, was Spain. It may not have been officially directed, but the responsibility still exists. Without such direction there is such negligence as would make the party, in criminal law, guilty of manslaughter in a similar occurrence as between citizens of a State. To my mind there is moral and legal responsibility resting upon Spain. Assuming all this to be true—and I believe it to be true—what should be our demands in way of reparation? In this connection, I desire to refer to the suggestion of some un-American citizens, that the controversy be settled by arbitration.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, this can not be done with honor. We have not only lost the Maine, which in money can be estimated, but there were ushered into eternity without a moment's warning 266 American sailors, whose lives were dear to them and dear to us, and this can not be estimated or measured. Shall we make merchandise of the lives of our people? Can money purchase human life? Is gold dearer to us than the blood of patriots? No, no! And there can not be and must not be any arbitration. [Applause.] Our honor is at stake and our flag insulted. If I insult any gentleman in this House, should there be arbitration to decide and inform that gentleman whether or not he has been insulted? Again, any agreement to arbitrate is an infamous reflection on the honor and integrity of the gentlemen who composed our court of inquiry.

You may then say that my views would necessarily lead to war. In connection with other facts which I will refer to, relative to Cuba, I unhesitatingly say, yes, war, with all that it implies, unless full damages be immediately paid and the complete independence of Cuba be at once obtained. War is the incarnation of an awful tragedy, but a greater tragedy was enacted when 266 brave American sailors went down to their death through the infamy and treachery of Spain or of some of her subjects. We all love peace, and it is dear to us, but may it never again be said of this great nation that we will purchase peace at the price of honor. [Applause.]

As to our recognition of belligerent rights or the independence of Cuba, I confidently assert we have both a moral and legal right so to do. International law materially differs from constitutional or statute law. First, it is not universal, and is not binding in law or conscience upon any except those nations which have so agreed. In fact, so-called international law is not law in its true sense, but is in the nature of a contract or compact or agreement by common consent. These principles, or rather agreements, are very broad and general in character, and no positive or inflexible rule of action is prescribed.

The result or effect is that each particular case must be determined by the circumstances, surroundings, and facts of that case. But as to our interference in Cuba we have authority and precedents. Grotius says:

> The same justice which binds the individual as an individual must bind him as a state member. The law of nature which penetrates the individual conscience must guide the national conduct. Justice is approved of and injustice condemned by the consent of all good men in every relation of life.

D'Aubigne says:

> There is a God in history. There is a moral power abroad whose dictates neither statesman nor nation can afford to despise.

Maine on International Law says:

> This (Roman) jus gentium is identical with natural law, and this is, in truth, the highest law by which individuals and nations can be governed: highest in the absolute perfection of the rules which it contains; highest in the cogency of the commands which it utters, and highest in the absolute obligation of the duties which it enforces.

Let us now refer to precedents: In 1849 the United States early and promptly—being the first so to do—recognized the independence of far-off Hungary. In 1825 England recognized the independence of the revolted South American colonies of Spain, "because of sympathies, united with English commercial interests." The United States had several years earlier—in 1822—recognized the independence of these same South American republics. In 1802 England instructed its representative in Paris as follows:

> You will state most distinctly His Majesty's determination never to forego his right of interfering in the affairs of the Continent on every occasion in which the interests of his own dominions may appear to him to require it. This right His Majesty possesses in common with every other independent power. It rests upon general principles.

It was in this same spirit and on the same principle that the British ministry defended the bombardment of Copenhagen and the seizure of the neutral Danish fleet.

Another precedent, interesting and pertinent at this time, was the prompt recognition by Spain, in June, 1861, of the independence of the Confederate States in our own land. But it is unnecessary to multiply authority and precedents. The millions spent by our country in preventing filibustering expeditions to Cuba, the loss of tens of millions in commerce, the illegal and revolting imprisonment by Spain of American residents in Cuba, these and many other good reasons demand immediate action, which has been too long, much too long, delayed. The question will never be settled until it is settled right.

But throwing aside all precedents and all injuries, and not even considering the Maine disaster, there is a law greater and higher and nobler than any and all international law, the law of common humanity, which not only justifies but demands immediate action at our hands. More than 400,000 innocent and peaceful men, women, and children deliberately starved to death within the last two years, and hundreds, if not thousands, now dying by starvation daily, almost within sight of our shores.

Intensely and sadly interesting as is Senator PROCTOR's and Senator GALLINGER's portrayal of the sad scene, and though we have had full knowledge of the awful crime, no hand has been lifted to save. I have confidence in our present Chief Magistrate. I hope and believe he will measure up not only to his full duty but his opportunities. Washington, because of his labors in the cause of liberty, will live through all time. Lincoln, in the courage, gentleness, and firmness of his great heart, through the emancipation proclamation, will be honored through all the countless ages yet to come.

And to our present Chief Magistrate there has come an opportunity seldom vouchsafed to man to build for himself, in the cause of humanity and freedom, a monument which all the assaults of all time can not destroy, and leave to posterity a glorious name, which will be revered by all men and which will be an inspiration to all in future ages who shall battle for their liberties. [Applause.]

The blood of these murdered people is on the hands of our nation to-day. The whole question has resolved itself into one of annihilation or independence. It has been well demonstrated that Spain can not conquer; so she has been pursuing the policy of annihilation by starvation. Simple and common humanity should now move us to duty too long delayed. Let us do right, though war result, as it probably will. The history of the world, from the slavery of the Israelites under Pharaoh down to this hour, shows that charters of liberty are always written in the blood of heroes.

There can be no peace for Cuba, and we as a nation will ever be annoyed and troubled, until absolute independence is an accomplished fact. Independence is no new thing to the world at large or to ourselves as a nation. Autonomy for Cuba by Spain is a delusion, a snare, and a failure. Many centuries ago autonomy was a fascinating word to Hellenic ears, but it only paved the way to Hellenic subjection, and Greece perished.

In this emergency Providence points the way, duty bids us move on in the pathway of progressive civilization, humanity demands that we march resolutely forward, and justice insists that we punish deceit, perfidy, treachery, cruelty, tyranny, and savagery, which are the predominant traits of Spanish character. I put this statement against that made by General Blanco in Habana a few days ago:

> The present generation will never see another banner than that of Spain at the entrance to the Gulf of Mexico. That banner, representing civilization, progress, liberty, humanity, and religion, will be eternal.

How matchless the irony; how infamous the falsehood!

In the splendid progress and civilization of the last four centuries by the great nations of the world, Spain has not taken one single step forward, and she to-day belongs to the age of barbarism. She deserves no place and should not have a place on the map of the world. Compared with her treatment of Cubans, the Turkish massacres of the Armenians were humane.

It has been said that our intervention may cause foreign complications. This should not deter us from our plain duty; but there is no such danger; any foreign interference would be met by the two great English-speaking people of the world. I would not favor "entangling alliances," but I would not refuse the active kindness of platonic, if not maternal, friendship. In this connection I am reminded of the statement of a prominent Spaniard, a few days ago, that if we became involved with Spain, there was great danger of a revolt against our Government by the late Confederate States. What gross ignorance; what an infamous slander. 'Tis true the South suffered much at the hands of the North during our late strife. Very many of her best and bravest went down to their death; beautiful homes were ruined and desolate; sorrow and despair seemed their only heritage. But, withal, honor, courage, and determination were still theirs, and with these, as part and parcel of ideal manhood, a new South has sprung up, and joining hands with their brethren of the North we are all moving onward and upward to attain to the highest possibilities of this our nation—one God, one flag, one country, one destiny.

And if that flag is ever assailed I know that no hand will be quicker than that of the South to strike down the assailant, and none will more earnestly and quickly respond to defend the honor and glory of this United States.

I will not detain the House longer, except to urge the duty of the hour. That duty is independence and intervention. In the name of the Christ, let us be humane; in the name of humanity, let us be just; in the name of justice, let us do right; and being right, let us dare maintain it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE].

Mr. TATE. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss in detail theitems of this bill, but, sir, I desire briefly to review and contrast the extravagant appropriations for the past thirty years with the appropriations in the earlier days of this Republic, when its affairs were administered in the interest of all the people, and when economy was in reality practiced; when every dollar collected in taxes from the people was used to meet some legitimate purpose, and when the people of this country were contented, prosperous, and happy.

Beginning with the Administration of President Washington, we find that the net ordinary expenditures of his entire Administration were only $20,024,062.59, and in 1790, with a population of 3,927,214 people, the net ordinary expenditures of this Government amounted to only 95 cents per capita.

During President Adams's Administration, from 1797 to 1800, the people were only taxed, for the entire four years, $21,379,357.62 to pay the net ordinary expenses of the Government, or an average of a little over five millions each year.

President Jefferson, from 1801 to 1804, only spent $17,174,432.96, or a little over four millions each year, and during his second Administration, from 1805 to 1808, only $23,926,355.72 or an average of $5,981,588.93 each year.

The ordinary expenses during President Madison's Administration, from 1809 to 1812, were $36,147,857.98, being an average of $9,036,964.49 for each year.

From 1813 to 1816, during President Madison's second Administration, the expenditures of the Government rose to $108,537,086.88, or an average of $27,134,271.47 each year, and were, during President Monroe's Administration, from 1817 to 1820, only $58,698,087.71, or an average of $14,674,521.92 each year.

From 1821 to 1824, during President Monroe's second Administration, the expenditures of the Government were $45,665,421.88, or $11,416,355.47 each year, and the net ordinary expenses from 1825 to 1828, during President John Quincy Adams's Administration, were $50,501,913.31, or an average of $12,625,478.32 each year.

Then followed President Jackson's Administration, from 1829 to 1832, with an ordinary expenditure of $56,251,200.30, or an average of $14,062,800.07 each year.

From 1833 to 1836, during President Jackson's second Administration, the ordinary expenditures of the Government were $89,532,286.68, or an average expenditure of $22,383,071.67 each year; and during President Van Buren's Administration, from 1837 to 1840, the ordinary expenditures of the Government were $121,729,801.16, or an average of $30,432,450.29 each year.

The ordinary expenses during President Tyler's Administration, from 1841 to 1844, amounted to $82,464,753.49, or an average of $20,626,188.37 each year, and President Polk, from 1845 to 1849, expended $147,342,853.34, or an average expenditure of $36,835,713.33 each year.

The net ordinary expenses of President Taylor's Administration, from 1849 to 1852, amounted to $161,604,204.92, or an average expenditure of $40,401,051.23 each year.

The ordinary expenditures of President Pierce's Administration, from 1853 to 1856, were $219,134,410.13, or an average of $54,783,602.53; and during the Administration of President Buchanan, from 1857 to 1860, were $264,784,285.65, or an average of $66,196,071.41 each year.

This, sir, brings us to the beginning of the war, during which time, from 1861 to 1864, under President Lincoln's Administration, the ordinary expenditures of the Government were $2,024,284,207.29, or an average of $506,071,051.82 each year.

The ordinary expenditures under President Johnson, from 1865 to 1869, amounted to $2,036,522,443.69, or an average of $509,130,610.92 each year, and the ordinary expenditures under President Grant's Administration, from 1869 to 1872, amounted to $665,703,545.87, or an average of $166,425,886.46 each year, and during his second Administration, from 1873 to 1876, amounted to $710,995,283.53, or an average each year of $177,748,820.88.

The ordinary expenditures under President Hayes's Administration, from 1877 to 1880, amounted to $609,383,412.21, or an average of $152,345,853.05 for each year, and during President Arthur's Administration, from 1881 to 1884, the ordinary expenditures were $759,843,002.55, being an average expenditure of $189,960,750.63 each year.

The ordinary expenditures from 1885 to the beginning of the present fiscal year were as follows:

Year.	Amount.	Year.	Amount.
1885	$200,840,678.64	1892	$321,645,214.35
1886	101,902,922.53	1893	356,213,502.31
1887	220,190,602.72	1894	339,683,374.19
1888	214,938,951.20	1895	325,217,308.08
1889	240,905,131.31	1896	302,786,385.98
1890	261,637,202.55	1897	305,774,159.57
1891	317,825,540.37	1898	422,421,605.98

The estimates furnished by the Departments at the beginning of this session of Congress for the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 1899, are $462,647,885.85.

Mr. Chairman, this is a brief review of the net ordinary expenditures of this country from the Administration of President Washington to this date. The entire expenditures of this Government from 1790 to 1850, for sixty years, only amounted to $1,466,767,558.42, and when we consider, sir, that we are now expending more money in three years than we did in the sixty years referred to above we can get some idea of the enormous taxes that are now being collected annually from the people of this country.

But our friends will say, no doubt, to justify these expenditures, that we have increased in population and wealth, and that our expenses are necessarily more. I grant you, sir, that the expenses of the Government would necessarily be more than when this was a weaker or poorer country, but no better test can be made of this question than to take the amount of taxes per capita paid by the people of this country.

If our population has kept pace with our wealth, and it has, certainly our expenditures should not, with the exclusion of the expenses of this country during the late war, increase faster than our population.

Sir, in 1800, with a population of 5,308,483 people, the net ordinary expenditures of the Government were $7,411,369.97, being $1.10 per capita.

In 1810, with a population of 7,239,881 people, the expenditure per capita for each year, from 1800 to 1810, was $2.50 per capita; and from 1810 to 1820, when we had a population of 9,633,822 people, we had an average expenditure of $1.50 per capita per year.

From 1820 to 1830, when we had a population of 12,866,620 people, the expenditures per capita were only $1.80, and from 1830 to 1840, with a population of 17,069,453 people, we had an expenditure of only $1.70 per capita; and from 1840 to 1850, with a population of 23,191,879 people, we had an average expenditure of $2.80 per capita.

During the year 1860 the per capita expenditures of this Government were only $1.92, but on account of the increased expenses of the war, the average per capita in 1870 increased to $4.26, but in 1880 decreased to $3.39; increasing again in 1890 to $5.73 per capita.

In 1891 the expenditures were $6.58 per capita; in 1892, $6.36 per capita; in 1893, $6.88 per capita; in 1894, $6.48 per capita; in 1895, $6.21 per capita; in 1896, $6.10 per capita, in 1897, $6.37 per capita, and for 1898, counting our population at 70,000,000, we spent $6.13 per capita. And the estimates for the year ending June, 1899, is $6.60 per capita.

It will therefore be seen, Mr. Chairman, that the gradual increase of expenditures since the war can not be justified from the standpoint that the population of the country is increasing, nor can it be defended from any other standpoint.

The argument in favor of high-tariff taxation is always put upon the ground of meeting the expenses of the Government. You seldom hear upon this floor, sir, any proposition urging a reduction of expenditures, but year by year all the power of the Government is used in taxing the people to meet these expenditures.

Why not, sir, instead of increasing the taxes reduce the appropriations? In the ordinary business affairs of life when our expenses exceed our income we cut down our expenses or bankruptcy must follow, but this has not been the rule of the Government. While the expenditures have been piled mountain high, taxation must be in proportion, and the people have been taxed and taxed, as we are told, to meet the expenses of the Government, until the power to tax has almost been exhausted.

When we consider that the appropriations during thirty years of peace have almost equaled those necessary to carry on war, no man can justify or defend them. The extravagance that has been practiced in almost every department of this Government for the past thirty years is appalling.

We hear a great deal in these Halls at every session of Congress in reference to cutting down appropriations, but, sir, we have but one lamp with which to light our feet, and that is the lamp of past experience. We can only judge the future by the past, and what has there been in the conduct of the Republican party, which has continued to increase annually the burdens of taxation by extravagant appropriations, to lead us to hope or believe that a reduction in the enormous expenditures of public money is to be made?

Instead of reductions, the figures show that year after year of peace our appropriations have increased in every department of the Government until the taxing power of the Government is at the highest limit and the capacity of the people to pay taxes almost exhausted, and the time has come when a halt must be called.

It seems, sir, that in the National, State, county, and municipal government, and all over this country, extravagance in the expenditure of public money is complained of. Those who advocate extravagant expenditures seem to forget that every dollar squandered is collected from the people and represents the labor and privation of our citizens, and that every dollar unnecessarily collected suggests an unnecessary expenditure. Money collected from the people in time of peace beyond the amount absolutely necessary to support the economical administration of the Government is robbery. [Applause.]

Sir, there is in my judgment no justification for the enormous increase for the past thirty years in the expenditures of this Government, but there is every reason for a reduction. Such enormous increases justify alarm. We should resist this ever-growing extravagance that has grown up in our country; we should shut down this flood gate of extravagant and unnecessary appropriations or there will be demoralization in the near future. We can not raise our voice too soon, for with this unheard-of increase in the expenditure of the people's money for the past thirty years it is not possible that there can be that purity in public affairs which should exist.

If we are to have honesty and integrity in the administration and conduct of the affairs of this Government we must have economy in our expenditures. We were taught this lesson in the purer and better days of this Republic, and such has been the teachings of history. Extravagant appropriations always breed corruption, which means death to the Government, while economy and integrity in the administration of public affairs is the very foundation on which our Government must rest.

The expenditures of this Government must either be extravagant or economical; there is no middle ground. If economical, integrity and honor will direct and control the affairs of the Government; if extravagant, the people will groan under excessive taxes. We can not have purity in our Government unless we have economy. The standard of public honor will decrease year after year as the unnecessary, base, and extravagant expenditures increase.

Speaking for the people I have the honor to represent and the Democratic party to which I belong, I assert that in times like these, with want and hardship pressing upon the people, that I favor the lowest possible appropriations necessary for the support and economical administration of the Government. If the integrity and purity of this Government are to be preserved, it must be honestly and economically administered.

Mr. Chairman, the necessities—the absolute necessities—of a large portion of our people cry out for economy.

We have heard a great deal at this session of Congress about keeping down appropriations, and I do hope that this will be done. It seems to me, sir, that we have reached the limit, and it is time to call a halt.

If we listen to the heads of Departments who make recommendations, and who are always ready to furnish some excuse why appropriations should be increased, we will never make a reduction.

Sir, upon the slightest pretense or the smallest appropriation for any purpose we are met in the next Congress with a new division or bureau, with a chief and a full set of officials, and a recommendation for additional appropriations to carry it on.

This has gone on until to-day we have an army of officeholders and employees for this Government, a large number of whom are unnecessary and a dead expense.

In this connection it would be of interest to know the great increase in the number of officeholders in this country, and for the purpose of giving this House and the country some idea of how great this increase of the officeholding class has been I will briefly review the same from 1820 to the present time.

It is difficult to find any authentic data on this subject, but from the best I can gather I find that we had 8,694 officeholders in the service of the Government in 1820.

In 1830 we had	12,785
In 1840 we had	17,740
In 1850 we had	31,149
In 1860 we had	38,625
In 1870 we had	69,700
In 1880 we had	103,140
In 1890 we had	183,488

If you will take the census from 1820 to 1860, you will find, by comparing the same with the above statement, that about one person out of every thousand in the United States held a Government job up to 1860, but since that time the Republican party has so increased the number of officeholders of this Government that four persons in every thousand hold a Government office.

This demonstrates one of two propositions: That the average officeholder at this time possesses only one-fourth of the capacity of those who held offices from 1820 to 1860, or that we have a great many more officers than we need, and a trip through the Departments will convince any member of this House, from the number of heels he will find on top of desks, that the latter proposition is true at least, and, in my opinion, both.

Why should we have four people out every thousand drawing a Government salary now when we only had one out of every thousand before 1860? There can be no valid reason offered for it.

The greatest increase, however, in the office-holding class is found in the number of employees of the Government here in Washington. I find that the several Departments had, in 1820, 333 employees here in Washington, and in 1853 there were 723, showing an increase from 1820 to 1853, a period of thirty-three years, of 390. I find that for the thirty-two years from 1853 to 1885 the number of employees increased from 723 to 12,717, being an increase of 11,995.

In 1889 we had 16,234 people employed in the Departments here in Washington. In 1891 this number had increased to 23,144, and the number increased from 1891 to 1896 until we had, in the latter year, 27,576. The increase from 1885 to 1896 was at the rate of 1,363 employees each year, or 113 each month, and when we consider that we have more people holding Government jobs here in Washington than we have soldiers in the Army of the United States, we can more fully appreciate why this office-holding class is referred to so often as "an army of officeholders."

In this connection I desire to say, sir, that while I favor and have at all times voted for and advocated economy in the expenditure of public money in times of peace, yet, if necessary for the defense of the nation, I stand ready to vote for any necessary appropriation that is needed for national defense, and should the present crisis result in war with Spain there will be no braver or more loyal defenders of our flag than the men of the South who wore the gray, and their decendants. [Applause.]

Sir, the history of the United States shows conclusively that the Democratic party has had a uniform policy of economically administering the affairs of the Government, and in opposing the unnecessary increase in public offices; while the Republican party has had a uniform policy of extravagant appropriations, reckless expenditures, and an unnecessary increase in the number of public offices. The position of the Democratic party, since its foundation, upon these two questions to which I have referred, and which I so fully indorse, is expressed in its last platform at Chicago, in the following language:

> We denounce the profligate waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation, and the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high, while the labor that pays them is unemployed and the products of the people's toil are depressed in price, till they no longer repay the cost of production. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a Democratic government, and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

[Applause.]

The people of this country will soon be called upon to select between the party now in power, that has built up trusts and monopolies from one end of this country to the other, and which advocates the single gold standard and high tariff taxation, and the old Democratic party that brought our people the boon of self-government, that has always favored low taxes and economy, and that has been the uncompromising enemy of monopolies and privileged classes, the friend of the honest laboring man, and the advocate of both gold and silver, the money of the Constitution.

Sir, with a national existence that dates back to the very birth of this Republic, and during all the storms through which this country has passed, the banner of the Democratic party has been continuously borne by the legions of patriotic American citizens as the proud emblem of the very corner stone and foundation of this Republic. Upon its record and history and our principles and admitted economy in public affairs, together with our platform adopted at Chicago, we shall go before the people of this Union.

That we shall elect a majority of the members of this House in the fall election, I believe. That we shall elect the next President of the United States, I am confident. We will witness then, indeed, a united people, enjoying all the blessings of constitutional government, administered in the interests and devoted to the honor and welfare of our whole country. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS].

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, Boswell, in his immortal Life of Johnson, records the eminent doctor's views upon controversy as follows:

> Why, sir, when you wish a man to have that belief which you think is of infinite advantage, you wish well to him; but your primary consideration is your own quiet. * * * No, sir; every man will dispute with great good humor upon a subject in which he is not interested. I will dispute very calmly upon the probability of another man's son being hanged, but if a man zealously enforces the probability that my own son will be hanged, I shall certainly not be in good humor with him.

I can conceive of no terser language with which to preface my remarks than the above, for respecting most highly and venerating greatly the reasoning faculties and abilities of the members of this House, I trust with the small arguments in my power that I may be able to somewhat prove that increase of the Navy and national defense would be to your "infinite advantage;" and I also believe it is possible to most conclusively show that your primary consideration for your "own quiet," mutual advantage, progressive greatness, and expansion and extension of commerce absolutely demand that the Navy be considerably augmented and strengthened; therefore I wish well to you.

We do not care about the broils and quarrels of other nations, but if they attempt to quarrel with us, we should be prepared to creditably defend ourselves. My first proposition is: If the commerce of a nation is to be maintained, legislators must grant defense appropriations commensurate with its growth and development, or not only will that commerce fade away and disappear, but the nation itself will decline and eventually fall.

From the earliest ages to the present time history supplies proof upon proof of the absolute truth of this proposition, but in the limited time I have for the discussion of this entire subject it is impossible to cite many of them.

The Phœnicians were the greatest navigators and merchants of antiquity, and for nearly five hundred years their seamanship and commercial activity made them almost absolute masters of the Mediterranean. Finally, however, the merchants and aristocracy, grown richer and richer, refused to spend sufficient money for war ships for the protection of their merchant marine, and this wonderful nation then fell an easy prey to Alexander the Great.

You all remember how Demosthenes plead with the Athenians, in the speeches known as the Philippics, to provide more ships, appropriate more money, or else become conquered by Philip. No heed was paid to the advice, Greece was conquered, and the commercial party was the cause of the subjugation. Hannibal tells us that Rome became mistress of the world because the Carthagenians refused to increase and strengthen their naval force.

The Egyptians, too, during their five thousand years of existence, were repeatedly conquered by maritime powers.

It is only from the deepest vaults of history's storehouse that we are able to portray the greatness and grandeur of ancient Rome, and knowing that her decline and fall are directly attributable to the refusal of her merchants, traders, and pleasure seekers to allow moneys to be appropriated for an increase of her army and navy, we can not but think that here is a terrible example of what may follow insufficient protection to commerce.

During mediæval history one of the most powerful trade confederations that ever existed was the Hanseatic League. This league was a union of many cities banded together for the extension of commerce and the protection of their fleets from piratical attacks. Their great fleets of merchantmen, convoyed by powerful sloops and ships of war, were indeed remarkable evidences of the enterprise of the promoters of the league.

After an existence of four hundred years, through avarice, greed, and foolish sense of safety, the directors failed to provide a sufficient number of war ships for the protection of the fleets, and the league fell, destroyed by the freebooters and pirates of the sea.

Assuming that the epoch of modern history begins with the year 1485, we are able to show the rise and fall of three great powers, the rise being directly attributable to power on the sea, and the fall attributable to failure to strengthen that power when required.

Who has not read the story of the rise and fall of the Dutch Republic? Who has not admired the enterprise, pluck, and push of the Dutch?

Shortly after its birth the republic became the most powerful maritime power in the world. Time and again its fleets, under command of the famous admirals, De Ruyter and Van Tromp, coped successfully with not only the fleets of England, but also with the combined fleets of France and England, and also Spain and France. What was the result? Colony after colony fell into her possession; home and over-sea trade increased so rapidly that in less than one hundred years after its inception the republic is said to have had over 10,000 ships (merchant) engaged in over-sea traffic (by this I mean exports and imports collectively), over 400,000 people made their livelihood through shipping, and her trade amounted to over $150,000,000 annually.

Notwithstanding oft-recurring wars, the nation was enormously prosperous, and as Mahan truly says, it "only shows how the harvest of the sea can lift up to wealth and power a country intrinsically weak and without resources." For about one hundred years this condition of affairs continued, and then her people became involved in party strife, one party favoring the maintenance of the navy and the other the strengthening of the army, while each, in a very half-hearted manner, favored small appropriations for the other. The result was the introduction to the world of political contention over the question of national defense and protection. Sectional and political jealousy grew apace, and the consequence thereof can easily be seen. Neither the navy nor army was strengthened in time of peace.

The commercial aristocracy, feeling satisfied behind their counters and money bags, laughed at the idea of any more wars and used their influence to procure large sums of public moneys for measures other than the common defense, or, as De Witt, one of the greatest statesmen that ever lived, and a Dutchman, says:

> Never in time of peace and from fear of rupture will they take resolutions strong enough to lend them to pecuniary sacrifice beforehand. The character of the Dutch is such that unless danger stares them in the face they are indisposed to lay out money for their own defense. I have to do with a people who, liberal to profusion where they ought to economize, are often sparing to avarice where they ought to spend.

Mr. Chairman, we must not forget that these Dutch burghers were as brave and courageous as any people that ever lived. The world knows how they loved their country, for there is not another instance in history equal to the opening of the dikes so that their beloved soil might be kept from falling into the possession of their enemies. Notwithstanding all this, they refused to appropriate moneys for increased naval defense, and Holland lost her enviable position among the nations of the world, grass grew in the streets of Amsterdam, and the glory and greatness of the Dutch Republic disappeared.

Ah, gentlemen, heed well the story of the Dutch Republic ere you take final action upon this naval appropriation bill.

If time permitted, I could cite the fading of Spain and Portugal as the other evidence of what may follow lack of naval appropriation.

On the other hand, what magnificent and permanent success has remained with England and France, who have always lived up to this truism: Adequate naval protection is essential if commercial greatness is to be enduring.

Alfred the Great was probably the first English Sovereign to recognize the importance of maintaining a navy. From his reign to the time of Cromwell it developed slowly and spasmodically, and then began systematic growth and a definite policy was adopted. An eminent author, speaking of this period, this dawn of the era of England's commercial greatness, says:

> Under Cromwell the English navy sprang rapidly into a new life and vigor. * * * England's rights or reparations for her wrongs were demanded by her fleets throughout the world. * * * Nor were equally strong peaceful measures for the growth of English trade and shipping forgotten.

Cromwell's celebrated navigation act naturally boomed her commerce. This act provided—

> That all imports into England or her colonies must be conveyed exclusively in vessels belonging to England herself or to the country in which the products carried were grown or manufactured.

The master mind of the stern old statesman saw how necessary it was to link navy and commerce together into an unbreakable chain, with each link absolutely dependent on the other for collective strength. Almost without interruption from the date of the navigation act, England has been "mistress of the seas," and her commercial power has grown and increased until her exports and imports are so much greater than those of any other nation that she is also the mistress of the commercial world.

Every historian of note records that the great success of England must be attributed to her naval policy. Practically whatever her people and merchants have asked in the line of war ships her Houses of Parliament have granted. A German historian, speaking of this characteristic, says:

> The English navy simply keeps pace with the absolute requirements of the people, from whom it originally sprang, and thus the maritime power of the country becomes identified with them step by step in their national growth.

The absolute truth of this declaration is shown by the following table, recording as it does the naval strength of the nation at various periods:

War ships.

Date.	Ships of all classes.	Men.	Tons.
1578	24	6,700	10,506
1603	42	8,346	17,055
1658	157	21,930	57,000
1702	272	40,000	159,020
1760	412	70,000	321,134
1783	498	45,000	433,236
1800	707	135,000	668,744
1808	869	143,800	802,800
1814	901	146,000	908,000
1850	585	48,000	570,000
1890	373	05,000	680,000

While the above table seems remarkable, the following showing is even more so:

Merchant marine.

Date.	Tons.	Date.	Tons.
1825	202,870	1870	5,690,780
1835	605,200	1880	6,574,313
1845	1,312,020	1890	7,978,538
1855	4,022,900	1895	8,088,450
1860	4,658,687

Note carefully this enormous development.

Commerce.

Date.	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
1799	£24,006,700	£35,908,850	£59,970,550
1849	90,546,000	102,705,000	193,051,000
1854	152,389,053	115,821,092	268,210,145
1860	295,290,274	238,905,682	534,195,956
1870	305,257,498	244,080,577	547,338,070
1894	429,433,000	287,358,000	666,791,000

Do these last two tables not show what marvelous results may follow when commerce is taken from the realm of insufficient naval protection and placed under the dominion of strong fleets and liberal laws. Merchant marine increased forty-four fold and commerce eleven fold.

FRANCE.

Richelieu, in 1633, realizing that France could never become truly great unless her sea power developed, endeavored to build a navy, but met with little success, and it was not until the reign of Louis XIV that a definite policy of naval aggrandizement was inaugurated, and then through the ability of Colbert, one of the greatest ministers France has ever had, great life and vigor was given to the development of the fleet.

Colbert's policy was not one of war, for in his memoirs we are repeatedly told that his sole object was "the commercial prosperity and development" of his country, and this was impossible without merchant marine and a sufficient force of war ships to protect that marine and the trade treaties with foreign countries. When Colbert first took office France had only 30 war ships of small size. Twenty-two years later the fleet had increased to 107 ships of the line, not including many smaller vessels. These twenty-two years have frequently been called the "Golden Age" of France. Commerce and the merchant marine grew apace.

In the latter part of the reign of Louis XIV all this changed and the navy rapidly dwindled away, for Louis, to quote from Mahan, "could not or would not see that men-of-war were of little use and life if the peaceful shipping and the industries by which they were supported perished." After the death of Louis XIV the naval power of France dwindled away, and with its disappearance the colonies she had so gloriously developed were lost to her forever.

Finally in 1793 the people arose as one man and demanded the restoration of the navy. The Government, realizing that "the voice of the people is as the voice of God," answered the cry, and from that time France has ever been the second naval power of the world, and her greatness is now established on so firm a foundation that in all probability her power will never again be shaken.

Prior to 1793 French naval development was independent of the desires of the people and depended almost wholly on the commercial and war projects of ambitious monarchs. After 1793 the wishes of the people governed the development; for, with the bitter lesson of 1684–1793 ever before them, the warm-hearted, France-loving Frenchmen would rise in their might against any faction or party that dared attempt a decrease in its naval force.

Prosperous France, our former ally and present friend! Long may she retain her power and strength!

From these historical pictures I have endeavored to prove my first proposition, and, Mr. Chairman, let us not forget that we members of Congress are a sort of a council, an advisory board, not only for the interests of our constituency but for the far greater welfare, growth, and development of our country; and does it not behoove us to consider well the lessons taught by history, remembering the fate of the Dutch Republic, and be careful that the trust reposed in us is well administered? We know of the greatness of England and France, and as we also know that that greatness has come from sea power, let us develop the Navy and build up our coast defenses for the continued success of our commerce and national strength.

UNITED STATES.

Mahan says:

Naval strategy has for its end to found, support, and increase, as well in peace as in war, the sea power of a country.

The founders and early developers of our Union thoroughly appreciated this and from the very beginning adopted a liberal naval policy. What was the result? Our growth and increase in strength were more than phenomenal; they were wonderful. In commerce we took almost at once a place side by side with the richest and oldest nations of the earth and bade fair to leave them all far behind.

Of course the French Revolution and the Napoleonic wars had a great deal to do with our rapid progress, but if our statesmen had not passed liberal laws for the development of our merchant marine and granted generous appropriations for the Navy, we would not have had the means of carrying exports and imports or the war ships for the protection of our fleets of merchantmen.

In 1821 it was said by an eminent English author that—

The United States, though without Eastern possessions, have obtained a high position in trade from their commercial activity and naval superiority.

Down to 1840 two-thirds of the foreign vessels trading to America were of American build. Our ships were not only the pride of the nation but were the envy of the world, for no nation was able to compete with us in this our chosen industry. From 1840 to 1858 our clipper ships were the queens of the seas, and the American flag was known in every port around the globe. Grantham, the English author of the Navigation Papers, written in 1870, says:

It will be recollected that previous to the development of steamships the preponderance of shipping was falling rapidly into the hands of American shipowners. Thirty years ago one of the great objects of interest at the docks in Liverpool was the American sailing packets, and it was considered that a stranger had missed one of the lions of the port who had not visited these celebrated ships.

The same prestige was felt everywhere, on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, in India, China, and in all the best trades American ships were most in demand.

Ah, those were indeed the halcyon days of American shipping; and, Mr. Chairman, there is not an American to-day who does not look back with pride at the time when the American flag was supreme upon the seas, and there is not one of us who would not hail with satisfaction the dawn of a new era restoring American vessels to the proud pinnacle of greatness held by them in 1845. Ah, Mr. Chairman, the Democratic party may have committed many errors, but it was the Republican party that drove our shipping from the seas.

In 1845 the tonnage of our merchant marine was 2,417,072; 1855, 5,212,001; 1860, 5,353,868; 1880, 4,068,034; 1885, 4,265,934.

*NOTE.—The number 88 includes all ships built and building down to fourth class and gunboats, but not torpedo boats, tugs, sailing ships, or receiving ships.

From this table it is seen that the numerical strength of the Navy has not materially increased since 1847; that is, for the past fifty years. The strength of the individual ships is, of course, much increased; but so has the strength of individual ships in other navies. Our relative strength has decreased. At the close of our war with the South we were the second naval power of the world. To-day we are about the fourth; and at the rate at which Germany and Japan are increasing, we may soon be the sixth.

From 1790 to 1860—seventy years—our merchant-marine tonnage increased during fifty-eight years, and only decreased twelve years. From 1865 to 1887—twenty-two years—it increased only during eleven years. From 1888 to 1897 it has decreased only twice.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that where one nation is absolutely dependent upon another for the carrying of its oversea commerce, that nation runs the greatest risk of not only loss of commercial prestige but disaster. I believe that increased naval power will build up and tremendously increase our commerce, for as the magnet draws the needle, so a liberal naval policy draws commerce and merchant marine. When our naval appropriations have been great and our fleets most powerful, you can see from the above tables that we carried our exports and imports in our own ships; and right here I would like to give a table showing the strength of our Navy during most of our history.

We have identically the same number of ships (47) to-day that we had in 1842, and remember that the 47 commissioned ships of 1842 were proportionately as powerful as those of 1897. In 1842 our exports were $99,877,995 and our imports $96,075,071, while in 1897 our exports were $1,050,993,556 and our imports $764,730,412. Population—1842, 18,000,000; 1897, 73,000,000. Now that we are so rich and powerful, should we not be far more powerful upon the seas than we were in 1842? You say economy is your watchword; but are you not willing to appropriate a larger percentage of your gross revenue for the Navy and national defense than you have in recent years? You could not be accused of extravagance if you did, for such a charge would malign, would cast reflection upon every statesman from 1794 to 1860, for the following table shows what percentage of the revenues have been alone spent on the Navy:

	Per cent.
1794 to 1820, inclusive, average per annum	14½
1821 to 1840, inclusive	15½
1841 to 1860, inclusive	18½
1861 to 1867, war period
1868 to 1883, inclusive	2½
1884 to 1897, inclusive	3½
1794 to 1860, inclusive (average)	16½
1868 to 1897, inclusive (average)	3½
Greatest per cent, 1800	31
Lowest per cent, 1879	1½

I know that this is not the age of sentiment, but of practical consideration. Times may be different, but the statesmen of to-day are certainly not more far-seeing or ubiquitous than those of 1794 to 1860. Think of the great men who graced House and Senate and brought lasting honor to American institutions during that period. Think of the great Presidents, and yet they were willing to appropriate an average of 16½ per cent for naval development, while those of the last thirty years have only appropriated an average of 3½ per cent. Is this wisdom, or is it folly? I am inclined to think the latter, for we are not willing to accept that wise precept left us by our fathers, "In time of peace prepare for war." Our fathers believed, too, that "a peaceful, gain-loving nation is not far-sighted, and far-sightedness is needed for adequate military preparation." They knew it, because preparation for war would have prevented the war of 1812.

Read what Presidents Jackson and Polk had to say about the Navy, and you will then see that the ideas held by them are those of the nations of the earth to-day, excepting the United States:

[Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1817-1833, Richardson, volume 2, page 520.]

ANDREW JACKSON'S SECOND ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Our position in relation to the most powerful nations of the earth and the present condition of Europe admonish us to cherish this arm [the Navy] of our national defense with peculiar care. Separated by wide seas from all those governments whose power we might have reason to dread, we have nothing to apprehend from attempts at conquest. It is chiefly attacks upon our commerce and harassing inroads upon our coast against which we have to guard.

A naval force adequate to the protection of our commerce always afloat, with an accumulation of the means to give it a rapid extension in case of need, furnishes the power by which all such aggressions may be prevented or repelled. With the aid of Congress, in a few years the Government will be prepared in case of emergency to put afloat a powerful navy of new ships almost as soon as old ones could be repaired.

[Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1841-1849, Richardson, volume 4, pages 412, 413, 414.]

JAMES K. POLK'S FIRST ANNUAL MESSAGE.

I refer you to the report of the Secretary of the Navy for the present condition of the branch of the national defense and for grave suggestions having for their object the increase of its efficiency and a greater economy in its management.

* * * * * * *

It is believed that at all our foreign stations the honor of our flag has been maintained. I am happy to add that the display of maritime force which was required by the events of the summer has been made wholly within the usual appropriations for the service of the year, so that no additional appropriations are required.

The commerce of the United States, and with it the navigation interests, have steadily and rapidly increased since the organization of our Government, until, it is believed, we are now second to but one power in the world, and at no distant day we shall probably be inferior to none. Exposed as they must be, it has been a wise policy to afford to these important interests protection with our ships of war distributed in the great highways of trade throughout the world. For more than thirty years appropriations have been made and annually expended for the gradual increase of our naval forces. In peace our Navy performs the important duty of protecting our commerce, and in the event of war will be, as it has been, a most efficient means of defense.

The successful use of steam navigation on the ocean has been followed by the introduction of war steamers in great and increasing numbers into the navies of the principal maritime powers of the world. A due regard to our own safety and to an efficient protection to our large and increasing commerce demands a corresponding increase on our part. No country has greater facilities for the construction of vessels of this description than ours or can promise itself greater advantages for their employment. They are admirably adapted to the protection of our commerce, to the rapid transmission of intelligence, and to the coast defense.

* * * * * * *

Whatever may have been our policy in the earlier stages of the Government, when the nation was in its infancy, our shipping interests and commerce comparatively small, our resources limited, our population sparse and scarcely extending beyond the limits of the original thirteen States, that policy must be essentially different now that we have grown from three to more than twenty millions of people; that our commerce, carried in our own ships, is found in every sea, and that our territorial boundaries and settlements have been so greatly expanded. Neither our commerce nor our long line of coast on the ocean and on the lakes can be successfully defended against foreign aggression by means of fortification alone.

They are essential at important commercial and militaty points, but our chief reliance for this object must be on a well-organized, efficient Navy. The benefits resulting from such a Navy are not confined to the Atlantic States. The productions of the interior which seek a market abroad are directly dependent on the safety and freedom of our commerce. The occupation of the Balize below New Orleans by a hostile force would embarrass if not stagnate the whole export trade of the Mississippi and affect the value of the agricultural products of the entire valley of that mighty river and its tributaries

It has never been our policy to maintain large standing armies in time of peace. They are contrary to the genius of our free institutions, would impose heavy burdens on the people, and be dangerous to public liberty. Our reliance for protection and defense on the land must be mainly on our citizen soldiers, who will be ever ready, as they ever have been ready in times past, to rush with alacrity at the call of their country to her defense. This description of force, however, can not defend our coast, harbors, and inland seas, nor protect our commerce on the ocean or the lakes. These must be protected by our Navy.

Considering an increased naval force, and especially of steam vessels, corresponding with our growth and importance as a nation, and proportioned to the increased and increasing naval power of other nations, of vast importance as regards our safety, and the great and growing interests to be protected by it, I recommend the subject to the favorable consideration of Congress.

EFFECT OF NAVAL WAR UPON AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

In case of war any of the great naval powers would have no difficulty in blockading every one of our great seaports, from Maine to Texas and from California to Washington. This is so generally admitted that it required no extended argument for proof. Therefore does not sea power and increase of the Navy become as important and essential to the rural or farm districts as to the districts along the coast?

You may say destroy the seaport cities and the manufacturers and farmers will rebuild them; but I say destroy your seaports and the manufacturers and farmers will suffer equally with we of the coast. This may seem a bold proposition, but figures will prove its accuracy, and I repeat that my contention is that development of the Navy is of as great importance to the farmer and manufacturer as it is to the residents of the coast. Assuming, for argument, that we were at war with either England, France, Germany, or Italy—I do not consider Spain, for we are far more powerful than she—ere thirty days passed all our great ports of export would be so thoroughly blockaded that commerce would be literally paralyzed.

It may be that I am assuming too much; that you are not willing to admit the idea of a blockade. Very good. I will show, then, what would certainly keep commerce from entering even the seaports. Many of the great railroads have their termini in and near the city of New York. The tracks, warehouses, and elevators of these roads could easily be destroyed by an invading fleet. Take, if you please, the West Shore, New York Central, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, Erie, and Jersey Central railroads. The tracks of the first skirt the Hudson River from Haverstraw to Albany; those of the second from New York to Albany; the third extending from the Hudson River to Newark, where the bridge over the Passaic River could be demolished; the fourth and fifth, from the Hudson River to the Bergen tunnel, a distance not exceeding 3 miles, and the sixth from Jersey City to Elizabeth, including the long bridge over Newark Bay.

On the east we have the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, whose tracks for seventy-odd miles skirt Long Island Sound.

Not only would every foot of these tracks be destroyed, but the road beds would be almost irretrievably ruined. While New York is only one illustration, similar conditions exist in and about Portland, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, and practically every other city on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Therefore the surplus agricultural products and manufactures of the Southern, Middle, and Western States would have absolutely no outlet.

By referring to the tables in appendix you will see the results that would ensue.

Though not desiring to burden you with a full argument based on these six tables, I do desire to go into detail of the year 1890. The agricultural exports for that year amounted to $639,820,808, this amount being 73.69 per cent of our total exports. The total value, raised throughout the entire United States, of the ten main crops, wheat, corn, cotton, etc., was $2,460,107,454. Thus the amount exported was a trifle under 25 per cent of the entire crop.

Number of workers and value of farms, etc.

Workers	6,297,580
Value produced	$2,460,107,454
Wages	$1,385,467,600
Value of farms	$13,279,252,649
Value of farm implements, machinery, and live stock	$2,703,015,040
	$15,982,267,689

Now, 25 per cent having been shown to be the amount of total production exported, what relation does it bear to the above table? Why, simply that your production must of necessity be reduced that amount, and this would mean loss of emplyment to 1,574,395 workers and (figuring five persons in all dependent on one worker for maintenance) loss of support to 7,871,975 dependents, and this does not include workers engaged in manufacturing or transportation, and for these I would add, say, 1,000,000, and together forming a total of 8,871,975, or about 8¼ per cent of our total population.

Loss in wages to agricultural workers would amount to $346,366,900 and depreciation of farm values amounting to $3,995,566,921. These last two estimates do not include manufacturers and transporters' wages and valuation, and none of the above figures include the wholesale and retail dealers in other occupations and more or less dependent on the classes mentioned, for I know of no way to compute the above, but I think it reasonable to allow one dependent for each of those in the occupations figured upon, and this would give a total of 17,743,950 dependents not living anywhere near the coast who would be directly interested, affected, and thrown out of employment by any blockade that lasted for three months or longer. The depreciation of property would amount to $8,000,000,000.

The following table gives all the coast cities, and allows for places apt to be injured or destroyed by an invading fleet of war ships. The population is estimated January 1, 1898, and the assessed estimated values from the various tax rolls and without allowing anything for contents of buildings. These figures having been compiled by the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, I believe them to be accurate.

Population and value of real estate of the coast cities of the United States.

Coast cities.	Population.	Real estate.
Portland	42,000	$26,182,095
Boston	550,000	803,860,550
Providence	154,000	135,805,460
New Haven	112,000	59,000,000
Bridgeport	65,000	51,640,636
Hartford	72,000	39,398,785
Greater New York	3,389,753	2,577,277,820
Jersey City	200,000	82,415,220
Hoboken	57,000	35,978,429
Newark	250,000	137,000,000
Yonkers	40,000	30,711,000
Newburg	25,000	9,173,430
Albany	100,000	58,768,650
Troy	64,000	42,411,511
Philadelphia	1,340,000	840,496,650
Baltimore	625,270	280,646,932
Washington, D. C.	277,117	181,256,284
Richmond, Va	100,000	144,094,166
Savannah, Ga	65,000	24,493,678
New Orleans, La	275,000	102,025,922
Add on, say	1,000,000	500,000,000
	8,303,130	5,962,577,218
Pacific Coast	500,000	300,000,000
	8,803,130	6,262,577,218

So, from point of population as well as valuation, the inland communities would be more seriously affected than the coast communities. I believe that 80 per cent of our agricultural and manufacturing people would be affected, but I have only attempted to show the number of people who would be absolutely deprived of all revenue and who would become dependent on their various communities for maintenance and support. I believe, though, that there is a far greater question involved in this discussion. I believe there should be no question of locality where national progress is to be considered.

If the interior requests appropriations for river development, increased postal facilities, public buildings, or agricultural investigation, we of the coast should listen to their appeal and grant what they ask. On the other hand, when we ask for increased coast fortifications and more battle ships, cruisers, and torpedo boats, the interior should heed our request. It seems to me that we would thus be fair and just to each other and above all else we would be doing unto each other as we would that they should do unto us.

We believe "that in union there is strength," but the only way to establish this strength is for the States to absolutely rely upon each other through the medium of Congress for their development along national lines.

I believe that we should prepare so as to preclude the possibility of war, but if war should come, let us show the world that we are "as great in war as we are in peace." Let us be more than slow to anger, but ever ready to defend and protect the honor of the flag, our "Old Glory."

COMPARISON OF NAVAL DEVELOPMENT ABROAD WITH THAT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The expenditures for increasing the strength of the Navy, as well as the amount expended to maintain the naval forces in an efficient condition, are greater in England than in any of the other countries.

The work laid out for the year just passed (1897) is here given in extracts from the report of the first lord of the admiralty:

Briefly summarized, the leading proposals as set forth in the first lord's statement explanatory of the navy estimates for 1896-1897 are as follows:

Net estimates for the year	£21,823,000
Expenditure on new construction	£7,385,000
Number of officers and men	90,750

Three docks, instead of one, to be built at Gibraltar. These are to be, respectively, 700, 600, and 500 feet in length. The entrances are to be 95 feet broad and 33 feet deep on the sills.

List of chief gunners, chief boatswains, and chief carpenters to be increased.

Pay of warrant officers to be increased.

The Britannia to be abolished in favor of a college on shore, with a sloop as tender to it.

An increase of £850,000 in the vote for guns and ammunition.

Increase of the amount proposed in the naval-works bill (to be spread over a series of years) from £8,500,000 to £14,000,000. The chancellor of the exchequer to devote his surplus to this object.

An increase in "personnel" to the extent of 4,900 officers and men, to include 500 royal marines. Total strength of navy, 100,050 men.

Surveys to be made for new docks at the Cape and Mauritius.

Keyham Naval Barracks to be extended.

A new naval hospital, of 600 beds, to be built at Chatham.

THE NEW CONSTRUCTIONS.

The new vessels to be constructed are [in 1897]:

Battle ships (improved Renowns)	5
First-class cruisers	4
Second-class cruisers	3
Third-class cruisers	6
Torpedo-boat destroyers	28
Total	46

The five battle ships to be 390 feet long and 74 feet beam, with a displacement in each case of 12,900 tons and a draft of about 25 feet 6 inches. Two will be built by contract and three in the royal dockyards, one at Portsmouth, one at Chatham, and one at Devonport. They will all have tubulous boilers.

The four first-class cruisers will be of the Diadem class; length on water line, 455 feet; beam, 69 feet; displacement, 11,000 tons; speed, 22 knots. One will be built in a royal yard; the rest by contract.

The three second-class cruisers will be of the Talbot class; length, 350 feet; beam, 53 feet 6 inches; displacement, 5,600 tons; speed, 19.5 knots. All these are to be built by contract.

The six third-class cruisers will be of the Pelorus class; length, 300 feet; beam, 36 feet 6 inches; displacement, 2,135 tons; speed, 20 knots. One of these is to be built at a royal dockyard; the remaining five are to be given out to contractors, and, indeed, tenders have already been invited.

Tenders for eight of the destroyers have already been given out, four of them to the Palmer Company, of Yarrow-on-Tyne. They are to be 30-knot craft.

It is interesting, in connection with the present estimates, to compare the expenditure and the number of officers and men voted for each of the past eight years, beginning with the financial year 1889-90, the year of the naval-defense act:

Year.	Total net estimates.	Officers and men.	Increase for the year.
1889-90	£13,685,000	65,405
1890-91	13,786,000	68,800	3,395
1891-92	14,215,100	71,000	2,200
1892-93	14,240,200	74,100	3,100
1893-94	14,240,100	76,700	2,600
1894-95	17,366,100	83,400	6,700
1895-96	18,701,000	88,850	5,450
1896-97	21,822,000	93,750	4,900

THE INCREASE IN PERSONNEL.

There is an increase of 4,900 officers and men provided for in the estimates. They are composed as follows:

Commissioned officers	61
Subordinate officers	30
Warrant officers	8
Seaman-class men	1,900
Artisans	342
Engine-room ratings	2,028
Miscellaneous ratings	131
Royal marines	500

THE INCREASE OF NAVAL ARMAMENTS.

The increase in the amount to be voted for naval armaments compared with last year is £850,000, chiefly composed as follows:

Guns	£369,000
Projectiles and ammunition	348,780
Torpedoes and gun cotton	36,200
Small arms	90,370
Inspections	5,000

During the present financial year—that is, for 1897-98—it is proposed to commence the building of—

Battle ships	4
Third-class cruisers	3
Sloops	2
Twin-screw gunboats	4
Torpedo-boat destroyers	2
Total of new constructions to be undertaken during the year	15

With these vessels, England will have under construction during 1898 this exceedingly large list:

Battle ships	14
First-class cruisers	8
Second-class cruisers	9
Third-class cruisers	10
Sloops	2
Twin-screw gunboats	4
Torpedo-boat destroyers	52
Light-draft steamers for special service	8
Royal yacht	1

Thus the total number of vessels of all classes under construction during the year will be 108. Their aggregate displacement tonnage will be about 380,000 tons, and the aggregate indicated horsepower about 800,000 horsepower. It is anticipated that during the next financial year 66 of these vessels will be completed for service, including 50 torpedo-boat destroyers.

Seven battle ships and eight cruisers have been rearmed with quick-firing guns during the year 1896–97.

The work in the royal dockyards continues to be carried on with zeal and energy. At the naval yards abroad, and especially at Malta, the work has been very heavy, owing to the increase in number and size of the vessels in commission and to the large number of ships recommissioned abroad.

The magnitude of this addition to the English navy may be better understood when it is known that it exceeds in number our entire seagoing ships, even counting in the ships building.

THE NAVY LEAGUE AND THE NAVY ESTIMATES.

The Navy League have issued a memorandum on the navy estimates. They point out that in six weeks' time it will be too late to influence the policy or to strengthen the resolve of the Cabinet, and proceed to make a number of statements, which may be summarized as follows: Great Britain is not only friendless, but the great powers and the United States of America seem to have found a point of agreement in the evolution of a common hatred to this country. With eighty years' start in the race for empire, Britain has peacefully secured those things which other powers would gladly fight to obtain.

The memorandum takes each power separately and shows why, in the opinion of the Navy League, it is hostile to Great Britain. The memorandum goes on to say that the British fleet has lost the standard of strength in battle ships established by Nelson and confirmed by the committee of admirals in 1889. In 1899 we shall be, relatively to France and Russia, in a worse position than we were in 1889, when the naval defense act was passed, while the actual number of battle ships now available is eighteen below the standard of strength considered necessary in 1889, since which date no revised standard has been put forward. Furthermore, English battle ships of 14,000 tons must be compared with French ships of only 11,000 tons, because of the greater distance to be traveled by British men-of-war, and the consequent need of more coal capacity.

To keep the French alone in port we require at least 60 battle ships. We have 52 built and building. In 1794 Great Britain had 145 ships of the line against 77 French, while the year before Trafalgar we had 175 ships of the line against 50 French. To-day 10 of our 52 battle ships are still armed with obsolete muzzle-loading guns. Our deficiency in cruisers is also very marked. Our officers and seamen are insufficient to man the fleet we already possess, and the deficiency of 700 lieutenants and 300 engineers only makes worse the fact that there is no reserve to repair the waste of war. Two years' training are required to make an able seaman; five years a lieutenant. The average age of the men actively responsible for the control, mobilization, and command of our fleets is 58. Nelson died at 47.

Turning now to the strength of the English navy, we see that it comprises:

Armored vessels (52 of these are first-class battle ships)	95
Cruisers	222
Torpedo boats	258

During the maneuvers of the year 1896 there were 105 vessels and 20,500 men took part in the drill, or, in other words, there were more than double the number of men and as many ships as the United States has at its command engaged in this summer drill.

During the last year the strength of the navy was further increased by the addition of 6,300 officers and men, divided as follows:

Officers	121
Seamen	2,400
Engine-room artificers	205
Stokers	2,000
Marines	1,000
Artisans	514
Total added	6,300

Making total force 100,050 officers and men.

This was further increased by the addition of—

Medical officers	34
Pay officers	30
Chaplains and naval instructors	10

Besides the great amount to be spent by England on her navy afloat, she is looking into the future and preparing fortified bases of supply and refit.

At Gibraltar three large docks and means of repair are being built.

At Dover is being constructed a harbor for supplies and rendezvous. Here the works to be executed are most extensive—13,370 feet of breakwater, inclosing 610 acres at low water, and anchorage in over 5 fathoms for 20 first-class battle ships, together with a large number of torpedo boats.

At Hongkong she is also to increase her naval facilities, and the same at Bermuda, and at Kingston, Jamaica.

NAVAL EXPENDITURE ON SEAGOING FORCES.

Sir Courtenay Boyle supplies some interesting particulars in regard to the aggregate naval expenditure on the seagoing forces of various countries. The total for the United Kingdom during 1895–96 was £31,264,877. In addition to this, India and many of the self-governing colonies expended considerable sums. The expenditure of France on its seagoing force was considerably larger than that of any other European State. The aggregate for 1896 was £10,877,279. The Russian Empire comes next, with an expenditure of £6,440,666. Germany follows, with a total of £4,372,068. Italy nearly equals Germany, with an aggregate of £4,129,984.

The expenditure of Spain was £937,742; Austria-Hungary, £1,122,369; Netherlands, £1,313,169, and Portugal, £649,944. The aggregate naval expenditure on the seagoing force of the United States amounted to £6,180,132. Japan ran the United States very close, with an expenditure of £5,945,919. The expenditure of Brazil was £1,053,486 and that of the Argentine Republic £822,435. This sum is stated to be not sufficiently authenticated, and in regard to Chile the expenditure can not be given.

NAVAL EXPENDITURE AND MERCANTILE MARINE.

The Parliamentary return moved for by Sir John Colomb, M. P., and published a few days ago will be found in this issue (Shipping World, Volume XVII, No. 234, November 24, 1897) in a condensed form. It will satisfy all those who seem to think that the money spent on the Royal navy should bear some relationship to our shipping and over-sea commerce. We may state the—

Maritime trade of the Kingdom at	£822,158,000
That of India at	116,451,095
Self-governing colonies	194,195,168
Other colonies	175,000,000
Value of 10,000,000 tons of shipping	100,000,000
Securities carried yearly, say	250,000,000
Interest in freight carried for foreigners	350,000,000
Making a total of	2,007,804,263

Yes, those stupendous figures will justify a fleet more powerful than the combined navy of the world against us. But surely that is a wild way even for jingoism to reach conclusions. If the other nations of the world had no fighting ships, we should require none. It is our duty to keep a steady eye upon the fleets of all the powers, and take care to maintain a swinging superiority over any probable combination against us. Because Japan spends half her revenue in a single year on fighting ships, we are not called upon to do so. From a revenue of £101,974,000 in 1896 we spent £21,264,377 on the navy. Twenty per cent is a large proportion; it is enough. But in this consideration we must be governed, not by the volume of our over-sea commerce, but by what other powers are doing.

JAPAN'S NAVAL AND MILITARY EXPANSION AND FINANCE.

TOKIO, January 10, 1898.

An examination of the budget for 1897–98, just submitted by the Government to the Diet, enables us to form, for the first time, a clear idea of Japan's scheme of military and naval expansion and of the financial expedients devised by her statesmen to meet the greatly increased outlays involved in carrying out the programme. The dates of the inception and completion of this programme are April 1, 1896, and March 31, 1906, respectively.

At the conclusion of the war with China Japan found herself in possession of a fighting fleet of 43 serviceable vessels, independent of 26 torpedo boats, their aggregate displacement being 78,774 tons. Of these, 10, with an aggregate displacement of 15,055 tons, had been captured from China, namely, an armor-clad turret ship (the Chenyuen), of 7,335 tons; 2 steel cruisers, 6 steel gunboats, and 1 wooden gunboat. Prior to the capture of the Chenyuen (now called the Chinyen) Japan did not possess a line-of-battle ship. Her fleet consisted entirely of comparatively small vessels, namely, 4 cruisers of over 4,000 tons each, 4 of over 3,000 tons, 4 of over 2,000, 6 of over 1,500, and the rest gunboats, sloops, etc. She had already determined, however, to acquire two first-class battle ships, and orders had been placed in England for the Fujiyama (12,649 tons) and the Yashima (12,517 tons). Further, there were on the stocks two steel cruisers (2,700 and 2,800 tons) and a steel dispatch vessel (1,800 tons).

It may be said, therefore, that her fleet consisted, or would very soon consist, of 48 ships, having an aggregate displacement of 111,340 tons, and 26 torpedo boats. In the scheme of expansion mapped out by the Government after the war it was decided to make an addition of about a hundred per cent to the strength of the fleet. No official declaration was published as to the exact nature of the ships to be added, but it is tolerably certain that the following list is approximately correct:

	Tons.
4 line-of-battle ships of 15,140 tons each	60,560
4 first-class cruisers of 7,500 tons each	30,000
3 second-class cruisers of 4,850 tons each	14,550
2 third-class cruisers of 3,200 tons each	6,400
3 torpedo gunboats of 1,200 tons each	3,600
1 torpedo depôt ship of 6,750 tons	6,750

Thus the number of ships to be added was 17 and their displacement 121,860 tons. The programme further included 11 torpedo-boat destroyers and 39 torpedo boats. Hence the Japanese navy would consist in 1906 of 65 ships, with an aggregate displacement of 233,100 tons, 11 torpedo catchers, and 115 torpedo boats. The cost of carrying out this scheme was estimated at 213,250,000 yen, approximately. Of course the whole was not to be spent on ships. It was divided thus:

[The value of the yen is about 97 cents.]

	Yen.
Shipbuilding	126,047,973
Armament	66,927,498
Admiralty, torpedo corps, and naval institute buildings	20,328,905

Ten years was the time fixed for consummating the scheme, and the expenditures in the various fiscal years were put, in round numbers, thus (the Japanese fiscal year being from April 1 to March 31):

	Yen.		Yen.
1896–97	22,000,000	1901–2	15,800,000
1897–98	60,000,000	1902–3	5,150,000
1898–99	43,000,000	1903–4	2,400,000
1899–1900	33,800,000	1904–5	590,000
1900–1	20,800,000	1905–6	72,000

To meet the outlay of two hundred and ninety-five millions, required to place the army and navy on their new footing, Japan's chief available asset was the Chinese indemnity—a sum of 345,000,000 yen, in round numbers (omitting interest on deferred installments, since China had the option of avoiding payments of interest by prompt discharge of her whole indebtedness). Plainly, the indemnity, assuming its due receipt, would amply cover the proposed expenditure. But when Japan came to cast up her accounts at the close of the war, she found that a sum of 80,000,000 yen was required to strike a balance. This deficit might have been met by a further issue of the domestic war loan, but the Government preferred to employ the indemnity for the purpose.

Thus reduced, the indemnity would furnish only 265,000,000 yen for purposes of military and naval expansion. Moreover, the indemnity was not yet an asset in hand. A portion of it had been paid, but the remainder could not be counted on with absolute certainty. And there was another point to be considered. Side by side with the above expenditures for nonproductive purposes, the Government desired to adopt measures for promoting the nation's prosperity; as, for example, the establishment of an iron foundry; the expansion of the telephone service; the improvement of State railways; contributions to the capital of industrial and agricultural banks, etc.

The sums required for these objects aggregated 70,500,000 yen, and adding to this 30,000,000 yen (the difference between the remaining portion of the indemnity, namely, 265,000,000 yen, and the outlay on account of military and naval expansion, namely, 295,000,000 yen), it resulted that 100,500,000 yen had to be obtained from some independent source. The Government resolved, therefore, to issue a public-undertakings loan of 135,000,000 yen, spread over seven years, the installments to be 8,250,000 yen in 1896–97, 59,250,000 yen in 1897–98, 41,000,000 yen in 1898–99, 10,250,000 yen in 1898–1900, and so on.

It will be seen from the above that Japan's severest financial strain is to be experienced in the interval between April 1, 1897, and March 31, 1899. Her expenditure on account of military and naval expansion in the fiscal year 1897–98 will aggregate 79,000,000 yen, approximately, and she will have to float a loan of 59,250,000 yen; and her corresponding expenditure during the year 1898–99 will be 61,000,000 yen, when the loan to be floated will be 41,000,000 yen.

The figures here set down are close approximations only. Perplexing details are avoided. As a matter of fact, if China adheres to the programme of payments mapped out in the Shimonoseki treaty and does not avail herself of the option of discharging her indebtedness at an early date, she will have paid by May 8, 1902, not 345,000,000 yen, but 377,000,000. In that case the assets available for Japan's armaments and so forth will be 32,000,000 yen greater than the estimate shown above, and the total funds accruing from the indemnity and the domestic loan will exceed by some 67,000,000 yen the expenditure to be defrayed out of them.

Turning now to the question of a permanent addition to the national revenue for the purpose of supporting the increased expenditure (21,500,000 yen) on account of expanded armaments, we find that four measures have been adopted—namely, the imposition of two new taxes and the increase of two already existing. The new taxes are a registration tax and a trade tax. Without entering into details, it will be sufficient to say that the former is a small impost upon the public registration of all transactions, whether personal, financial, industrial, or commercial; the latter a charge on money-making occupations of every kind. Each tax was originally expected to yield an annual income of about 6,000,000 yen, which estimate experience has thus far shown to be fairly accurate. The two taxes to be increased were the tax on sake (an alcoholic beverage made from rice) and the tax on tobacco. There can be no doubt that in both these taxes the Japanese Government possesses elastic sources of revenue.

THE NAVAL EXPANSION OF JAPAN AND RUSSIA.

Mr. Charles Cramp, of the well-known shipbuilding firm of Philadelphia, has recently been visiting the shipyards of Europe, and he has been surprised at the amount of work which is being done for the Japanese. He comes to the conclusion that unless Russia and the United States awaken to their position in the Pacific, Japan will be able to defy either of them in three years, and both together in less than ten years.

He states that the development of the Japanese navy since the war is not to be described as progress; it is a cyclone, Japan being second only to England in naval activity, being ahead of France, much in advance of Germany, and vastly in the lead of Russia and the United States. Moreover, her ships are all of the best and highest types of naval architecture. During the course of his travels he observed the following ships under construction for the Japanese:

1. Three 14,800-ton battle ships, which are well advanced, at Armstrong's, Thompson's, and the Thames Iron Works, respectively.
2. One battle ship of about 10,000 tons, commencing at Armstrong's.
3. Four first-class armored cruisers of 9,600 tons displacement and 20 knots speed: Two at Armstrong's, one at the Vulcan Works, Stettin, and one at the Forges et Chantiers, France.
4. Two 5,000-ton protected cruisers of about 23 knots speed—one at San Francisco and one at Philadelphia.
5. One protected cruiser of 4,300 tons and about 23 knots, at Armstrong's.
6. Four 30-knot torpedo-boat destroyers, at Yarrow's.
7. Four more of similar type, at Thompson's.
8. Eight 90-ton torpedo boats at the Schichau Works, Elbing.
9. Four more of similar type at the Normand Works, France.
10. Three 3,000-ton protected cruisers of 20 knots, three torpedo gunboats, and a dispatch vessel, at the imperial dockyard, Yokosuka, Japan.
11. A fifth armored cruiser of the type already described (9,600 tons and 20 knots) to be built at Yokosuka.

And he has no hesitation in saying that the vessels Japan is building in shipyards of England, France, and Germany are superior to any vessels those nations are building for themselves, class for class. Discussing the question against whom the naval power of Japan is destined to be turned, he evidently thinks it will be Russia, for there are many points on which differences may arise between that power and Japan.

The Russian navy estimates for next year have been prepared, and they show a total of £8,250,000 as compared with £5,500,000 five years ago, but of that amount a considerable part is to be spent on naval harbors, barracks, arsenals, and workshops. For instance, £1,750,000 is to be spent on the extension of Vladivostok Harbor, and on ice-breaking steamers to test practically the experiment of keeping it open throughout the winter, and other considerable sums are to be spent on other harbors and on dredgers.

About four and one-half millions are to be spent on shipbuilding, or about £700,000 more than in the previous year. Some of the ships are of large size, but neither in speed nor in equipment do they seem to have been kept so nearly up to date as those being built for Japan. As regards the number of ships, Mr. Cramp comes to the conclusion that in the race for naval supremacy in the Pacific Japan is gaining, while Russia and the United States are losing ground.

It is quite evident that after the next struggle which takes place Japan will be in a stronger position to retain the stakes and the spoils of victory than she was on the conclusion of the war with China, and, therefore, that it is probable when the next treaty comes to be signed at Shimonoseki, the representatives of Japan will not be found so pliant as they were on the occasion of the last, when they had to resign some of their original claims on account of the intervention of European diplomacy. The Japanese show plainly that they have more faith in ships and guns than in diplomacy.

THE GERMAN NAVY BILL.

A special edition of the Imperial Gazette gives an account of the navy bill which will be laid before the Imperial Diet on Tuesday, and accompanies its statement with an explanation and defense of the naval policy of the Government. It turns out that the Government will ask the Reichstag, in addition to voting the estimates for the coming financial year, to express its approval of a programme determining the strength to which it is intended to bring the German navy during the seven financial years 1898–1905.

The present declaration of the Government describes the programme of 1873 as inadequate, and at the same time it demonstrates that even that programme has remained unfulfilled in consequence of the neglect of the Reichstag to supply new ships in place of those which had been superannuated or transferred into inferior classes. Thus the programme of 1873 declared that 14 battle ships were necessary, and at present only 7 are available. Two of the remaining battle ships in existence are in need of repairs which will take a year and a half to execute, and 3 are still on the stocks.

But the Government has now come to the conclusion that, in view of the increased naval strength of other nations and also of the extended interests of the German Empire, it is necessary to make provision for 17 battle ships, furnishing 2 squadrons of 8 ships, together with a flagship for the admiral in command.

What the Imperial Diet is asked to do is summarized in the following statement:

The strength in ships of the German navy, exclusive of torpedo boats, training ships, special-service vessels, and gunboats, is to be fixed as follows: There should be ready for service 17 line-of-battle ships, 8 armored ironclads for coast defense, 9 large and 26 small cruisers. Two battle ships and 3 large and 4 small cruisers are to be provided as a reserve force.

A fleet of this strength is regarded by the German Government as adequate for the duties which may devolve upon it, but at the same time the number of ships proposed is considered to be indispensable. At present, if the ships which will be available for service or which will be in construction on April 1, 1898, be included, the German navy consists of 12 battle ships, 8 ironclads for coast defense, 10 large cruisers, and 23 small cruisers. It follows that, in order to realize the Government plans, 7 battle ships and 2 large and 7 small cruisers must be built before the close of the financial year 1904–05.

The scheme of the Government, of course, takes into account the necessity for always being able promptly to substitute new ships for superannuated ones. The period of efficiency for battle ships and ironclads for coast defense is reckoned at twenty-five years, for large cruisers at twenty years, and for small cruisers at fifteen years. The Imperial Diet will be asked to undertake that the votes for renewals shall invariably find a place in the estimates at the proper time.

The personnel asked for under the bill is as follows:

(1) One and one-half times the full complement for ships in foreign waters.
(2) Full complements for the ships belonging to the active home fleet, one-half of the torpedo boats, all training ships, and special service vessels.
(3) Two-thirds of full complement of engine personnel and one-half of full complements of other personnel for the reserve ships of the home fleet and the second half of the torpedo boats.
(4) The necessary complements for land service.
(5) A margin of 5 per cent additional on the whole. The bill sails very close to the wind in its endeavor to meet the objections of the opposition, since it modifies its provisions with regard to these standards by adding that, although the above principles will be authoritative, yet the yearly strength of these different categories of the naval personnel will continue to be determined by the annual estimates.

In preparing the bill the Government has been guided by the following considerations: The naval interests of the German Empire require the presence abroad of 8 large cruisers, 2 in East Asia and 1 for Central and South America; of 10 small cruisers, 3 in East Asia, 3 for Central and South America, 2 for East Africa, and 2 for the South Seas; of 4 gunboats, 2 for East Asia and 2 for West Africa, and of 1 stationary vessel for Constantinople. But in the present year there were available for the purposes enumerated only 2 large and 8 small cruisers, 2 gunboats, and 1 station ship; and in order to provide even this force for foreign service the home fleet had to be deprived of 3 of its best cruisers.

* * * The Government, however, does not withhold from the Imperial Diet and the country an approximate estimate of the amounts of money which will be required for fresh constructions and renewals, as well as a tabular statement of the probable amounts of the yearly estimates for the navy up to the financial year 1904–5. The total expenditure contemplated for the seven years for new constructions, including artillery and torpedo armament, is estimated at 162,000,000 marks. The cost of renewals for the same period will amount to 211,000,000 marks.

The installments not yet voted for ships now in course of construction amount to 63,500,000 marks. When the cost of 3 gunboats and 7 torpedo-boat divisions, together amounting to 46,000,000 marks, as well as the additional expenditure for maintenance and for increase in the personnel, is taken into account, it is estimated that the average annual increase in the ordinary expenditure will be 4,000,000 marks in the coming seven years, as contrasted with 3,000,000 marks average yearly increase during the last seven years.

An important undertaking is given by the Government with regard to the sums to be demanded for fresh constructions. The Imperial Gazette states that at the end of seven years the item of "fresh constructions for the increase of the fleet" will disappear, and all that will subsequently be wanted will be new ships to take the place of superannuated vessels in order to maintain the standard strength of the navy.

Should the bill be carried by the support of the Clericals, that party will assuredly fix upon this declaration and endeavor to bind the Government to it. On the other hand, the improbability that Germany at the end of seven years will be prepared to renounce all idea of attempting anything more than the maintenance of her fleet in the strength which it will then possess may deter many who might otherwise have been inclined to support the bill from accepting it as a final settlement.

The Government, however, endeavors to win over those whom such consideration may cause to hesitate by pointing out that for tactical reasons the standard of 17 battle ships of the line is not only a necessary minimum, but also in a sense an imperative maximum. What is required is the formation of a fighting line, consisting of two tactical units in the form of 2 squadrons of 8 ships each, together with a flagship for the admiral in command.

Of course the necessary attendant cruisers will be required, as well as the indispensable reserves. But the deputies are asked to believe that with the dominating idea of "tactical units" in its mind the Government would never on any account dream of asking them or their successors in a future Reichstag to provide more than the number of ships contemplated in the bill.

As regards cruisers, the official statement points out that, while in England two of these vessels are reckoned necessary for every battle ship and in France the complement of cruisers varies between one and two per battle ship, the German admiralty is going to be content with 6 large and 16 small cruisers to 17 battle ships of the line and 8 ironclads for coast defense.

The following statement is submitted by the Government, the first amount under each heading representing in millions of marks the naval estimates for the current financial year, the succeeding seven amounts representing the contemplated estimates for each financial year from 1898 to 1905:

	1897–98.	1898–99.	1899–1900.	1900–1.	1901–2.	1902–3.	1903–4.	1904–5.
Constructions, including artillery and torpedo armament	49.1	51.4	55.5	64.6	64.3	62.4	56.5	53.6
Other nonrecurrent expenditure	9.0	7.7	8.7	8.7	8.7	8.7	8.7	8.7
Recurrent expenditure	59.4	62.6	67.4	71.4	75.4	79.4	83.4	87.4
Total naval estimates	117.5	121.7	131.6	144.7	148.4	150.5	150.6	149.7

Total amount demanded for the septennate, 997,200,000 marks. [A mark equals 24 cents.]

The official statement concludes as follows:

"While safeguarding the rights of the Imperial Diet and abstaining from a resort to fresh sources of revenue, the Government does not aim at a boundless naval plan, but has in view as its sole object the creation within a definite period of a national navy the strength and efficiency of which are estimated within such limits as to render it adequate for the effective maintenance of the interests of the Empire on the seas."

GERMANY'S ACTIVE NAVAL FORCE—EIGHTY-TWO WAR VESSELS TO BE HELD IN READINESS FOR SERVICE.

BERLIN, March 2, 1898.

The budget committee of the Reichstag to-day adopted, in accordance with the Government proposals, section 1, paragraph 1, of the naval bill, fixing the number of ships to be held in readiness for service as follows: A flagship, 18 battle ships, 12 large cruisers, 30 small cruisers, 8 coast-defense ironclads, and 13 gunboats, besides torpedo boats, school ships, and small gunboats.

FRANCE.

Budget of the navy.

According to Mr. Kerjégu, reporter of the budget, the propositions of the budget committee are to the effect of opening for the navy department credits amounting to 285,534,427 francs, being an increase over the credits for 1897 of 20,261,404 francs.

This considerable increase of expense is to be applied almost exclusively to those branches whose mission it is to create the fleet and develop its efficiency and strength.

The appropriation for new constructions for 1897 was 85,067,543 francs; for 1898 it will be 102,186,294 francs. The credits necessary for maintenance and repairs for 1897 were 26,205,942 francs; for 1898 they will be 30,570,959 francs. Finally, the sum to be devoted to the organization of points of refitting for the fleet in Corsica and Africa are not inferior to the amount for last year, and for the navy alone they will amount to 1,489,000 francs. [A franc equals 19 cents.]

Nine years are necessary for the programme of shipbuilding now in course of execution, and the credits up to 1905 on this head will be 721,815,000 francs, being an annual average of about 90,000,000 francs, but in 1901 the annual sum will become 120,000,000. The average eight years' outlay will not, however, be more than 2,000,000 francs above that of the six previous years. Refitting of ships in 1898, 1899, and 1900 will cost 20,381,000 francs. A million will be expended at Bizerta for making it a naval station, and considerable works will also be undertaken next year in Corsica, Algeria, and Dakar, making altogether 1,489,000 francs. In 1898 the amount allotted for shipbuilding will be 102,000,000 francs, and for repairs 30,000,000 francs.

The northern squadron will be kept up to its full strength for eight months instead of six, and the Mediterranean reserve division will be kept complete by having ships corresponding to every class in the active squadron. The armament and trial trips of several ships in advance of the estimated date will entail supplementary outlay. M. de Kerjégu maintains that the number of ships is too small, that some are too slow, or of too small a range, and that they are of such different types that scarcely any two are alike.

The cost, moreover, is too great and the period of construction too long. In spite of the reduction shown in the cost of the battle ships Charles Martel, Charlemagne, and Gaulois, the cost is 20 or 25 per cent greater than in England. France, moreover, lacks cruisers. While England has 195 and is building 42, France has 46 and is building 16. The speed, moreover, ought to be increased.

RUSSIA.

The budget of 1897–98 amounts to 68,055,420 rubles ($52,538,784) for ordinary expenses, plus 6,000,000 rubles ($4,632,000) incidental expenses for new constructions, plus 15,500,000 rubles ($11,966,000) for Vladivostok, and contains the following principal items:

New military port.—Russia is undertaking the construction of a large military port, to be called "Ekaterinograd," on the coast of Lapland, between the White Sea and the Norwegian border. Work has already been commenced on a railway connecting it with St. Petersburg. This port is of great importance to the political world, since it indicates that Russia is no longer satisfied with seeing her squadron imprisoned in the ice of the Baltic, for the new port will be free from ice, owing to the influence of the Gulf Stream.

Russia is also building two ice-breaking ships, the invention of Admiral Makaroff. These are to open a canal for the purpose of allowing her ships to pass from Kronstadt to the White Sea by winter.

The Baltic and Black Sea Canal.—The great canal, the total length of which will be nearly 1,000 miles, and which is to connect the Baltic with the Black Sea, is to be commenced next spring, the surveys for it being in an advanced state. The new waterway is to be 217 feet wide at the ordinary water level, and 117 feet at the bottom. Its depth being 28½ feet, the largest war vessels will be able to pass through it. The canal commences at Riga, and it will follow the course of the river Dūna as far as Dūnaburg. Here the great excavations will begin which will connect the canal with Lepel, on the Beresina. That river will be utilized as far as its junction with the Dnieper, when the latter will be followed to its mouth, near Cherson.

Of the whole length of the canal, 875 miles will be canalized rivers, leaving only 125 miles for the excavator. The canal will have eighteen ports—at Riga, Jakobstadt, Dünaburg, Lepel, Borissov, Robruisk, Kieff, Pergaslav, Kuneff, Cherkassy, Krementshug, Verchnedieprovsk, Yekaterinoslav, Alexandrovsk, Nikopol, Berislavi, Aleshki, and Cherson. The enlargement of the two terminal ports of Riga and Cherson, on the Baltic and Black Seas, respectively, is at the present time being actively proceeded with.

The canal is to be substantially constructed so as to allow vessels to proceed at a uniform speed of 6 knots. At that speed it will take one hundred and forty-four hours to make the whole journey. The canal is to be lighted by electricity, to avoid stoppages at night. Its total cost is estimated at £20,000,000, and the work of construction will probably take four years.

CHINA.

Three arsenals are about to be constructed: The first at Kianchan in the north, the second at Namkivan, and the third at Mirsbay, near Hongkong. Plans are also being prepared for 2 battle ships of 12,000 tons each, 2 protected cruisers, 2 gunboats, and 6 torpedo-boat catchers, contracts for which will be given out shortly.

SPAIN.

Under construction, 3 battle ships, 4 armored cruisers, 4 protected cruisers, 4 gunboats, 4 torpedo boats.

In 1880 Germany was not a strong naval power. During that year, however, reconstruction of the war fleet was favorably considered and liberal appropriations were made. Note the consequence: Enormous increase of commerce, tremendous expansion of range of commercial activity, and above all the strengthening of love and pride in the hearts of the Germans for the Fatherland. Germany's example can well be followed by us.

The New York Journal of Commerce, commenting upon our phenomenal foreign commerce of 1897, published the following table:

The years next (to 1897) in order of magnitude were 1891, 1892, 1896, and 1890, as will be seen from the subjoined table. The exports were $94,000,000 above the highest previous record, which was in 1896, and $129,000,000 above the next highest year, 1891. The imports were $61,000,000 more than in 1896, but were much below those of 1895, 1892, 1891, and 1890, and compared with ten years ago they show an increase of only $17,000,000.

For the four years succeeding 1893 the imports have averaged only 75 per cent of the amount of the exports, while for the three normal years 1887, 1888, and 1889 the imports and exports, within a fraction, evenly offset each other. For the four later years combined the exports exceeded the imports by $353,000,000. In this reckoning no account is taken of the gold movement; nor yet of the imports or exports of silver, which, since 1893, have added about $35,000,000 net per year to the value of the exports. We append a statement of the imports and exports of merchandise for each of the last eleven calendar years:

Calendar year.	Exports.	Imports.	Total trade.
1897	$1,099,000,000	$742,000,000	$1,841,000,000
1896	1,005,000,000	681,000,000	1,686,000,000
1895	824,000,000	801,000,000	1,625,000,000
1894	825,000,000	676,000,000	1,501,000,000
1893	876,000,000	776,000,000	1,652,000,000
1892	938,000,000	841,000,000	1,779,000,000
1891	970,000,000	828,000,000	1,798,000,000
1890	857,000,000	823,000,000	1,680,000,000
1889	827,000,000	770,000,000	1,597,000,000
1888	692,000,000	725,000,000	1,417,000,000
1887	715,000,000	709,000,000	1,424,000,000

Comparing the above figures for the calendar year 1897 with those of fiscal years (ending June 30), the periods for which compilations are usually made, it is found that—

"The imports of last year were exceeded by the imports of the fiscal years 1889 to 1893, 1896, and 1897. The domestic exports and the total of domestic and foreign exports last year were never before equaled in either a fiscal or a calendar year. The domestic exports, $1,099,000,000, have been most nearly approached in the fiscal years 1897 and 1892.

"The domestic exports exceeded $900,000,000 in no fiscal year except 1892 and 1897, when they exceeded a billion dollars. They were between eight and nine hundred million dollars in 1880, 1881, 1883, 1890 to 1894, and 1896 and 1897. The excess of exports of merchandise over imports, $356,000,000, is far beyond any fiscal year, the excesses being over two hundred millions only in the years 1878, 1879, 1881, 1892, 1894, and 1897. The total volume of foreign trade, $1,841,760,374, was exceeded by sixteen millions in 1892. The aggregate has exceeded $1,700,000,000 in only two other years, 1891 and 1892."

Considering the bad times throughout the world during the past ten years, I can only think that history is repeating itself as far as our commerce and naval development are concerned.

About the year 1885 we began the reconstruction of our Navy, appropriating as follows:

Total amounts authorized for increase of the Navy since 1885, including armor, armament, rebuilding old monitors, etc.

Year.	Amount.	Year.	Amount.
1885	$1,895,000	1892	9,400,000
1886	3,500,000	1893	7,125,000
1887	10,048,362	1894	9,955,000
1888	5,760,000	1895	13,304,000
1889	6,605,000	1896	11,500,000
1890	8,120,000
1891	4,400,000	Total	*91,612,362

* This figure represents the total expenditure during the twelve years for rebuilding the Navy.

Comparing our commerce of last year (1897) with 1887 we find that our exports have increased $384,000,000, while our imports have increased only $33,000,000, thus showing that our exporters are satisfied that Congress intends at last to provide a naval force of sufficient strength to protect their rights.

I desire to refer to the report of the Secretary of the Navy for our present condition:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., November 15, 1897.

To the President:

The present effective fighting force of the Navy consists of 4 battle ships of the first class, 2 battle ships of the second class, 2 armored cruisers, 16 cruisers, 15 gunboats, 6 double-turreted monitors, 1 ram, 1 dynamite gunboat, 1 dispatch boat, 1 transport steamer, and 5 torpedo boats. There are under construction 5 battle ships of the first class, 18 torpedo boats, and 1 submarine boat.

There are 64 other naval vessels, including those used as training, receiving, and naval-reserve ships, tugs, disused single-turreted monitors, and some unserviceable craft.

There is, further, the auxiliary fleet. This consists, first, of more than 30 subsidized steamers which comply with the requirements of the postal act of March 3, 1891, with regard to their adaptability to naval service, and to an armament of main and secondary batteries; second, of a very much greater number of large merchant-marine steamers, which can be availed of at any time of need.

These auxiliaries, ranging from 2,000 to 12,000 tons, will, if occasion require, form a powerful fleet of ocean cruisers, capable of swift and formidable attack upon an enemy's commerce. Their great coal capacity will also enable them to remain a long time at sea in search of the whereabouts of hostile vessels.

The country is to be congratulated upon the results obtained in the rebuilding of the Navy. While its ships are not as many—and it is not necessary they should be—as those of some other great powers, they are, class for class, in power, speed, workmanship, and offensive and defensive qualities, the equal of vessels built anywhere else in the world.

Since the last annual report of the Secretary of the Navy was submitted the following vessels have been conditionally or finally accepted, and are now a part of the effective force of the Navy:

*The probable date of final completion of the Illinois, Alabama, and Wisconsin is based on the supposition that armor will be provided in due season.

The vessels under construction should be completed during the coming year, except the 5 battle ships, which will probably not be ready for service before the latter part of 1899. Of the latter, the Kearsarge and Kentucky are nearly half completed. About three-quarters of their armor has been delivered, a part of which has been secured in place on the ships. The other 3, the Alabama, Illinois, and Wisconsin, were begun subsequent to the last annual report. With the exception of a small amount of diagonal casemate armor, which the ship contractors have agreed to furnish at the price fixed by law, it will be necessary to preliminarily accept them without armor, in accordance with the terms of the contract for their construction.

The Illustrated American of January 8, 1898, says:

How like to China in some things we are after all!

Germany seizes one of China's seaports, and China hardly makes a protesting sound.

She keeps silent because she can not resist, and it seems more dignified to acquiesce with seeming immobility than to set up a ridiculously feeble squeak, like a trapped mouse.

Yet China is the most multitudinous nation on earth. She has riches and resources untold. Her men with training might make very fair soldiers.

Without feeling the expense she could have fortified every port and bought a fleet equal to the entire naval strength of Germany, and infinitely more formidable, because so close to the base of supplies and repair.

But China has no military patriotism. Her Government is too sleepy to comprehend the danger or too senile to meet it.

We have plenty of patriotism, but do we make a much better showing materially?

Japan's great navy could wipe our Pacific squadron from the seas and shell San Francisco before our North Atlantic squadron could double Cape Horn.

A concentration of the superior German navy could overwhelm our Atlantic fleet by sheer force of numbers, while German transports could land at any one of a dozen of our smaller Atlantic ports a disciplined army of enormous size.

A military coalition of European powers against us could exact its own terms in a single fortnight from nearly all our seacoast cities, if not from the nation itself.

We are the best fighters in the world, but what have we to fight with? We have illimitable resource for a prolonged war; but modern wars are generally finished in a few weeks.

We have a gallant little fleet, but we have not a dry dock on the Atlantic coast large enough to repair a battle ship.

In the old days of wooden navies a victorious ship could mend her timbers and masts and be ready to fight again in twenty-four hours; but the modern battle ship is so complicated and delicate that, even if triumphant in a duel, her wounds would drive her home for long repairs.

We have a few coast defenses, but they are ridiculously inadequate.

The statesman mind of Tilden urged on the country the complete fortification of our coasts, but none heeded him.

If any European power, capable of engaging our little fleet, should at the same time throw even 100,000 trained soldiers upon our shores, could we successfully face such an army in a fortnight?

It is a crime against the continuance of peace for Congress to keep us so defenseless. We have trusted to the mutual jealousies of the foreign powers for the prevention of any attack upon us. We have trusted to our luck.

But can we expect to escape forever? Like England, are we not hated more deeply each year? Dislike or hate is the price that power or promise of continued greatness must pay among nations as among individuals.

Nothing under the canopy but a powerful navy, adequate coast defenses, and a modern army able to be mobilized and to act together in one week can be safely banked on to discourage a foreign attack.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

It is a fundamental truth warranted by history that the control of the seas, and especially along the great lines drawn by national interest or national commerce, is the chief among the merely national elements in the power and prosperity of nations. It is so because the sea is the world's great medium of circulation.

Mr. Chairman, we have seen the great naval preparations being made by all the nations of the Old World, including Japan, and does it not seem as though they were looking ahead to the signs of the times? What are they?

China apparently to be partitioned.

Nicaragua Canal surely to be built.

Increasing jealousy among all nations of each other.

Territorial extension and expansion.

Have we not firmly declared for the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine?

Have we not declared that we will protect our trade treaties against all assaults?

Have we not affirmed that we propose, when it is built, to build the Nicaragua Canal?

Above all else, is not every nation upon earth, excepting Russia, jealous of us, envious of our great commercial success? Every nation must expect rivals in the race for commercial supremacy. When that nation, however, wins the laurel of greatest success, rivalry ceases, and jealousy and envy take its place, and sooner or later, upon some pretext or other, that nation will be drawn into a quarrel with some one or several of its vanquished competitors. This is our condition to-day.

I have frequently heard it said on the floor of this House that we have no colonies. Literally speaking, true, but figuratively speaking, false, for the creations of American brains and the kindness of mother earth have made the markets of the world your colonies of commerce. Take the reports of our consuls and you will see that the American electric light, motor, telephone, telegraph, sewing machine, locomotive, printing press, harvesting machines, armor plate, breadstuffs, and scores of other articles are slowly but surely capturing the foreign markets.

With this great success has now come the jealousy and envy of which I spoke. In our national infancy and youth we cared naught about the enmity of any power because we were prepared to resist all attacks; but now in our manhood are we prepared, and can we acquit ourselves with honor if foreign complications arise, if we do not keep pace with the naval developments of other powers? I think not. Take, if you please, the present complications in China. The honor of opening China to the world belongs to the United States. What are we going to do if our favorable trade treaties with that nation are interfered with and our rapidly growing commerce is destroyed?

Simply enter a more or less vigorous diplomatic protest, for what else can we do? We have not sufficient naval strength to compel heed to our protest, and our armed hand is not heavy enough to cause the least worriment to the powers involved in the Chinese problem. Oh, would that we had a powerful fleet, so that we might say, with the division of China, we have nothing to do, but we do propose to protect to the extent of our entire resources our trade rights and commercial treaties with that nation. This is what would have been done prior to 1860. Will we prepare so that it may be done now?

NICARAGUA CANAL.

Ere Father Time swings his scythe through many more years all writers and statesmen believe the Nicaragua Canal will be built, and then, through our treaty with Nicaragua, what becomes our duty?

The Dickinson-Ayron treaty, ratified June 20, 1868, says:

The United States hereby agree to extend their protection to all such routes of communication as aforesaid, and to guarantee the neutrality and innocent use of the same.

It also makes provision for United States protection for persons and property along the route if for any reason Nicaragua does not furnish that protection. This brings us to the Monroe doctrine.

England owns and has strongly fortified Jamaica, and between Jamaica and Haiti is the best and shortest channel leading to and from the Nicaragua Canal; so, with Haiti in the possession of any continental power and Jamaica in possession of England, a major part of the commerce to and from the canal would have to pass almost under the guns of these powers.

What a magnificent base of supplies for any continental fleet, merchant or war, Haiti would be. I might add another source of trouble with a foreign power might easily arise through the continued growth and development of trade jealousy on the part of her people toward us. So it seems to me that we should prepare for war upon the sea in proportion to the preparation being made by most of the continental powers.

We may never have war with any power, but this is not the millennium. The era of eternal peace has not arrived, would to heaven it had, for no one can possibly abhor the awful horrors of war more than I do; no one detests jingoism more than I.

We have, however, said most emphatically to the world that some of the doctrines of our fathers we propose to defend at all times. We must live up to that declaration or else lose our place forever as one of the great powers. We have, indeed, set a high standard of patriotism for the conduction of affairs on the Western Hemisphere. If we believe in the Monroe doctrine, we must be ready and thoroughly prepared to defend it against any nation or coalition of nations attempting to destroy any of its tenets.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the saying, "The pen is mightier than the sword," has long since been weighed in the balance and found wanting, for the pen of diplomacy, of statecraft, aye, of government itself, becomes woefully weak unless fortified and supported by the strong sword arm of a united, patriotic, and country-loving people who hold dear the truths established by their ancestors. You say the Monroe doctrine is an ideal, and if we live up to its ideas, its teachings, we will have occasional friction with some foreign power. True, it is an ideal, and also true that it may cause friction. What if it does?

I contend, sir, that a nation must be ever ready to defend, ever ready to fight for a principle grown sacred by years of open acknowledgment. We have openly declared that the truths of this doctrine are just, wise, and honorable. The peace-at-any-price people say, "Away with the Monroe doctrine!" while patriots reply, "We will relegate to the realm of everlasting contempt nonbelievers in the doctrine established by Monroe, believed in by Lincoln, strengthened by Grant, and rejuvenated by Cleveland." [Applause.]

Ah, Mr. Chairman, this is not jingoism; this is the true patriotism, and patriotism has ever been esteemed honorable, ever considered essential to the strength and welfare of a nation. The greatest nations of the world's history, ancient and modern, have been those that held patriotism in the highest regard.

When an English naval officer plants the English flag upon newly-discovered territory and amid the roar of heavy guns declares it to be English soil, the breeze takes up the "boom" of the cannon and wafts it to far-distant England. Soon comes back the echo with "We will defend the newly acquired territory to the extent of our resources. God save the Queen!"

Only a few days ago in our own land we had a magnificent display of patriotism. How did our people receive the action of this House on Tuesday, March 8? Ah, when the electrical messenger told the people of Maine what had been done here, they sent him forward on his journey with "Say to the people of the Vineyard State, 'My country;'" the people of California replied, "Go on to the people of Flowerland and say to them, 'My country, 'tis of thee;'" the Floridians sent him on to the far-distant Pacific with "My country, 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty," and the Washingtonians replied, "Thy name I love," while the American people, taking up the words, sang in a mighty, united chorus:

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Thy name I love!

Patriotism is indeed a noble passion. May it never weaken in the hearts of the American people. [Applause.]

Through illiberal laws and lack of naval protection the American merchant marine has almost faded away; but increase the Navy, provide adequate protection, and despite these unjust laws American ingenuity will find a way to make the American flag once again supreme upon the seas. [Applause.]

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FOX].

Mr. FOX. Mr. Chairman, in considering a great appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I trust it is not improper to submit some remarks on the condition of the masses who have to pay this and all other appropriations. On January 20, page 807 of the RECORD, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee said:

I think it is a serious mistake for the Representatives of the South who desire to improve their economic conditions to forget that there can be no progress except as it is based on an improvement in the standard of living and an improvement in the earnings of the masses.

He also said:

The laws which bind the people of this country tend to the gradual increase of the earnings of the masses upon which prosperity depends.

There is no greater economic truth, there is no more profound political wisdom, than the statement that all prosperity must be based on the uplifting of the masses, who produce all the wealth of the country. This is the very essence of genuine Democracy as taught by Jefferson. Democratic policies and the principles enunciated in the Chicago platform, the greatest platform, embodying more political wisdom than any other platform ever promulgated, are all based on the doctrine enunciated by the gentleman from Maine.

I deny, however, that Southern Representatives forget this great principle. I assert that they as much as any other Representatives on this floor strictly adhere to it. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the other day said:

I have never yet seen the Constitution stand in the way of any Representative when it was his interest to get something for his people.

I say this is not true of Southern Representatives. They have at all times stood here on this floor and pleaded for a strict observance of the Constitution as the only guarantee of the rights of the masses; and it was a Southern Representative, the distinguished and honored leader of the minority here, who was pleading for the Constitution when the gentleman from Illinois ridiculed it and made the statement which I have quoted.

I deny that the laws of this country as they exist to-day tend to the gradual increase of the earnings of the masses. I charge the fact to be that under the leadership of the gentleman from Maine laws have been enacted that utterly ignore the great principle referred to; and instead of tending to bring about a gradual increase of the earnings of the masses, tend to the impoverishment of the masses and the enrichment of the few. If there should be a gradual increase of the earnings of the masses, there is bound to be a decrease in the accumulation of wealth by the few, and we would soon have the ideal state of things advocated by Thomas Jefferson when he said:

Let us found a government where there shall be no extremely rich men and no abjectly poor ones; let us found a government upon the intelligence of the people and the equitable distribution of property.

Instead of this, the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few has been progressing within the past thirty years, until $3,000,000,000 of property have been taken by taxation from the consumers of the country and given to the capitalists, and to-day 1 per cent of the families of the country hold more wealth than the remaining 99 per cent.

It is said that within sixteenth months, from October 6, 1896, to January 29, 1898, the deposits in the New York banks have increased from $372,000,000 to $722,000,000, and the holdings of legal-tender money from $109,000,000 to $316,000,000, and that they now hold more than one-eighth of all the money in the country outside of the United States Treasury. Accepting the doctrine of the gentleman from Maine, that prosperity depends upon the gradual increase of the earnings of the masses, on what does he predicate his assertion that there is general prosperity in the country when all the wealth of the country and all the earnings of the masses are being rapidly accumulated in the coffers of a few bankers as the deposits of great corporations and a few men of wealth, especially when everybody knows that these vast sums of money, so great that the common mind can have no comprehension of their magnitude, are themselves the earnings of the masses, of which they have been robbed by the most iniquitous system of taxation that ever disgraced a civilized nation, and that the moneyed power has become so great, its influence in controlling elections and shaping legislation so irresistible, that there is not a law on the statute books to-day relating to the currency of the country or to taxation that is not shaped with direct reference to the policy of making the rich richer and the poor poorer?

The fact is that the Republican party, notwithstanding the conservative and patriotic mass of the people have done everything to avoid it, has raised the issue of capital against labor, money against blood, luxury against toil, greed against patriotism, robbery against honor. [Applause.] Sentiments have been expressed here and policies advocated by gentlemen distinguished for their high personal character which show a depravity in political conscience and a want of regard for the rights of property and of individuals that is alarming.

On the 31st of January, in discussing the Teller resolution providing for the payment of United States bonds at the option of the Government in silver, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], referring to the honor of the nation, the highest evidence of which and the noblest manifestations of which, as he seems to think, are the payment of the bonds in gold when demanded, said:

It is more sacred than the traditions and heroisms of our history; more sacred than the memories of our heroes; more sacred than the graves of our dead.

And the RECORD shows that there was loud applause on the Republican side.

This is a clear, frank, and distinct statement of the attitude of the Republican party. The bondholders, instead of the negroes, are now the wards of the nation, and their right to demand gold is "more sacred than the memories of our heroes; more sacred than the graves of our dead," although it is confessed that under the contract they can be paid in silver, although it requires all the earnings of the masses to pay them, although no employee of the Government is paid in gold, and although no citizen can collect a private debt in gold unless the contract provides that it shall be paid in gold.

From the statements of representatives of capital on this floor one would think there was no patriotism or sense of national honor except with the bondholders. Suppose in case of war volunteers should be called for, to spill money into the Treasury instead of to spill blood on the battlefield, how many dollars would be obtained? Suppose instead of conscripting men there should be a confiscation of money, where would be the patriotism of the bondholders?

The shedding of blood in defense of the country is patriotism, the lending of money at a high rate of interest and the exacting in payment of two dollars for one is greater patriotism. The trouble is the blood shedders never have any money to lend and the money lenders never shed any blood, and the shedders of blood have to pay the interest. And in the issue raised of money against blood, money has much the best of it. [Applause.]

And now a word about my own section and the agricultural classes whom I have the honor to represent. And in speaking of them and their industrial condition I shall not be intimidated by the agents and representatives of corporations on this floor who cry out "calamity howlers" when anyone undertakes to show the true condition of the masses, whose prosperity is based on "an improvement of their standard of living and an increase of earnings."

I once heard a fable illustrating the point. A wolf had fastened its fangs in the throat of a lamb, and when the lamb began to struggle and bleat, the wolf said: "Lie still, you infernal calamity howler! I am not going to do anything but suck your blood." Another thing: I wish to express the hope that I will not subject my State to be insulted as it was the other day by the gentleman from Madisonville, Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC], who, because I told some unpalatable truths about the corporations which he represents controlling elections, took a cowardly advantage of his seat on this floor to utter a base slander against the people of Mississippi, notwithstanding he had enjoyed their generous hospitality, which had been extended to him on the idea that he was a gentleman, and then he threatened that railroad companies would be revenged on me because I had told the truth.

The gentleman also tried to excite the prejudices of railroad employees against me by pretending that I said that they had no comprehension of political principles, when the gentleman knows, if he has any comprehension of English grammar or of the English language, that I said nothing of the kind.

But I want to call the attention of the House, and of the country especially, to the cotton producers of the South, who constitute a large per cent of the masses whose prosperity, as the gentleman from Maine says, depends on a gradual increase of their earnings.

The gentleman from Maine, in the speech to which I have already referred, made the distinct admission that as 70 per cent of the cotton production of the world is in the United States, the production of cotton and of cotton goods can not be protected or benefited by a protective tariff. He also said substantially that the manufacture of cotton goods in New England was being ruined by competition from Southern mills, because in the South factory hands work eleven hours a day, while in New England they are allowed to work only ten hours a day.

Everybody who has the slightest knowledge of the facts knows that this is not true, and that the great advantages that the manufacturer in the South has over the New England manufacturer are due to other causes which have already been stated on this floor. But what I wish to call attention to is the astounding and alarming threat of the gentleman from Maine, since he has discovered that his pet theory of a protective tariff is a failure, to protect New England manufacturers against Southern competition by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States so as to prevent Southern factory hands from working longer than New England factory hands; and the gentleman from Maine professes to base his advocacy of this measure on a love for humanity and a desire to elevate the standard of living among the laborers of the South.

Let me say to the gentleman that if it is a sincere sympathy with human toil that is moving him, all over the great agricultural regions of the South and West men, women, and children on the farms are working fifteen hours a day for a bare existence. Many of these people have few of the comforts of life and none of its luxuries. The gentleman from Maine talks about the low price of cotton being caused by overproduction. Thousands of these people card, spin, and weave every yard of cloth they wear because they have no money with which to buy manufactured goods, for the reason that 5 cents per pound for cotton does not pay the cost of production. And the fall of the price of cotton to 5 cents is not caused by the fact that more cotton is produced than can be consumed.

The truth is that many people are unable to buy the cotton goods they really need because cotton has fallen to 5 cents. It is valuable to the country that the gentleman from Maine has distinctly admitted that so far as the cotton industry is concerned a protective tariff is an unjust tax without any benefit. An equally important admission the gentleman has made is that the ruin of cotton manufacturers in New England is caused in a great measure by the rapid decline in the price of cotton. He has at last learned, and I hope from his candid statement the country will learn, that after all the prosperity of all industries depends largely upon the prosperity of the farmers. This being true, it is important to inquire what has caused the want of prosperity among this class of our people.

Why is there not a gradual increase in the earnings of the agricultural classes, who form 30 per cent of the masses? In the first place, a protective tariff brings no benefit to them, but compels them to pay an enormous tax, not only to defray the expenses of the Government, but to build up other industries. The farmer with a family whose home is not worth over $2,000 pays as much tax to the General Government as Rockefeller, who is reputed to be worth over $100,000,000—a man who is worth more than the value of all the farms, including lands, fences, and buildings, in either of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Delaware, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Washington, or Oregon.

The revenues of the Government are raised, not by a tax on what you have, but on what you do not have and what you are obliged to buy. There can never be prosperity in this country until this monstrous system of taxation is abolished and the revenues of the Government are raised by a tax on property and not on toil. There is not a civilized nation on earth, except the United States, that has not an income tax.

There never was a political economist of any repute, from Adam Smith to this time, who has not advocated an income tax; and we want to warn the capitalists of the country that if they do not cease their anarchistic policy of robbing the toilers of the country of their earnings, and come forward like honest men and pay their share of the taxes, they may precipitate a conflict that will make them wish they had never been born.

In the next place, I wish to call attention to the fact that it is now the fixed policy of the Republican party "to fix more firmly," to use the language of Secretary Gage, the gold standard. That is to say, that gold shall be the only money of the country, and all other kinds and forms of currency must be based on and redeemed in gold.

The absurdity of this proposition is emphasized by the fact that all the gold in the country would not more than pay the expenses of the Government for one year, that the Government does not collect one single cent of its revenues in gold, and if its policy to pay all its obligations in gold when demanded is to be continued, there is no possible way to obtain it except to buy it by the issuance of bonds, and thus perpetuate the power of bondholders to control the administration of Government and dictate its financial policy.

There is absolutely no gold whatever in circulation in the country. "Currency" literally means to run around. The only running around that gold ever does is to run into the coffers of the banks. We want a currency that will call at the hovel of the workingman as well as at the palace of the rich. We want a currency that will call on the laborer who works in the field, factory, and mine as well as on the banker and bondholder. In this connection I wish to call your attention to some remarkable utterances of a remarkable man.

Secretary Gage, instead of going through the country learning the wants of the masses and catching his inspiration from them, so as to devise a financial policy that would "increase their earnings and improve their standard of living," has been junketing over the country, being banqueted by bankers and imbibing their financial views as well as their wines.

On the 18th of March, at a banquet given by the Chamber of Commerce at Cleveland, Mr. Gage said:

> A change in the money, whether that change be to one of higher or lower commercial value than that previously in use, would cause a universal derangement in prices and a perfect dislocation in the relation of things to each other.

The next day, at a banquet given in his honor by the Chamber of Commerce at Pittsburg, he said:

> Whatever disturbs general faiths and confidences unsettles commerce and disturbs industry. Unhappily, the disturbing influences are numerous, and by their interposition from time to time suffering and ruin results. Wars and fears of wars, crop failures, widespread industrial revolts, shocks arising from the betrayal of great fiduciary duties, these are some of the adverse influences. But none of these, nor several of them associated, are as harmful as the doubts and fears which arise from the apprehension of a radical change in the money standard, to which all commodities and all credits stand finally related.

If the distinguished Secretary and his coconspirators had remembered these great truths in 1873 and been guided by them, there would to-day be unexampled prosperity among all classes in this country. There was then a change in the money from a lower to a higher commercial value, and it did cause a universal derangement in prices and a perfect dislocation in the relations of things to each other.

The radical change from the double standard of both gold and silver to the single gold standard, and the consequent fall of prices, which has continued up to this day to such an extent that in spite of the tariff it has brought about the ruin of even the New England cotton industry, has, to use the language of Mr. Gage, been more harmful and caused more suffering and ruin than wars, crop failures, widespread industrial revolt, and betrayal of great fiduciary duties. And yet the Secretary invokes these great principles to fix more firmly the gold standard upon the country.

Having brought about the concentration of all the wealth of the country in the coffers of a few by a disregard and violation of these principles, he proposes now by invoking them to perpetuate the ruin he has wrought and fix more firmly the gold standard upon the country. He proclaims now, as financial wisdom, what he heretofore denounced as financial heresy. We want to return to the money of the Constitution, the free coinage of gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 and legal-tender notes issued by the Government. We want a financial system that will foster, not the accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few, but the general distribution of wealth among the masses, so that, in the language of the gentleman from Maine, the prosperity of the masses may be promoted by an improvement in the standard of living and an improvement in their earnings.

Gentlemen, you can not satisfy the country by calling attention to the prosperity of a favored few. The good of the country will not be promoted except by a general prosperity of all. It is vicious legislation to promote the prosperity of certain classes at the expense of other classes. It is no function of government to help one class of people to make a living or to get rich by taxing the masses. I want to deny that there is prejudice among the masses in this country against capital.

Capital and combinations of capital are absolutely necessary to carry on the great industries of this country, and the people are perfectly willing to encourage capital in these industries and are perfectly willing for capital to realize a legitimate profit. But we want to warn you that you must keep your hands off the United States Treasury, which is filled by the sweat and toil of the laboring classes alone of the country. We want to warn you that this Government must be administered by the people and for the people.

The masses all over this country are not anarchists, are not repudiators, and ask for nothing but equality of opportunity, so that every man may reap the rewards of his own toil. This is their inalienable right, to which they are entitled by every law of God, morality, and justice. This right they are determined must be respected; and if the time ever comes, which may God forbid, that there must be an irrepressible conflict between capital and labor, it will not be precipitated by the toiling masses, who, now as ever, are willing to shed their lifeblood and spend their little fortunes in the service of their country, which they love so well. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Low].

Mr. LOW. Mr. Chairman, one of the most gratifying scenes I have ever witnessed in any assemblage was the grand exhibition on the floor of this Chamber when this House, without one dissenting voice, passed the $50,000,000 appropriation bill for the purpose of upholding the honor and integrity of our country.

Mr. Chairman, scientists have said that reason returns to the human mind just before the spirit leaves the body. When peace seemed ready to leave our land (after a long period of tranquillity) reason returned to Congress, and, to atone for Congresses' shortcomings, eagerly voted to pass this emergency appropriation. The passage of that $50,000,000 appropriation bill was a monumental evidence, true and significant, that Congresses, by neglecting our Navy, had forgotten their lessons in the history of the United States.

Think of it. A country like ours, with its inexhaustible iron and coal mines, its shores on the Atlantic and the Pacific dotted with matchless shipbuilding plants, with the best labor in the world at their command, is obliged, when a war cloud appears, to enter foreign markets, seeking war ships to strengthen its Navy. Who will dare say that there has not been an unpardonable neglect somewhere?

The feeble condition of the nation's combative forces and its attributive causes will amply justify the tenor of my proposed remarks on the present appropriation bill.

Of all the yearly appropriation bills that come up before Congress, the naval bill should stand preeminently the most important, because American policy, in matters where foreign governments are concerned, demands a constant augmentation of an arm of our country's offense and defense, without which this great nation and its institutions would sooner or later become subservient to more powerful ones.

In discussing any naval bill it is interesting, likewise instructive, to examine the map of the world, note the geographical positions of the different countries that are prominent factors among the nations of the earth, then consider the fact that each maritime nation of the Old World maintains a naval fleet commensurate with its foreign interests. It is well to remember that nations, like individuals, vary in their customs, habits, and dispositions. Some are grasping and selfish, ready to take every advantage of time and opportunity for self-aggrandizement and power, to the detriment of the less vigilant or weaker nation. It can not be disputed that our country, being separated from the powerful nations of the Old World by vast oceans, has had a comparative immunity from foreign foes.

But the development of sciences in every field of human interest, together with new inventions, which have followed one another with wonderful rapidity, have revolutionized, among other things, the slow methods of communication and transportation by land or sea. Touch the electric button at London, Paris, Berlin, or St. Petersburg, and orders can be flashed under the sea for the rapid concentration of fleets in any given waters.

Ocean highways to-day have their steam fliers emulating the lightning express trains of our trunk lines; hence, the great distances between this country and the old nations of the world have been annihilated, and the immunity we once enjoyed is inverted, and we would be unable to-day to enforce any positive policy like the Monroe doctrine, not from the lack of patriotism, but from a continued lack of a reasonable interest in the development of our Navy.

Now, let us see what attention other nations have given to their navies while we have been moving along at a snail's pace.

Forest timber, that was always scarce in many of the old countries for shipbuilding, has been supplanted by iron, which is illimitable in the Old World. And since the adoption of iron and steel in shipbuilding foreign maritime nations have multiplied their naval fleets with astonishing rapidity, strengthening their respective national interests and policies in the same ratio, far outstripping our country in this direction, and leaving our Navy in about the fifth class. I ask if this is just to constituents who elected us to represent them in the National Legislature? With the march of time, population has increased throughout all nations, impelling a constant expansion of trade and commerce.

New lands have opened up with promising fields for trade and traffic, and others are being discovered every day, which stimulates the greed of nations for preferred rights and privileges. Treaty rights and international law are too often ignored, while the gains of a selfish nation are being prosecuted against the vested rights of a weaker one, as the frequent changes in the boundary lines of some countries bear evidence. Too much study can not be given to these conditions while measuring up the required strength of our Navy.

Until we commenced to build our modern battle ships our Navy was one of the weakest of maritime nations. Public interest took the matter up, which gave an impetus to rehabilitating the Navy and increasing it toward a standard commensurate with the demands of our great commercial interests. The result is that we can boast of having some of the most modern battle ships afloat—American in material, American in design, and American in mechanism.

The bosoms of American citizens swell with pardonable pride when reference is made to our modern war ships. But with all the growth of this marine arm of our country's service, our Navy is still numerically weak, particularly in armored cruisers, torpedo destroyers, and torpedo boats. The torpedo destroyer is a vessel that can go to sea in any kind of weather and steam 20 or 25 knots an hour without washing a man overboard, in the manner in which the young ensign, Mr. Breckinridge, lost his life from the deck of the torpedo boat Cushing off the harbor of Habana a short time ago.

Torpedo boats like the Cushing are not calculated to go outside of headlands except in a smooth sea. In the first place, they have very little free board and in their construction everything is sacrificed for speed; and with this end in view all the materials, such as frames, deck beams, and plating, are of the lightest kind consistent with safety in smooth water, where their trial trips are made and where they get a rating of 25 or 30 knots an hour. But take any of them outside in an ordinary sea, and I do not hesitate to say not one of them could make over 10 miles an hour, and then they would be like a half-tide rock, the sea breaking over them constantly.

The effective sphere of torpedo boats is at the mouth of our rivers, harbors, and bays. A torpedo destroyer or catcher is nothing more than a seagoing torpedo boat three or four times the tonnage of the ordinary torpedo boat, with this advantage: They are constructed with heavier material, greater free board, and carry a light battery, and if too much weight and material are not sacrificed for speed, they can go to sea in any kind of weather and steam well up to their maximum rate.

At this time I want to call the attention of the House to my estimate of the naval requirements during the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress. I was absolutely confident that our Navy was totally inefficient in torpedo boats and in torpedo-boat destroyers, and to strengthen the Navy in this direction I introduced a bill empowering the Secretary of the Navy to contract for and build fifty torpedo boats and five torpedo-boat destroyers.

Before introducing that bill, and to be assured that I was correct in my views, I consulted many of our most experienced naval officers, who heartily sustained my views; but neither the Naval Committee nor the House seemed to think it necessary to make the expenditure.

To assure you that I knew what I was talking about, and was familiar with the weak points of our Navy, I have only to state that this Government is searching the markets of the world to-day for torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers.

Thus far we have been able to purchase but one, a small 17-ton boat, which is about to be shipped on board of one of the Atlantic steamers for New York. Up to the present time our agents abroad have been unable to purchase a single torpedo-boat destroyer, and the result is that our Navy is without a single one to-day. Had my bill passed during the session it was introduced, we could have had the torpedo boats and the torpedo-boat destroyers in commission to-day. This matter I will leave to the House for digestion.

Now, one word about the usefulness of a torpedo boat. Its mission is to protect our bays, rivers, and harbors, and along our coasts, where it can run into some little bay, inlet, or small harbor, ready to run out at nighttime and discharge her projectile at an enemy and get away. A torpedo-boat destroyer accompanies the fleet and watches the approach of small torpedo boats, drives them back, and, if necessary, sends a torpedo after them—a sort of watchdog for the fleet. They are indispensable in time of war.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that the expenses of this Government have exceeded its income for several years. It is a well-known fact that the appropriations for several years past have gone beyond the lines of mercantile economy. But it makes no difference whether this nation has been prosperous or not, whether the Government's expenses have exceeded its income or not, the fact remains that we have the same interests to protect, the same lines of seacoast defense to guard, the same commercial interests to watch, and the same position in the family of nations to maintain. These functions can not be performed with a feeble navy. Besides, the numerical strength and the caliber of guns are potent factors in preserving peace and solving diplomatic questions.

The American people are peaceful—slow to wrath. The pastime of contest has no charm for them. But when the honor of their country or its institutions are threatened, the American becomes aroused and his patriotism breaks all peace bands, and every man becomes a combatant, ready not only to protect this great Republic of ours, but to punish its assailants. But he must have something to fight with. Are we not as a people inclined to be boastful? Stump declamation, telling the masses what a great country we have and what a noble people we are and what we can do, does not protect our interests, let alone win a victory.

Permit me to read an extract from Assistant Secretary Roosevelt's address before the Naval War College at Newport last June:

> Tame submission to foreign aggression of any kind is a mean and unworthy thing; but it is even meaner and more unworthy to bluster first, and then either submit or else refuse to make those preparations which can alone obviate the necessity for submission. I believe with all my heart in the Monroe doctrine, and I believe also that the great mass of the American people are loyal to it; but it is worse than idle to announce our adherence to this doctrine and yet to decline to take measures to show that ours is not mere lip loyalty. * * * If we possess an immense navy, small is the chance indeed that we shall ever be dragged into a war to uphold the Monroe doctrine. If we do not possess such a navy, war may be forced on us at any time.

If I remember correctly, the gentleman from Arkansas said in case of foreign trouble the loyal citizens of his Commonwealth would flock to our shores in defense of our institutions. No one doubts his statement; but that does not add a single ship to our Navy. Can we, unarmed, meet a foreign foe? Can we cope with a foreign nation without ship for ship, gun for gun? Whose duty is it, if not the duty of Congress, to watch the barometer of events and note when it indicates disturbances or foretells future possibilities?

It gave us a warning in the Chilean controversy a few years ago. Our Navy at that time was not powerful enough to guarantee success at the start. The Venezuelan boundary dispute was another warning, and the present strained relations with Spain over Cuban affairs is still another. We are not without warnings. Why, no later than last December two German training ships entered the harbor of Port au Prince and demanded the payment of $30,000 in gold from the Haitian Government; also an apology to the German Emperor for some alleged indignity to the German chargé d'affaires.

On a failure to comply with these terms inside of four hours, bombardment of the city would immediately take place. That was a condition of affairs which certainly circumscribed the possibility of an ultimate infringement upon the Monroe doctrine.

It seems to me after such warnings that it would be a crime against this great Republic if Congress failed to make every provision to protect American interests by rapidly increasing our war ships to a maximum that will make our fleets a menace to all nations that should attempt to impinge our American policy. The people demand this protection and are bitterly complaining from the want of foresight on the part of its past and present national legislators.

This country has not seen the end of war, nor of foreign disputes or international controversies. International peace conferences may resolve and resolve, and they may sing their panegyrical hymns of peace, yet, Mr. Chairman, the lion and lamb are not fraternizing, neither are swords being beaten into plowshares nor spears into pruning hooks, for just so long as there is a powerful nation on the one side, and a weak one on the other, disputes will arise, and the stronger will take advantage of the weaker. Such is the history of nations from the beginning of the world to the present day.

Why is it, Mr. Chairman, that this Republic, which was founded by intelligent, brave, heroic, and fighting stock (which qualities have been inherited by their descendants, who have, North and South, East and West, always demonstrated the courage of their convictions) is without a powerful navy, ready at a moment's notice to meet any emergency to sustain the American policy? Is it because Congresses forgot their responsibilities and wandered from the domain of American vigilance, the watchward of our fathers, and left the old ship of state swinging to her anchor without a watchman or lookout?

Is it not a fact that there has been too much politics in legislation—too many selfish interests centered in Congressional districts? I believe in politics, likewise in partisanship; but, above all, I believe in country first. The better American, the nobler partisan. It is true that every member of this House represents some district; but when a member takes his seat in the National Legislature, he represents, as a member of that great body, every foot of space within the boundary lines of the United States, and every act of his affects in some degree the common weal of the nation.

How often, under the cloak of public improvements, have vast sums of public moneys been wasted in useless improvements to perpetuate political careers?

Citizens who have followed the trend of national legislation will tell you that the public moneys which have been wasted in deepening unnavigable creeks and rivers would have gone far toward building and keeping up our Navy to its proper strength, power, and effectiveness.

While Congress should be more conservative in its appropriations, it can not, in the interests of the people of the United States, economize in appropriations for the maintenance of its Navy—the sheet anchor of our country. It watches over our institutions and resolutely defends every American policy enunciated and established since the Declaration of Independence. [Applause.]

No matter what political strifes we have, or whether the affairs of our Government are administered by a Republican or a Democratic Administration, the Navy never swerves from its line of duty, which is as fixed and true to this Republic as the needle is to the Pole.

The Navy makes no invidious distinctions between parties or sections. Its functions are absolutely American. Keep up our Navy, to the end that it may be equal to and ready for any emergency.

This means peace—peace with honor. [Applause.]

In closing, I will say that no matter what mistakes may have been made in the past, our duty is with the present; and permit me to say that no assemblage clothed with initiative power ever had within its reach a better opportunity to win the encomium of the people and illuminate the pages of history than the present Congress by inaugurating a new departure in its naval legislation on lines so liberal, patriotic, and American that all succeeding Congresses shall follow our precedent as the only safeguard to protect American policy. [Applause.]

Supplementing my remarks, I would suggest the establishment of a board of American admiralty, to consist of five naval officers of long and practical experience, whose duty it shall be to make recommendations to Congress, from time to time, through the Secretary of the Navy, for the perfection of our Navy and keeping it up to a proper standard, as recent developments have already demonstrated its total inadequacy in certain respects.

The Navy of the United States should be a modern one, thoroughly up to date in every particular, and Congress should have at all times in making appropriations the benefit of the views of the most enlightened naval authorities.

Had such a board been in existence during the past ten years

we would not be in foreign markets to-day buying war ships, and the keel of every torpedo boat, torpedo-boat destroyer, and war ship of our Navy would bear the imprint of an American hammer. [Applause.]

FEBRUARY, 1898.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER].

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, the provision for our Navy in this crisis of our history is of international importance and of universal interest, as it carries with it, as it should, extraordinary provisions and authority.

Standing as we do on an isthmus connecting the dead and unborn—the fathers of our liberty who have gone before us and the sons that are to come after us, in joy or sorrow—we should in this serious crisis pause and dedicate our hearts to our country, to humanity, and to liberty, and our minds to sacred, sober contemplations on our duty to ourselves, to the human family, and to that Being who stood by our fathers in the great day of their fiery trial and by whom we will be held accountable for the manner in which we shall direct and deliver the responsible trust which in His inscrutable wisdom has been imposed upon us.

Mr. Chairman, the brow of civilization at this hour of the world's history seems to be wrinkled with the frowns of war. Not an instant of time within four centuries can be recalled when the rumors of war so simultaneously and universally reverberated.

No great war in actual progress, but preparations for war everywhere. Japan has voted in preparation for war her yens, Russia her rubles, England her pounds sterling, the United States her dollars, and Spain has hawked her depreciated credit on every market to obtain the means and sinews of war.

There is war in Cuba, and we should have made this declaration of truth to the world long ago and had the powers of the earth to know and feel with absolute certainty that this country by inspiration, inheritance, and obligation is the ally, guardian, and protector of suffering humanity and liberty, certainly on this continent. There is preparation for war between this country and Spain. All Europe is growling at each other over a division of the Chinese spoils. Japan is rushing her military forces to her Pacific coast, England is fighting Mahdi in Central Africa and her rebelling tribes in North India. In South America Argentina is preparing for a conflict with Chile, and in Crete the conditions of Moslems and Christians are anything but quiet.

The spirit of apprehension and preparation covers and encircles the globe. And if these great powers, by design or complication, shall be drawn into active hostile engagements, with the modern improved destructive implements of warfare, no man can foretell the end, the result, or the consequences.

War is our business, but to whom is given
To die or triumph? That determine, Heaven.

The face of the whole civilized world may be changed.

All our accumulated and inherited wealth of letters, learning, history, science, ingenuity, genius, invention, discovery, progress, civilization, and light here and to the eternal shores may be lost or relegated to a dark age for centuries. Who can foresee, who can foretell? Or the very preparation and appearance of war may solve the great problems of the age, by emancipating nations and men from dependence upon and servitude to the sordid metals and making them more reliant upon their own credit and resources, relegating this relic of barbarism to the realm of commodities, and establishing an equitable basis of distribution for all human national and international transactions, and ushering in the twentieth century with the United States of the World formulated upon that sound and solemn and sacred compact which will be approved on earth and ratified in heaven?

"Nation shall lift no sword against nation. Neither shall they learn war any more."

When learning and art, and especially religion, shall weave ties that shall make war fratricide.

Mr. Chairman, under these conditions it may be statesmanship, consummate diplomacy, and wise patriotism and prophetic caution to prepare for the seeming conflict, with the reserved, patriotic, and Christian hope that the very preparation may avert war and command peace. Prepare wisely, abundantly, with deliberation for defense, yea for aggression, when involving suffering humanity on this continent or kindling the torches of liberty in Cuba, until her shores shall be a continuous circle of light, creating that beautiful circlet in the South Atlantic, that shall increase in size as it broadens, until it bears in the music of its waves this joyous news to every shore of civilization.

War, grim-visaged and destructive, is a relic of barbarism, and should be avoided, if possible, in the interest of Christian peace and civilization and their benign blessings. The brave, honorable Americans and the valuable sinews that we would have to employ and sacrifice in destructive war we need to husband and employ in fighting the battles of peace, whose victories are as renowned as those of war.

We need employ them to bring more comforts to American homes, in enlightening the minds, Christianizing the hearts, and bettering the condition of American masses. We need employ them in still further developing and enriching our already marvelously great country, in extending our commerce on land and sea, in constructing our great inland waterways, in building the Nicaragua Canal, connecting us with the Orient, and other great projects made possible by American genius and enterprise. Desirable as all of these may be and are, yet, if need be, we would make one and all of them a willing sacrifice upon the altar of starving humanity and liberty.

Mr. Chairman, it would seem in this day of light and Christian reason that all international differences could and should be arbitrated. If our quarrel, so just, as we know and feel it to be, was with any other nation in the world, we might indulge the hope for a peaceful settlement, giving adequate actual indemnity for the Maine, immediate and substantial relief to the starving Cubans and independence to Cuba upon just and honorable terms. But a history of the rise and fall of Spain, with her invariable record of cruelty, of persecution, of bigotry, of tyranny, of hostility to every sentiment of human freedom, common justice, and enlightenment, forbids us to indulge in the hope of this happy solution. The slavery to which Spain doomed its subjects in the Western Hemisphere was not more cruel than its oppression of the people of Holland or its tyranny over its own people at home.

After all, it may be Divine design and retributive justice that has brought this proud, tyrannical, long-sinning nation to judgment, to confront the Republic of liberty, equality, justice, and civilization, where the wage, the issue, is the triumph of justice, truth, liberty, humanity.

With the God of these attributes and the Father of nations to direct our councils in peace and our armies and navies in war, we should not, we do not, fear the result.

Mr. Chairman, I am a great believer in retributive justice and providential intervention where the welfare of the human family is involved.

I was born in a land cursed with a system of slavery, which was antagonistic to the spirit and letter of our Constitution and institutions; and when we refused to surrender it peacefully, in my early youth I witnessed it wiped away by an issue of fire and blood, and I have lived, although a personal sufferer, to thank God and to regard the result as a blessing in disguise, making our country stronger, richer, and more hopeful and happier.

I read that in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries oppressions fell upon and tyranny reigned over the people of Europe, and the oppressed fled from tyranny. They were providentially guided to a home and refuge then beyond the sunset. Their first work was to dedicate this country to God and liberty. They felled the forest and builded the country. The earth responded to their labors and the population multiplied.

But with the development of the country was also developed the sturdy spirit of independence, and when oppression came the spirit of '76 created the formal Declaration of Independence, to my mind and heart on the brightest day that ever beamed upon the moral world. This declaration and its emblem cheered the half-clad and half-fed heroes at Valley Forge, waved over the redoubts on Bunker Hill, floated from the masthead of the Bon Homme Richard, kissed the breezes of victory on the waters of Erie and Champlain, and waved in triumph over the army of Wellington on the immortal field of Chippewa, and Cornwallis at Yorktown, tearing liberty's ensign from the British lion.

We read in sacred history that when heavy oppression fell upon the children of Israel, when they were compelled "to make brick without straw," that a leader was raised up for them. They were given a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night. The sea was caused to open and they pass as upon dry land, and the waters to recede and destroy their pursuing oppressors. They were given a law of government from amid the lightnings of Sinai. When they were hungry the heavens issued bread, and when thirsty the rocks issued water. The same Providence, in his own time and way, cares for the starving Cubans. He has given this country to them as their promised land, and these people as their guardians, defenders, and protectors; and this has been brought about in a way that we would not shrink from the obligation and responsibility, if we could, and we could not, with respect, if we would.

Mr. Chairman, in this solemn, serious, and anxious moment the American in the White House should, as he does, command our unqualified sympathy, confidence, and approval. Divided as we may be politically, racially, or sectionally, at the water's edge we are one, and our unity is represented by that emblem; and our President and Commander-in-Chief—his policy shall be our policy, his settlement or action shall be ours also.

He has carried with him to prayer, to church, to private and official relation in life the secrets and responsibilities of the crisis. He has demeaned himself with Christian patience, fortitude, and consummate statesmanship, so as to receive the approval of his people and the respect and admiration of the civilized world. We can trust him to develop his own policy; that policy we are sure will be a humane, liberty-loving, broad American policy, such as all Christendom will applaud and approve.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD].

[Mr. FITZGERALD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 5865. An act to authorize the Monroe Railway and Construction Company to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Grand Ecore, La.; and

H. R. 1803. An act for the relief of Joseph P. Patton.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS, late a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the business of the Senate be now suspended, to enable his associates to pay proper tribute of regard to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect, the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

[Mr. KITCHIN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the bill now pending to maintain and increase the American Navy. The necessity for additional war ships is so obvious that argument becomes unnecessary. The barbarous character of the warfare waged by Spain in Cuba is no longer in dispute. The awful desolation and destruction of human life carried on there under Spanish rule are now no longer matters of contention. For months the American correspondents in Cuba have recited in our press the harrowing details of slaughter, rapine, starvation, and extermination inaugurated by Weyler, and so appalling is the story that the American people have been loath to believe it. But the statements of Senator PROCTOR, Senator GALLINGER, Senator THURSTON, and other eyewitnesses recently returned from the island fully vindicate the honor and veracity of the American press correspondents.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, language seems impotent to depict, much less to exaggerate, the cruelties perpetrated by Spain in her efforts to exterminate the Cuban population. The wholesale carnival of blood visited by the early Spanish Conquistadores upon the unresisting aborigines of the West Indies, Mexico, and Peru at the beginning of her sovereignty over America, the atrocities of the Duke of Alva in the Netherlands, the massacre of the Armenians by the Turks, and the scalping of helpless women and children by the Apaches do not surpass the recent crimes of Spain in Cuba. It is estimated that more than 400,000 Cubans have already perished by Spanish cruelty. I declared months ago that the United States should not longer hesitate to intervene in behalf of Cuba's freedom.

Every hour of delay only intensifies the sufferings and miseries of the hapless Cubans. The dictates of humanity and of civilization peremptorily forbid further delay. It can not be that this great country will much longer tolerate on the American continent Spanish atrocities like those of the Dark Ages. The time for action, for intervention, for interference, for swift and sudden cessation, has come. Sir, I believe the President will respond to the unanimous desire of the American people and go, with Congress and the nation, to the end, without halting or looking back. I am convinced that he desires to start aright. Surely he must be nearly ready for the march. It now seems that war is inevitable. Mr. Chairman, if it is necessary, let it come, and let it drive the cruel, treacherous Spaniard from the Western World. Whether the outcome of present conditions be war or peace, we should build up and strengthen the American Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. OSBORNE].

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, as a general proposition, I am opposed to discussing subjects not directly connected with the legislation we have under consideration; but the fact that misleading statements have been made upon this floor during the discussion of monetary legislation, statements which, in my opinion, ought not to be permitted to go to the country unanswered, and the further fact that they, under our rules, can be answered in no other manner, must be my excuse for craving the indulgence of the House at this time.

I listened, Mr. Chairman, to the speeches made by gentlemen on that side of the Chamber during the debate on the Teller resolution. I have more recently listened to the speech upon the financial question made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER], and I now want to say that in my hearing since I served as a member of this body there has not been an argument advanced offering a legitimate defense of the single gold standard. We have heard our great reform leader maliciously traduced; we have heard our cause abused; we have listened to unjustifiable predictions of dreadful impending calamities that will befall us after silver is remonetized; but I have not heard a single argument based on defensible premises; not an argument backed up by historical deductions or logical reasoning.

Right in this connection, Mr. Chairman, I want to remark that any cause which must be upheld by ridiculous untruths or by mystifying half-truths can but prove a menace to the liberties of the people, and on general principles, without further argument, merits the stamp of their righteous condemnation. We have been told repeatedly that the conservative people of this country do not want to experiment with any new financial system during these critical times, a statement which naturally conveys the idea that bimetallism is something new, is an experiment. We deny this allegation.

Bimetallism has been thoroughly tried and has never failed to keep this body politic sound in wind and limb. It was in use away back in our colonial days. It was established as the American financial system in 1792, shortly after the declaration of our independence as a nation. It remained in continuous use and served us faithfully until stolen from us by the dastardly conspiracy of 1873. It was while silver and gold were recognized as our money of ultimate redemption, money endowed with full debt-paying capacity, that we laid the foundation for and erected here the grandest nation on earth.

We during that period created wealth which was justly distributed amounting to enough to buy the countries of Russia, Turkey, Egypt, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, South Africa, Australia, and all of South America, with their lands, palaces, factories, mines, ships, flocks, jewels, crowns, money, all of their wealth of every description, wealth that had been accumulating for centuries, while our country was comparatively new. We then, Mr. Chairman, were a bold, a fearless, a proud leader of nations, not as to-day a stumbling follower, not an humble supplicant for permission to legislate for ourselves.

We coined and issued all of our own money, and every dollar of that money was worth a hundred cents. It was all sound, all honest, and yet we did not find it necessary to keep a reserve fund of $100,000,000 in the Treasury as a guaranty that our debts would be paid. The honor, the integrity, the enterprise, and patriotism of the American people were a sufficient guaranty that we would meet all just demands, as they ought to be now. We had in those days neither 50-cent silver dollars nor 200-cent gold dollars. Our dollars were all at a parity; each was at a parity with the other, and, above all, the products of toil were at a parity with them. We not only had honest dollars, but we had honest pounds of cotton, honest bushels of wheat, and honest days labor. We had neither idle men nor idle money; they were both employed earning fair compensation.

We are told, however, that the nation has more wealth to-day than it had in 1873. True; but who to-day owns the wealth of this nation? Under your system of confiscation a large portion of the earnings of the masses has been misappropriated by the few. Four per cent of our people have been permitted under this system to absorb more than 80 per cent of the nation's entire wealth. In the States of New York and Massachusetts, where the greatest wealth is concentrated, we find existing the greatest proportion of poverty. In these States, around which an insurmountable wall of protective tariff has been erected, one-third of the support of families falls upon helpless women and children, who ought to be at home by the fireside. They have been driven into the factory and sweat shops because husbands, fathers, and brothers can not earn enough to provide food and raiment for those dependent upon them.

Never was humanity so cold and hungry, never were so many out of employment, as at the present time. The concentration of wealth, Mr. Chairman, in the hands of a few individuals does not mean universal prosperity. Prosperity depends not upon the accumulation of wealth, but upon its just distribution, and such prosperity as has been forced upon a few favored individuals by vicious legislation means distress and poverty among the actual producers of that prosperity. So we say the history of events warrants us in making the assertion that it is not the experiment we are advocating; we are merely warning you against the continuance of your experiment, which has brought so much suffering to humanity. We demand, not an experimental financial system, but that old-fashioned, that tried and true, that constitutional financial system which was recommended by Jefferson, approved by Washington, and subsequently indorsed by Jackson, Lincoln, and Blaine, true patriots, who to-day, if they were among us, would, in all probabilty, be termed anarchists and repudiators.

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks if there has ever been an international agreement, or if there is any hope of an international agreement. In answer to the gentleman we say there has never been an international agreement; there is not the slightest hope of an international agreement; there has never been the remotest necessity for an international agreement, and we do not care whether there ever is an international agreement. We have managed to get along very nicely without an international agreement.

Before the resumption of specie payment, when we had neither gold nor silver in circulation, we had no trouble in settling our trade balances with foreign countries and in retaining their confidence. During that time our growth in wealth, in population, and in commercial importance was without a parallel in history. Just think of it. This great nation, with its industrious and enterprising people, a nation whose productive capacity of all the world needs is only limited by what the world demands of us, a nation which Gladstone tells us has the foundation for the greatest continuous empire ever established by man, a nation which we were told by General Grant could support 500,000,000 of people, and yet to-day, with but 70,000,000 of people, 10,000,000 of them are suffering for the actual necessities of life.

A nation whose internal commerce even now during these critical times exceeds the foreign commerce of all the world, a nation whose commerce is one-third of the commerce of the entire world, a nation whose internal commerce is 96 per cent of our entire commerce, leaving but 4 per cent of our trade with foreign countries—and yet for the sake of this 4 per cent, this mere bagatelle, the greater portion of which will come to us anyway, they tell us that we must wait until England and other foreign countries will permit us to legislate for ourselves.

We contend, Mr. Chairman, that it is not necessary to ask the consent of England. We contend that it is extremely unwise to ask the advice of foreigners who are not in sympathy with our American institutions upon matters pertaining to the welfare of the American people. England, a creditor nation, will never give her consent. She has always favored scarce and dear money, and when I say this I do not refer to industrial England, I refer to bondholding England.

If the industrial masses of England could to-day vote on this question, they, by an overwhelming majority, would vote in favor of the double standard, the double measure of values. But bondholding England, the few who own the dollars, want those dollars scarce; they want dear dollars, realizing that dear dollars mean the ruination of American producers. Why, away back more than one hundred years ago, this same class of money sharks paralyzed the commerce of our American colonies by commanding that no more paper bills be issued, and then destroyed the legal-tender function of those in existence.

They again at one time by counterfeiting our colonial currency endeavored to so weaken confidence in it as to produce a disastrous contraction. But in 1783 it was generally presumed throughout the world that our independence, both financial and political, was established for all time to come through the valorous deeds of an American ancestry. We since that time have been boasting of our independence, of the freedom we enjoy under this republican form of government, of our fortunate escape from British bondage, little dreaming that in an unguarded moment our old enemy, taking advantage of our inexperience in crafty legislation, had, through her Benedict Arnolds on this side of the Atlantic, again drawn us within her relentless grasp by destroying one-half of our debt-paying money.

The British bondholder did not dare to openly advocate an enlargement of our debts or a system of confiscation which would cut in half the prices of our farm products, realizing that such a bold maneuver would in all probability arouse again the spirit of 1776, but by a little legislative legerdemain she, through her pliant tools on this side, accomplished the identical object by depriving us of one-half of the money which we are obliged to pay our debts with. We repeat England, a creditor nation, has always favored dear money, and ours, a debtor nation, should, for self-preservation if for no other reason, oppose her selfish policy.

We are the most deeply interested in maintaining an honest dollar, because in the development of this new country—and our development has but begun—an enormous debt has been created, payable in honest dollars. And what is an honest dollar? Our definition of an honest dollar is a dollar that costs no more to buy, a dollar that measures no more of the products of toil, than the dollar originally borrowed. We are willing to pay in this kind of dollars. We are willing to pay in honest dollars. We are willing to pay in 100-cent dollars; but we protest against paying in dishonest dollars, in dollars made dishonest by unconstitutional laws, and in taking this position we are not advocating repudiation, as is charged. We are merely condemning confiscation.

If we are an independent people, as we boast, let us stop paying unjust tribute to those who would destroy our independence. Let us wipe from our statute books those unconstitutional laws which are obstructing our development as a nation, laws which are despoiling our producing masses to enrich the idle classes, laws which are throttling the very existence of American manhood. Let us follow the advice given by that illustrious American, James G. Blaine, who said:

> I consider gold and silver the money of the Constitution—indeed, the money of the American people anterior to the Constitution. The responsibility of restoring silver to its ancient and honorable place devolves on the Congress of the United States. If we act here with firmness, the influence of our example will be potential with other countries.

And what further did Mr. Blaine say? Did he advise us to beg England for permission to legislate for ourselves? Did he advise us to send Wolcott commissions abroad to prostitute the dignity of American manhood for the amusement of foreign scoffers? No. That illustrious American, James G. Blaine, further advised that we "make Europe recognize American silver by first remonetizing it ourselves."

Gentlemen insist that the idea of remonetizing silver is but the flitting dream of a few deluded cranks who want silver to advance in value because the Western mine owners will thereby be benefited. And then, with almost the same breath, they proceed to tell us that value can not be legislated into money. There was scarcely a leader on the other side of the Chamber who, during the debate on the Teller resolution, did not insist that we can not legislate value into money, that the bullion value of the silver in a dollar is 50 cents, that this is the intrinsic value of the silver, and that we can not legislate any more value into it. Now, if we can not legislate value into money, the remonetization of silver will not cause silver to advance in value, and all this talk about the fabulous fortunes which are to accrue to the imaginary silver miners' trust is without foundation.

We know, however, Mr. Chairman, that we can legislate value into money. We know that money has no value except by legislation; that the remonetization of silver will cause it to advance to $1.29 per ounce; that as soon as it is remonetized one ounce of silver will be worth one-sixteenth of an ounce of gold. We judge the future by what the history of the past has clearly demonstrated. We want it to advance, not because it will benefit the mine owners, but because it will benefit 99 per cent of the American people.

To be sure, the mine owners, in common with others, will be benefited, but this is a matter of minor importance. Fifty per cent added to the value of our silver output will increase the mine-owners' income but about $35,000,000 a year, while 50 per cent added to the value of our wheat and cotton crops will increase the farmers' income on these two products alone not less than $200,000,000 a year.

If the gold worshipers are jealous of our Western mine owners, they can go out West and compete with them.

The privilege of prospecting and mining in the Western country is not monopolized by a close corporation as is the case with some of the leading industries in the East. But do you know, sirs, that in the State of Colorado, our greatest silver-producing State, and our greatest gold-producing State, too, by the way—I say do you know that in the State of Colorado the value of her farm products is double and the value of her factory products is more than quadruple the value of her entire silver output? While if silver had never been demonetized the mine owners would have realized during the last thirty-five years something like $270,000,000 more than they have realized, during the same time the cotton planters would have realized not less than $2,000,000,000 more and the wheat grower not less than $3,500,000,000 more than they have realized.

Without itemizing the greatly increased profits which would have accrued on other products of the farm, I feel justified in stating, after a careful study of the most reliable statistics to be obtained on this subject, that the loss sustained on farm products alone during the last thirty-five years, while the price of the dollar has been steadily appreciating and the price of all commodities steadily depreciating, reaches the enormous sum of $35,000,000,000. One billion dollars a year has been lost by this system of contraction. One billion dollars a year means about $3,000,000 a day. That is more than it cost on both sides to conduct the late civil war. Just think of it! A greater continuous drain on the American farmer, day after day, year after year, decade after decade, than that occasioned during the five years of that dreadful civil war.

Why, this loss is more than double your entire tariff-revenue receipts, your internal-revenue receipts, and your miscellaneous Treasury receipts combined. Yet we are told that other questions are more important, that we must leave this British financial legislation upon our statute books until haughty England and a few poor deluded American anglomaniacs kindly condescend to let free Americans legislate for themselves.

The cause of this almost incomprehensible loss is finally attributed by our friends on the other side to overproduction of commodities. And yet statistics prove that from 1853 to 1873 the world's annual increase in the production of all commodities was 2.8 per cent, and yet prices advanced during that period 20 per cent. From 1873 to 1893, the succeeding period of twenty years after the demonetization of silver, the world's annual increase in the production of all commodities was but 1.6 per cent, and yet prices fell during the latter period 32 per cent, and are now, as we all know to our sorrow, with but one or two abnormal exceptions, lower than ever before since the discovery of this continent.

No, Mr. Chairman, it is not overproduction of commodities; it is underproduction of money which prevents a proper distribution, and hence a normal consumption of the commodities we are producing. There can be no overproduction of breadstuffs or wearing apparel while the masses are cold and hungry. In 1873 the American people were consuming about 6 bushels of wheat per capita, and they were paying $1.30 a bushel for wheat. In 1895, they were consuming but a little more than 3 bushels of wheat per capita, and yet wheat had fallen to 67 cents a bushel. Now, it is fair to presume that our people needed as much bread in 1895 as they did in 1873, but they could not earn the money to buy the bread they actually needed, notwithstanding the fact that wheat had fallen almost 50 per cent in value.

Your falling prices have curtailed the field for employment. The farmer and the laboring man can not earn the money with which to buy of the country merchant. The country merchant can not buy of the jobber, the jobber can not place his orders with the manufacturer. The factory closes, and then goes up the cry, "Vote for a higher tariff in order that our factories and mills may once more be opened. It is more necessary to open our factories and our mills than it is to open our mints." You heard that in the last campaign, and, strange as it may seem, a great many farmers, producers, and laboring men are still voting that old ticket; still voting for a higher tariff; still permitting themselves to be drawn deeper and deeper into the meshes of this relentless money power by that siren cry.

They seem to forget that it is not more taxation and less money they need, but less taxation and more money. Why, my friends, if overproduction is the cause of falling prices, what remedy are you going to offer? How will you stop prices from falling if overproduction is the cause? Will you stop producing? Will you close your factories and stop cultivating the farm, and thus reenforce the great army of American tramps by thousands and thousands of new recruits taken from the ranks of honest toil?

No, Mr. Chairman, neither the perpetuation of the present vicious system of taxation, which has added steadily to the tax on consumption until the industrial masses, owning but one-tenth of this nation's property, are obliged to pay nine-tenths of the nation's taxes, nor your bankers' monetary system can blow up from this vast expanse of distress and impoverishment that great tidal wave of prosperity for which you are so anxiously longing. I will tell you what it is doing. It is arousing a vast tidal wave of public indignation which will in the not far distant future sweep you and your trust-breeding laws out of existence. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in the control of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Inasmuch as the two gentlemen who were to have the remainder of the time on this side are absent, I of course have no objection to granting the gentleman's request.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming is extended five minutes.

Mr. OSBORNE. I read again from the speech of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER]:

> Free-silver men have been active and persistent, going up and down the land enforcing their views, printing pages of speeches in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and mailing them free of cost throughout the country. Their campaign has been continuous. Defeat did not stop them, and delayed hopes do not discourage them.

Now, if we must apologize to the gentleman for being active, I want to say to him that we still have confidence in the patriotism of the American people. We believe the American people want to do right. We believe the American people will do right when they ascertain in which direction the finger of justice beckons them. The strength of our cause is the justice of our cause, and we have but to educate the people upon this great economic question in order to have them behind us in our fight.

We are active, we are persistent, and we have met nothing to discourage us in the work. In the preliminary skirmish of 1896 our dauntless leader polled six and one-half million votes. He polled more votes than had ever before in the history of this nation been cast for the Presidential candidate of any political party, and that splendid result was achieved notwithstanding the fact that the wealth of two continents was poured in here to deprive American citizens of their constitutional right to cast a free and untrammeled ballot. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

To be sure, we met with a temporary defeat in that contest, but that defeat only served—let me sound the warning—it only served to more thoroughly amalgamate the conscientious reform forces of all the reform political parties. Let me say to the gentleman further that we are to-day more closely united than ever, and we have registered a vow never to cease our efforts in this good work until the wrongs of the common people are righted. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We won a victory in that campaign, for we, in the city of Chicago, after one of the fiercest struggles ever recorded in the history of American politics, rescued the standard of Democracy from the hands of the traitorous leaders who had so basely prostituted the sacred trust reposed in them, and to-day, thank God, consecrated anew to the principles so fearlessly upheld by Jefferson, Democracy still lives to bless mankind. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We made the issue in that contest, and that was a victory. We inscribed upon our banner a platform recommending the enlargement of our primary money, protesting against placing the burden of taxation upon the shoulders of those least able to bear it—a platform in spirit reiterating the words of warning uttered by Daniel Webster:

> The liberties of the people can not long endure in a country where the tendency is to concentrate wealth in the hands of the few.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, as that was our platform in 1896, it is still our platform, and will continue to be our platform until there is once more restored to this country a government for and by those governed.

We not only have our platform framed ready for you to criticise, but the American people have already nominated a candidate for the Presidency upon that platform, one who when elected will fulfill its every pledge. Continue to heap your abuse upon him, if you will, but that abuse only tends to magnify his unsullied Americanism. He stands before the American people possessing the statesmanship of a Jefferson, the courage of a Jackson, the eloquence of a Webster, yet with all the gentleness and honesty of an Abraham Lincoln. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The day is coming, it is not far distant, my friends, when all true Americans of every political creed, of every class, and of every section will unite in thanking God that there has been raised from the common people a William J. Bryan to bless the common people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE GRAFFENREID].

[Mr. DE GRAFFENREID addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I had promised the remainder of the time apportioned to this side to two gentlemen who are not present. I therefore yield the remainder of the time that I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] yields the balance of his time.

And then, on motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 9378) and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8618. An act for the relief of the sufferers by the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine in the harbor of Habana, Cuba.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BRUMM, until Monday evening, on account of important business.

To Mr. HICKS, for ten days, on account of important business.
